"The Scandal Mongers" (Lubin), October 23.—This very dramatic tragedy has a heart interest that held the audience very closely. The situation is created at a girls' boarding school and is carried to its climax in the home village. There were two girls from the village in the school. One was jealous of the other's popularity and contrived to have her expelled "for theft," then brought the news home to the scandal mongers of the village. She digs a very deep pit for herself and then falls in it. She makes a public confession. It is simply acted and effectively conducted. The happy ending, that is the very happy ending after the heroine's exoneration, the proposal of the young minister and the "bless you, children, at the gate," is perhaps weak. The reviewer sat in the balcony. The people around him watched the picture very intently till that end, and that they guyed. Yet, perhaps they liked it, nevertheless. It isn't, strictly speaking, a part of the story, and it is made a part of nearly every story.

"Coals of Fire" (Selig), October 23.—The photographs of this picture were thin and a bit misty, but not enough so to hide the prettiness of the scenery. The story takes place in a frontier, mountain settlement and features Herbert Bostworth in the character of a brutal trapper. A young backwoodsman scholar is used as a foil to this handsome ruffian. The student is in love with a girl, but the trapper thrusts himself between them. The student goes away and becomes a lawyer. The trapper marries the girl, but ill-treats her. In after years the lawyer saves the trapper from being unjustly hanged, thereby heaping coals of fire on his head. The story has some freshness and is interesting.

"A Prisoner in Mexico" (Kalem), October 23.—A very romantic adventure during the recent disturbances in Mexico. Both the hero and the heroine of the picture are Americans. The man is an Insurrecto and captain of the "American Legion," a troop of adventurous horsemen. The story tells how both he and his old sweetheart happened to be in the hands of the Mexican Federals. The girl helps the man to escape from his prison. In the pursuit, over the nearby hills, the two are nearly retaken, but are saved. The "leader" reads: "The American Legion to the Rescue." It is not a very ably designed picture, but it is not dull. The audience watched it in silence, but it seemed to be following it, which isn't done always when conventional "Westerns" are on the screen.

"Through His Wife's Picture" (Biograph), October 23.—A twist given to the screen-worn masquerade ball picture makes this story the vehicle for a little fresh fun. When a married man has promised an old sweetheart to take her to the masquerade ball and has written home to his wife that he will be detained in the office till very late, and has also mailed to the girl a description of his costume and the letters have been mixed up, to have him back out and send a friend at the last minute because he gets a glimpse of his wife's picture, is not powerfully convincing. This, and the fact that he had to sit up for his wife who had gone to the ball to get revenge, are the only fresh parts of the picture. The picture is pleasingly acted. It seemed to be amusing.

"The Inventor's Secret" (Biograph), October 23.—A comic picture in which an Irish maid takes an automatic doll for a "missing girl" and notifies the police. Two children in front of the reviewer nearly climbed over the seats in front of them, due to excitement while watching the picture. The whole audience seemed to find the picture amusing.

"A Puritan Courtship" (Pathe), October 21.—With no real humor and with little true humanity, this picture of an early New England courtship irritatingly travesties Puritanism and its characteristics. It shows the Puritans as bigoted, which they were, and it shows them as ridiculous, which they were not. Their bigotry they shared with many other people of that time. The hero of the picture, Carlos, was a stranger and was a physician of skill. He cured the heroine without blood-letting, which the Puritan doctor prescribed. This Puritan doctor, as pictured, looks like a Phoenician priest of Moloch. The girl at once falls in love with the Catholic stranger. The time was just at the end of the witchcraft prosecutions, and the sorcery laws of the colony are brought into play to get rid of the suspicious Carlos. He is saved. at the stake, by Gov. Winthrop's decree. The producer shows himself entirely out of sympathy with the aims and ideals of the early New England colonists, and perhaps he should not have attempted to picture life among them, for it is true, as Turgenief makes "Dimitri Roudine" say, "Only those who love can justly criticise." The picture has some pretty scenes, but it can hardly fail to be distasteful to a large percentage of those who will see it, for pictures contrasting religious sects are not popular with either the one side or the wiser element of the other, here in America to-day. Let us keep religious politics out of the pictures.

"Wig Wag" (Vitagraph), October 24.—A boy scout picture with an educative purpose, it is addressed to nervous and over-careful mothers of boys. There are not a few loving mothers whose love is like too much candy and keeps their children from growing into strong and healthy men. The mother of this story (Florence Turner) was so afraid her little boy (Kenneth Casey) would get his feet wet that the poor chap didn't know how to take care of himself when he fell in the water. Some boy scouts encamped on the hillside wig-wagged a signal to their comrades on the shore of a lake ("Glimmer Glass," near Cooperstown, N. Y.) that the boy was in danger and they jumped in and saved him. Meanwhile, the fond mother was distracted on the dock. Miss Turner's emotional facial expression gives a deep heart-interest to the scene. After the scouts have resusticated him, he is permitted to join the organization, and shows himself as good-tempered and as manly as any of them. It's a fine picture.

"Why the Sheriff Is a Bachelor" (Selig), October 24.—The sheriff in his struggle between love and his duty chose duty; that was why he is still a bachelor. Or we might put it this way, Fate made the sheriff fall in love with a girl whose brother was a bad egg; the sheriff was called upon to take bad brother up, and afterward sister walked right past the sheriff as though he was only a chair. She left him to give his shield another polishing. Anyway, the sheriff got a reward. Rosenberg, the bank owner, for whom he got the stolen money back, gave him a good cigar. And according to Kipling, a woman is only a woman, but a good cigar is a smoke. It isn't a slow picture. The people watched it closely and the end seemed to amuse them much.

"A Day at West Point Military Academy" (Edison), October 24.—American audiences everywhere will be glad to see this very interesting picture of a day's doings at the "Point." It also gives a view of Admiral Togo, the Japanese hero, reviewing the corps.

"The Tricked Trickster" (Essanay), October 24.—There is very little that is new in this domestic farce-comedy. The wife is sharp-tongued and won't let hubbie smoke his pipe. From the club he sends a telegram to her that he is dead. His club friends send him a telegram, as from his wife, giving instructions for a cheap burial as she is going to marry the iceman. Some laughed at it. Five young men were behind the reviewer, and one asked, "Why do they make that kind of picture?"

"The Family Pet's Revenge" (Essanay), October 24.—The pet was a white bull pup which the married couple left to guard the house while they went to the theater. His revenge was to tear the curtains from the windows and to knock over the bric-a-brac. He also showed himself a very clever pup. The men behind the reviewer seemed amused. One said, "Say, de movin' picture companies don't care how they break statues." "Ah—e," replied one, "you bet they get the money back."

The military aviators at College Park, Washington, D. C., have been experimenting with motion pictures recently. They have taken pictures when in rapid flight which show very clearly the surrounding country over which they flew. The films were submitted to the commander-in-chief, who readily agreed that the idea will prove of importance during war.

Independent.

"His Better Self" (Solax), October 20.—A picture of military life telling a simple, naturally acted story, not wildly exciting but never losing its interest and significance. It utilizes a train of circumstances in and about the officers' quarters of a cavalry regiment, the 15th U. S., to show how a careless officer was brought to play the man and exhibit his better nature. Everything in it has the stamp of thought and of common sense. It is a good picture throughout.

"Foolshead Wishes to Break with His Sweetheart" (Itala), October 21.—Poor Foolshead was betrothed to a lovely girl and his old sweetheart, of the grand opera, was an embarrassment. It should have been named "Foolshead Wants to Be Off with the Old Love." It's as funny as anything this clever actor ever did, and made much laughter.

"Vicissitudes of Fate" (Great Northern), October 28.—The most interesting quality of this film is a Danish atmosphere that keeps it from seeming trite. A good story may be told a hundred times and if each time it is told truthfully by different players and in different settings it will be always interesting and fresh. In this story, the young clerk loves his employer's daughter. The wind blows some papers from his desk under a piece of furniture and he is discharged. The story tells how the lad went away in disgrace, made good in America, and returned home just as the papers were discovered. It is a very fair picture.

"The Breach of Faith" (Rex), October 26.—The players in this sensational picture of Italian passion and vengeance were well chosen and present the three leading parts with much skill. The picture is one that will hold attention under usual conditions, although exciting as it is, it might have been made a bit speedier. It seems to drag a bit at times, perhaps due to the fact that, being a melodrama along conventional lines, the mind can too readily and too surely foresee the outcome. The acting and the settings of the picture are very meritorious. It tells of two brothers who had come to America. The younger, a sculptor, got a position in the West, and his brother promised to look after Dema, the sweetheart who was expected on a ship. The girl comes and the older brother falls in love with her, lies to her and keeps her from hearing from her lover. She marries him and he is not true to her. The other brother, in despair, comes back and the whole business is uncovered. There's a stiletto fight in the dark restaurant.

"The Test of a Man" (Reliance), October 28.—This picture tells a very dramatic story clearly. The idea that it springs from is not new, but it is worked out with a good deal of freshness and some depth. The youth whom the heroine really loves is a drunkard and so she accepts his rival. Later, this man is caught in an attempted theft and kills the watchman, who is trying to disarm him. The rejected rival takes the blame, goes to prison and, in time, escapes. The other is overcome by remorse and confesses. In his attempt to find the other man, he falls dead. This brings the widow and her former sweetheart together. It is not a very vital picture, however, but it gives a chance for acting.

"The Empty Crib" (Reliance), October 25.—A picture of sentiment and of sorrow turned to joy in the end. It is printed in sharply contrasted black and white tones. These are very effective in some of its scenes, such as the doctor's visit to the rich home, where there is somber dignity, and also they are not out of place in the kitchen scene, where the child's surroundings are in keeping with a gloomy outlook; but they are a bit hard. Children seldom get such an impression of the world as they suggest, and to use them in scenes such as that at the orphanage and at the grave of the child's mother, after she has run away from the hard woman, seems to give to the picture more than its due of sadness. The story is effectively pictured and could have stood a bit of brightening in several places. The kind-hearted woman came to the orphanage to adopt a child a minute or so too late to get the little girl, whom the hard-faced woman had just taken. The child runs away from the hard woman and the kind woman's husband finds her. The picture is carefully designed and commendably acted. It is worthy.

"Percy and His Squaw" (Solax), October 25.—A burlesque on the usual motion picture of Western, Indian-cowboy romances. It has the "hearts broken" episode in the East; the trip out West; the squaw marriage, and all the trimmings. There is some fun in it, but no one in the audience laughed very loud.

"Bertie and His Rivals" (Lux), October 27.—Bertie got the girl in spite of all his two rivals could do. The scene of this burlesque is at a dance at the girl's house. The audience chuckled at the preposterous doings. There was no hearty laughter, but the picture is not what one would call slow.

"Bill, His Wife, and the Water" (Lux), October 27.—Some few days ago Bill had a pretty thorough bath. In this picture he is shown as needing water. His wife sends him out for it. He has little luck in Paris, but he takes a train to the seaport Dieppe and manages to fill his cans. It isn't very speedy, but it made a few laughs.

"Mutt and Jeff Discover a Wonderful Remedy" (Nestor), October 28.—Mutt and Jeff discovered a magic cure. They use an electric machine and by accident turn on too much energy. It isn't so funny as others of their series have been.

"Dippy Advertises for a Pup" (Nestor), October 28.—A farce, made up of the strange encounters of a clownish owner of a little dog that the S. P. C. A. men picked up from almost under his nose. The audience laughed at it.

"Lone Bill's Last Ride" (Nestor), October 25.—Lone Bill was an outlaw. The picture is a conventional Western, with this outlaw as its central point of interest. The background is a forest in which Lone Bill, attempting to hold up the stage, falls into a trap and is captured, after a chase in which much powder is burnt. By a ruse, he gets the drop on the sheriff and rides off on his horse. But a wound he has received, causes him to lose consciousness. He drops over the horse's neck and the horse, unguided, takes him home, that is to the sheriff's. Before he dies, he is shown as converted. The audience paid close attention to it and seemed very much interested.

"Salambo" (Ambrosio), October 25.—Floubert's historical novel furnished the scenario for this picture of Carthage just before the city was destroyed by Rome. The heroine of the story is the princess, Salambo, priestess of Tenit, and its hero is Macar, a rude northern king, general of the mercenaries, who were employed as protection against Rome. Macar and his brethren were feared by the city. The story deals with the passionate love of this man and woman. Macar, to be near Salambo, profanes the temple of Tenit, the goddess of the Moon, and to keep from being apprehended, snatches the sacred white veil, representing moonlight, from the arms of the image. He is caught later, when he had given the veil back to Salambo and she, as priestess, is compelled to light the fire that will burn him at the stake. She applies the torch, then kills herself. Far weaker stories than this have been called "gripping." The settings, acting and photography of this picture are wonderful. Artistically it is one of the strongest pictures that has been released this season.

"The Jewels of Allah" (Thanhouser), October 27.—This picture fails to give much illusion of real happenings. The early scenes, the mosque where the jewels were kept, their capture by the Frenchman, and the desert scenes, are cheap-looking and artificial. The sheik who had charge of the gems swears to recover them, and he follows the count to England. This French count is to be married to an English girl, who really loves another man. The sheik, in getting the jewels back, discredits the count and reunites the true lovers. It is not a dull picture so much as a very unconvincing one.

"The Revenue Officer's Last Case" (Powers), October 28.—The revenue man was in love with the moonshiner's sister. He was shot; the girl found him and he recovered. She also found that he was a revenue man. He "gets" the men he is looking for, moonshiners, including the girl's brother, and then, at her plea, lets them go, resigning his job in the revenue service. It makes an interesting story. The photographs seem hard, without enough of those softer tones that come between black and white, and without much detail.

"Little Brown Calf" (Powers), October 24.—A very pleasant little story of a child who lived on a farm and her pet, the brown calf. The girl's father was going to give the calf up to one of his creditors; but her efforts to save her pet moved the creditor's heart and he made her a present of it. The picture is largely poetry and very dainty.

"John Baxter's Ward" (Powers), Oct. 24.—Baxter's ward was a Western girl, just back from school in the East. The boys knew she was coming and they brought Baxter presents. She soon eloped with the best-looking man in the bunch. It is short, but amusing.

"An Indian Hero" (Bison), October 27.—No Bison picture in a long time has been so poor in photoplay as this. The charm of Bison Indian scenes is wanting. The story of the capture of a little white girl by Indians and of her rescue by a half-breed, who had been befriended by the child's parents, is well told and has considerable merit, but the faces are not clear.

"A Flower of the Forest" (Yankee), October 27.—There isn't very much illusion of real emotions in this story of a gypsy man's vengeance and a gypsy girl's love. Cap. Laverock drove a gypsy poacher from his land, but later fell in love with a very pretty young woman of the band, whom he called his "forest flower." The progress of this love match to its happy ending furnishes what is interesting in the picture. The film has some lovely scenes, but is too much drawn out.

"The Drummer Boy of Shiloh" (Yankee), October 23.—The object of this picture was to present a battle. There is a story in it, but it is slight. A large number of actors were employed to give thrill to the big battle scene and the effect suggests that they were well trained in their parts; the result is a remarkable success. In many of the scenes, Yankee photography is noticeable for its absence. The picture was fairly well designed, though the active parts of the later scenes merely serve as a background for the story told by "leaders" and, as poetry, these leaders are very weak. It is an acceptable picture.

"The Waif" (Imp), October 26.—The waif was a boy, selling early morning papers, sleeping in the lumber yards. He was taken up by a policeman, who found him sick, and he was sent along with the youngsters on a fresh air trip to the country. We were shown in the early scenes that he was the grandson of a farmer, who had disowned his daughter because she had married the boy's father, an artist. The boy's grandfather lives near the fresh-air fund home and, catching the boy stealing apples, wounds him with a stone. He finds that the boy is his grandson. It wakens old memories. The acting of the lad is very commendable and the story is quite worth while.

"A Biting Business" (Imp), October 23.—The poor clerk half-starved himself and his family to buy a lot at Sea View, only to find that it was a swamp. But it chanced that a rich neighbor was annoyed by the mosquitoes, and determines to buy it. The old man is shrewd, and after bargaining, he sells the pond for five thousand dollars. The plot is slight, but very interesting. It has the qualities of popular films.

"Youth, Queen of Hearts" (Eclair), October 23.—A delicate farce-comedy, in which, among romantic settings, a courtship story is told. It is a gem of its kind and full of those subtle allusions so dear to the artistic Gallic temperament. The pretty "Queen of Hearts" was a young widow and until the dashing officer came, had three middle-aged cavaliers in more or less constant, though sometimes rather sleepy, attendance. These three, though rivals, are friends and after the military man's appearance console themselves together. It is a very pretty, very likable picture.

"Percy Gets Tired of the Theater" (Eclair), October 23.—This farce, on the same reel with "Youth, Queen of Hearts," is more on the rough and spatter order. It relates what happened when Percy and his young wife tried to get ready for the opera in a hurry. It is amusing.

"The Law or the Lady" (Champion), October 25.—The lady's lover was elected sheriff and her father wishes him good luck. The stage is robbed and the sheriff is looking for "Black Robert." The lady's father gives jewelry to her and suspiciously leaves for "some time" on "business." The stage is held up again and the sheriff follows the bandit's trail alone. He finds that the bandit is the girl's father. It is law or lady, yet he arrests the man, but protects him from lynchers. Sadly he tells the girl and she doesn't give him up. It is a picture with much merit, well acted, well photographed and interesting.

"The Copperhead" (Champion), October 23.—Copperheads were Democrats in the North who in wartime, sympathized with the South. The story of this picture takes place in one of the "doubtful" states, perhaps Kentucky. The son of the copperhead father drills the young men of the community, but he has to do it secretly. Later, the band marches away openly, the boy a lieutenant, who goes with the curses of his father, but the blessings of his mother. Five years after the war, the son is prospering and is shown as about to enter college to study law when he learns that the mortgage is due on the old homestead and pays it off instead. In a very interesting and well-acted scene, this brings about a reconciliation. It is a very good picture, taken as a whole, but more might have been gotten out of the situation.

"The Trail of the Eucalyptus" (American), October 26.—This picture deals with the notorious givilance committees of the rough days in the West. These were lynch-law regulators of manners and customs. The kind of work they did is shown with some vividness in the opening scene. The eucalyptus of the title was a special tree near the heroine's home and a trysting place. Miss Bush plays a very interesting young heroine, just growing into womanhood. The climax of the story takes place under this tree. It is very sensational; but there is an originality in all that is pictured that keeps the mind from taking any morbid impression from the horrors, and feeds it on the human elements that are shown. This reviewer thinks it a very strong and commendable picture. One wishes the photography were better.

"The Horse Thief's Bigamy" (American), October 23.—This story has such a grip on life that one would think that a man with a doctor's experience had written it. It's a story in which some very unpleasant people figure, one of them, a brutal husband; and what is more, it is conducted with such intelligence and acted with such skill that everything in it is made to tell. The evil that is pictured fairly makes us suffer, but the good in it rewards us, and the picture ends happily. It is a commendable picture.

PROGRESS OF EXHIBITOR'S NATIONAL LEAGUE.

The National League of Moving Picture Exhibitors of America is rapidly becoming a powerful factor in a branch of the business that has for years gone unprotected. Since the exhibiting business has risen to a higher plane and has received the endorsement and investment of capital, the personnel of active managers has undergone a radical change and stands for more than it ever did before.

There is an atmosphere of legitimate business about most of the picture houses today, and there is no doubt that there are bigger men engaged in the business than ever before. With this influx of broader minds there has been a corresponding advance of ideas and better methods. Exhibitors of ability are realizing the importance and necessity of placing their business on a substantial basis and are well aware that it must first be recognized as a well-organized trade institution.

The National League of Exhibitors is a direct result brought about by progressive business men who are looking into the future and can see the vast possibilities that lie before them. Organization is certain to be the bulwark of the exhibitor, and the manner in which the better class of picture men have responded to the call for organization is one of the best signs of the times. The majority of states are now represented in the National League and the spirit of organization is everywhere receiving earnest consideration. Within the past two months several new state organizations have joined the national body. The general office of the League informs us that inquiries and letters of encouragement are coming in by hundreds. There yet remain a few states to join the movement, and these will, in the course of a few weeks become members as soon as the necessary details of local organization are perfected. The general offices of the National League of Exhibitors is located at Cincinnati, O., Room 1003 Mercantile Library Building. Mr. M. A. Neff, the president of the League, is in charge and is ready, willing and pleased to answer inquiries at all times.

OFFICIAL CALL

Of the Ohio State Moving Picture Exhibitors' League.

Every member of the Ohio State League is notified that the annual meeting for the purpose of electing officers and transacting other business will be held at Columbus, O., November, 1, 1911.

It is the duty of every member of the League to be at Columbus. I urge upon all members to be there. The League is growing and the great amount of good we have accomplished should influence every exhibitor to put forth his best effort to get every worthy exhibitor in the State to join our League.

We would ask every exhibitor in Ohio to attend this meeting; if they are not members now, they can join the League when they arrive at Columbus.

M. A. NEFF, President.
Exhibitors' League of Ohio.

KING, THE DETECTIVE.

An Entertaining Imp Story of the Apprehending of a Criminal in an Unique Manner.

King, the Detective, is the first of a series of detective stories to be filmed by the Imp Company. Almost every one is interested in the manner in which man hunters proceed and this drama is quite a faithful illustration. King Baggot appears in the title role, which in itself is a guarantee that the part is interpreted with fidelity and intelligence. The story is cleverly told and the tense interest is maintained until the closing scene when the real perpetrator is apprehended. A banker is mysteriously murdered in his own house and suspicion is directed to a young man who is secretly married to his daughter, the union having been forbidden by the father. The young man is seen to secretly enter the house by a servant and that is damaging. He is arrested and his wife, in her despair, applies to King,the famous detective, to apprehend the real culprit, she having implicit faith in the innocence of her husband. The detective begins his investigations, but is baffled at the outset. He finally visits the garage with no other clue than a thumb print on the collar of the dead man, visible through a powerful glass. He examines a wrench and has his suspicions aroused. Oiling his wrist he visits the house and, in a clever manner induces the chauffeur to shake hands with him. Under the glass he discovers that the thumb print on his wrist corresponds with that made on the collar of the murdered banker. The mystery is cleared up, the real murderer arested and who confesses, and the girl happy that her husband is liberated from prison.

ANDERSON & ZIEGLER IN PICTURES.

The sale of the foreign rights of the Milano "Dante's Inferno" pictures by the Monopol Film Company to Anderson & Ziegler, marks the entrance into the motion picture field of a new and powerful factor. The rights in question cover England and its colonies, France, Germany and South America and represent only the beginning of the operations of Messrs. Anderson & Ziegler. Mr. Anderson sailed on Oct. 24 for London and Paris to close some important contracts in the picture line. The concern is represented in Paris by Mr. Henry Ziegler, who resides there permanently and in London by W. W. "Doc" Freeman, well-known circus and theatrical agent. Through these connections Anderson & Ziegler will be able to get next to many of the big features in foreign pictures. The offices of the company in New York are in the Times Building.

"HIS CHORUS GIRL WIFE" (Lubin).

Many charming glimpses at the chorus girls behind the scenes are afforded in a story which will soon be released by the Lubin Company under the title of "His Chorus Girl Wife." It's full of the charming fairies of stageland. In fact, one of said fairies is the heroine of the story, a part played by Miss Lawrence. Mr. Johnson takes the part of Oliver Brompton, millionaire's son and gay young sport along the Great White Way, bearer of flowers to stage entrances and host at gay after-theater suppers.

It was at one of these suppers that he met his fate in the shape of the beautiful Sybil Sanford, a chorus girl. Sybil was as modest and retiring as a Quaker maid. Oliver fell hopelessly in love. To make a long story short, Sybil married him.

Proudly Mr. Brompton escorted his bride to his parents' palatial home, figuring perhaps whether his father would allow him $50,000 or only $40,000 a year. Oliver's calculations were somewhat wrong. His father promptly reduced Oliver's first estimate by $50,000. In other words, Oliver got nothing.

Still he had his love for his wife. They secured rooms and went to housekeeping. Oliver's training had not made him an expert in any line of work and in spite of all his efforts, he failed to secure employment. His wife, however, kept a brave heart and encouraged him, meanwhile keeping their home as clean as a pin and making appetizing meals out of nothing.

One day Mr. Brompton, Sr., called while Sybil was alone. He offered her a very large sum of money if she would renounce his son, but Sybil told him that she valued her husband more than all his father's money.

Mr. Brompton went home and told his wife what had happened. She thought it over and decided that maybe Oliver hadn't made such a bad choice after all. "You must take me to see her," she said to her husband.

The senior Bromptons called one morning and found both the young folks at home. Of course, the situation was somewhat strained at first. But when Oliver's mother saw the spotless cleanness of the humble home; when she saw the sweetness and the cheerfulness of Oliver's wife, she thawed out like a snow bank on a hot day. Oliver's father thawed, too, and when Mrs. Brompton, Jr., invited them to take dinner with them they jumped at the chance. It was a very scanty dinner for obvious reasons, but the young wife had done wonders with the material she had. And so the breach was healed, the wolf was driven from the door and love had triumphed once more.

NESTOR NOTES.

David Horsley is now in Los Angeles, California, getting things ready for the three Nestor companies en route for the West. A permanent studio will be built there, though the Eastern Nestor studio will be maintained for the return of Mutt and Jeff, Desperate Desmond and the Eastern Stock Co., late in the spring. One of the brightest stars just engaged by the Nestor Co. is Alice Davenport, the well-known actress and mother of Dorothy Davenport, the favorite Nestor leading lady.

A third Nestor release will be started Monday, Nov. 20th, with "His Vacation," said to be a comedy of high merit. The famous director, Thomas Ricketts, is the producer. Distinctive comedies with an occasional feature drama will be released. On Saturdays Desperate Desmond will alternate with the popular Mutt and Jeff. The Nestor Eastern management is now entirely in the hands of Charles Simone, the publicity manager.

PICTURES OF THE GREAT NAVAL REVIEW.

Solax Company Receive Commission to Take Official Pictures of the Naval Spectacle.

What was beyond question the largest and most representative naval review ever held in America took place the latter part of October in New York harbor. This great review was in the nature of a naval dress parade, especially summoned by the Secretary of the Navy, and included all classes of war vessels from the smallest to the largest. There were more than 100 vessels in this modern armada. There were many interesting features that were worth going a long way to see, which, of course, is impossible to the great majority of American people, many of whom have never had the opportunity of seeing any one of Uncle Sam's great flotilla. It is now commonly known that the United States Government, instead of being apathetic as it used to be, has distinctly stamped its approval upon the moving picture and has adopted cinematography as a regular means of keeping the public posted on the various activities of the National government in all departments. At a recent meeting of the cabinet, moving pictures were discussed and a large appropriation was approved by the President for the picturing of the details of government. Of this sum each department has been allotted its proportionate share and the Navy Department has received theirs.

Being no longer averse to the cameraman, pictures may thus be taken of naval maneuvers, and it is the intention of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company to release a special picture of this interesting event. The Solax Company of New York was appointed by the Sales Company to make this release, and the Solax people are determined that this will be one of their best efforts. Their intention is to leave nothing undone to make it the most complete and interesting set of naval pictures that has yet been taken, and with all their advantages for this work, there is every reason to expect that the pictures will be all that the Solax people intend that they shall be. Independent exhibitors are advised to keep well posted in regard to this special release and to book it for their houses by all means at the earliest possible opportunity. It will be a treat for the public, especially in those parts of the United States where war-ships are never seen, and probably never will be seen, by the majority of the citizens. As an educational reel it will also be a valuable addition to the work of schools that look with favor upon the motion picture as an aid to educating the young. It will be a picture that can be shown in any place at any time and will be good for years to come. Even though the boats become obsolete, in which case it will be, if anything, more valuable than before by way of illustrating the difference between present-day warships and those that may be built differently in future years.

CHAMPION FLEET PICTURES.

Nearly every film manufacturing company has hundreds of feet of U. S. war vessels at anchor lying in their safes. Almost any one of them could put out a picture of the fleet without taking another foot of negative. For this reason the Champion decided to get something different from the usual panorama of war vessels. Dintenfass is saying nothing about it, but promises to give exhibitors something unlike the rest. Watch for it.

POWERS WILL PICTURE THE FLEET, TOO.

Announcement is made that the Powers Picture Company, among others, will make pictures of the fleet of U. S. war vessels now anchored in the Hudson River. A few extra features are claimed by this company in the way of views from the bridge of the flagship "Connecticut." This will be the Powers regular release for Nov. 7.

"HUBBY'S SCHEME" (Essanay).

Mr. Anderson, of the Essanay Western Company, has lately produced two excellent comedies—"Outwitting Papa" and "Hubby's Scheme." The first of the two named was reviewed in the Moving Picture World last week.

"Hubby," played by Mr. Augustus Carney, that little irresistible comedian with the Western company, is coaxed to take a little pleasure trip with some of his bachelor friends. After he agrees to go he remembers that he must first have the consent of his wife and this is no easy matter, as he has always had to give an account of his goings and comings.

Hubby is finally coaxed by his friends to tell his wife that he is sick and needs a week's rest. After much difficulty the family doctor is persuaded to advice that Hubby really needs a rest.

At the house that evening Hubby enters, convulsed with cramps in the stomach and other violent symptoms. The doctor is called and advises Wifey that Hubby must have a change and rest and after very little indecision Wifey agrees to let him go.

Hubby meets his friends at the train and a few minutes later they are speeding on their way to the winter resort. Arrived at the hotel the boys order the best rooms in the house and prepare to celebrate. Hubby now has a scheme regarding his correspondence with his wife during his stay and lest he forget to mail her one of his daily epistles he writes them all at once and handing them to the clerk in the order that they are to be mailed, bribes him to mail one of the letters each day. The letters are gems of brevity and, if they had not got mixed the plan would have worked nicely; but the unexpected happened and wifey decides to investigate.

Boarding a train she arrives at the hotel just as the clerk is mailing another letter to her. She is now "next" to her deceitful husband and leaving her grip on the clerk's desk rushes upstairs to her husband's room. He is out, fortunately. But a few minutes later Hubby at the clerk's desk recognizes the handbag and opens it to examine the contents to make sure that he is right. The length of the foot of a stocking decides him and he with his three friends steals up to the room. Wifey is waiting for him and after thrusting the other boys out into the corridor makes ready to give her husband the much needed chastisement. However, his pleadings win her over and soon the two are carressing and as happy as two turtle doves.

Hubby's scheme is farcical in the extreme, but is cleverly worked out and every laugh it contains should prove a genuine tonic. It is an extraordinary good remedy by an extraordinary good company of players.

A TRIO OF SOLAX STARS.

SOLAX ENLARGING STUDIOS.

Material Addition to Flushing Plant Now in Course of Erection—A Woman's Enterprise.

As an evidence of the renewed activities of the independent film manufacturing companies, comes the announcement that the Solax Company has planned an extensive addition to its plant at Flushing, N. Y. The plan contemplates the building of a larger studio of a permanent character, better suited to the varied product of the Solax Company. It will have a larger capacity and contain many conveniences not provided by the present studio facilities.

The present studio is situated in the middle of the plot of ground owned by the Solax Company on Congress St. There is a small park and lake on one side of the building, with structures representing a small Western hotel, country store and saloon on the other. These have proved of great use in making Western pictures.

Mme. Blache, president and treasurer of the Solax Company, and her husband, Mr. Herbert Blache, have but recently returned from Europe, where several agencies for Solax pictures were established by them. While Mme. Blache does not seek personal publicity, she was not averse to discussing her interest in picture making with a representative of the Moving Picture World who recently paid a visit to the Flushing studios. Of her business ability, the popularity of the Solax pictures is sufficient proof; but the work that interests her most is the production of pictures. Having been connected with picture production almost from the inception of the business, Mme. Blache has become a most competent director. She was at one time a director for the Gaumont Company of Paris, and later acted as that company's personal representative. All scenarios used by the Solax Company are edited by Mme. Blache and many of the pictures are personally directed by her. Those not made under her personal direction are vised by her at some stage of the process of making, so that she practically has a hand in the entire output of the company.

Mme. Blache has surrounded herself with a very competent staff of players and directors. Mr. Edgar Lewis and Mr. E. Warner have proved themselves competent to a most satisfactory degree. Mr. Lewis has been in the dramatic field as actor, director and critic. Mr. Warner has also had long experience in the field of legitimate drama.

Among the leading players appearing in Solax pictures, mention should be made of Miss Blanche Cornwall, Miss Marion Swayne and Mr. Gladdon James, all of whom have had considerable theatrical experience and possess pleasing personalities.

The equipment of the Solax plant is complete in every department. In the manufacturing branch the finest and most modern devices are in use and in charge of thoroughly competent technicians.

CRUSADERS AT RACINE AND MADISON.

The World's Best Film Company and its now famous "Crusaders" picture seems to be carrying everything before it. Many successful appearances of this great picture have been recorded already, but every mail brings new proof of its drawing power. At Racine, Wis., it was exhibited in the new opera house on October 23, 24 and 25 to splendid business. From there it went to Fuller Opera House, Madison, Wis., on the 28th and 29th, where reports on the advanced sale indicated that the house was sold out for the first six performances. The Fuller Opera House seats 1,400 people.

DINNER IN HONOR OF MR. NICHOLAS POWER.

The directors of the Nicholas Power Company celebrated the fifty-seventh birthday of Mr. Nicholas Power on Saturday, the twenty-first instant, by a dinner and a theater party in his honor.

The dinner was given at Martin's Restaurant and those present were Mr. Power, Mr. Edward Earl, Mr. John Munro, Mr. J. C. Bell and Mr. Baxter Morton.

During the course of the dinner Mr. Power was the recipient of numerous congratulatory telegrams from old friends and persons prominent in public affairs and in the moving picture trade. He also received a number of souvenirs of the occasion, among which were a box of fifty-seven Havanas especially made up to suit Mr. Power's taste in smokes, and a large basket containing samples of all of Heinz's "fifty-seven varieties." After dinner the party adjourned to the New Amsterdam theater under the chaperonage of Mr. Edward Earl, who acted as master of ceremonies for the evening and personally saw to it that each member of the party reached home in good repair and in time for Sunday breakfast.

Formal speech-making was not indulged in, but anecdotes were the order of the evening and all present contributed their quota. The only regret expressed was that no opportunity would ever be presented for again celebrating Mr. Power's fifty-seventh birthday.

NEW BAUSCH & LOMB CATALOGUE.

Bausch & Lomb Optical Company is distributing its new fall catalogue on projection apparatus. It will be found of particular interest and value to manufacturers and users of picture machines. The high quality of the Bausch & Lomb product recommends it to careful consideration, so this new catalogue will be a welcome visitor to the trade. Especial attention is directed to the line of Balopticons, or high-grade projection lanterns. Every known form of optical projection has been provided for in this little booklet and several new features have been introduced.

ARRA-NA-POGUE IN 3 REELS

GENUINE SLIDES OF THE MORMON TEMPLE.

Max Florence is a young German who came to this country several years ago and joined the Mormon Church. He was a photographer by trade. Learning while in Salt Lake City that no gentile had ever seen the inside of the Mormon Temple, he contrived to take surreptitious photographs of the interior of the great and mysterious edifice. It took young Florence a couple of years to secure the views he desired, after which he left the church for reasons best known to himself. The controversy that subsequently arose between Florence and the Mormon Church concerning the photos has been universally extensive in the recent news of the world.

The attention of Mr. A. J. Clapham, of 130 W. 37th Street, New York City, was, of course, attracted to the controversy and he at once got in touch with Mr. Florence and bargained with him for the rights to a complete set of the exclusive photographs which he had taken of the Mormon Tabernacle. These slides, with their accompanying lecture, form an extremely interesting illustrated talk, as can well be imagined.

There has been sojourning at the Imperial Hotel, in New York City, Mr. Benjamin Brodsky, of China, who is a most traveled picture man and his experiences are as interesting as his travels have been wide. Mr. Brodsky has resided in China a number of years and speaks Chinese and Japanese fluently, besides speaking nine other languages.

Mr. Brodsky is representing the Variety Film Exchange of San Francisco and the Orient, and has been in New York for the purpose of buying films and supplies for the Oriental market, which he knows thoroughly. He is also taking over a number of agencies. Mr. Brodsky has been purchasing film from leading film makers in New York and Chicago and placed what is probably the largest announcement slide order ever given, with A. J. Clapham, 130 West 37th St., New York City. The slides are to be made in several Oriental languages and will be for general distribution from points in Shanghai, Hongkong, Singapore, Vladivostok and Tokio.

MAJESTIC ENTERPRISE.

A Moving Picture World representative dropped into the offices of the Majestic Motion Picture Co., on Forty-fifth Street, and after a very cordial greeting from Tom Cochrane, general manager of the company, was invited into an adjoining room to pass judgment on a few finished pictures soon to be released.

It is generally known among those in the trade that the services of Miss Mary Pickard, better known as "Little Mary," and Mr. Owen Moore, a team of the most popular and favored moving picture actors, have been secured by Mr. Cochrane for the Majestic Co., and will appear in "The Courting of Mary," to be released Sunday, November 26th, through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co., and subsequent releases.

Sunday will be the regular release day for Majestic Films, and if all future pictures are as good as "The Courting of Mary," which, by the way, is as clever a comedy as ever "got over," in which Little Mary and Owen Moore are at their best, working with a good story and an abundance of well-selected natural scenery as a foundation, assisted by a good director and capable cameraman, then it is to be expected that Majestic pictures will always be popular.

Mary Pickford is without doubt one of the foremost picture actress in America to-day. She is entitled to this distinction by true force of talent and experience acquired through her long affiliation with the Biograph and Imp companies. Miss Pickford possesses a personality and charm that is different from all others. She is distinctive and a natural actress than whom there are few better examples.

Aside from Miss Pickord and Mr. Moore, the two stock companies now working every day are composed of the best talent to be had, and who will from time to time be mentioned in these columns concerning the picture in which they may appear.

The application of the Majestic Motion Picture Company to release through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co. was taken up at the last meeting of that body, and was favorably passed upon by the entire board of directors. Hereafter all Majestic films will be handled by the Sales Co., who, up to date, have about twenty orders for this brand.

"THE HIGHER THE FEWER" (Thanhouser).

When the Thanhouser directors had in preparation "The Higher the Fewer," an aeroplane elopement which is to be released Tuesday, November 14th, there was a question of either dropping the whole production or else getting a real aeroplane and an instructor to teach one of the Thanhouser players the science of aeronautics. Without realism it was decided that the force of the humor of this comedy would be considerably weakened.

The directors knew that if they wished to make effective the scene where the "Yorkshire Kid," a prizefighter, carries off the girl he loves in in aeroplane, from under the very nose of a rival, the picture had to show the kid and his sweetheart in actual flight.

Actors are people who usually can act, but it is at this date too much to expect that they should know the intricacies of a flying machine. The problem, therefore, was, how much it cost to hire a real aeroplane and a man who could instruct a Thanhouser star.

Scene from "The Higher The Fewer" (Thanhouser).

After jockeying a bit, arrangements were finally consummated with Captain Thomas A. Baldwin and Augustus Post. They undertook to run a kindergarten for the benefit of the Thanhouser Company, and gave up the use of their machine. Of course, there were many interesting incidents and narrow escapes during the time of training. Chief among these incidents was the experience with a farmer on Long Island who demanded a thousand dollars because a Thanhouser actor alighted on his property. A thousand dollars from an actor! You might just as well ask the moon for a Swiss cheese sandwich.

There are many comedy situations in "The Higher the Fewer" that would make William Collier envious. In his haste to evade his rival and get to a parson, the "Yorkshire Kid" goes up in the air in a prince albert and a silk hat.

This incongruity, coupled with the astonishment of the girl when she unexpectedly finds herself defying the laws of gravitation, produces the kind of comedy that is clean and at the same time infectious. The sight of the rival trying to follow by auto the eloping couple also presents an unusual scene.

Collapse of the Trust's Colossal Bubble

After nearly two years of unsuccessful bluffing, the Trust's bluff bubble has busted! Instead of threatening the exhibitors of America with all sorts of ghastly things, it is now wheedling them, feeding them with flattery and honeyed promises and trying its blamedest to win them away from the ranks of the Independents! In many cases it is actually "permitting" licensed theatres to mix a few Independent subjects in with their licensed programs, rather than lose such exhibitors from the licensed lists! What would have happened to any licensed exhibitor who dared to use an Independent film in his theatre a year ago, or even six months ago?

What is the cause of this sudden change in tactics? The answer is simple. The trust has seen its customers leaving it by hundreds and by thousands during the past year or two. It has finally awakened to the fact that the exhibitors of America are not to be bluffed; and that there are ten good fighters on the Independent side to every one brainy fighter on the trust side. It now seeks to gain by flattery what it lost by bone-headed mismanagement.

You've won a tremendous fight and it's up to you to reap the benefits. Don't be wheedled or flattered into giving up the fruits of your victory. The Japs licked the very dickens out of Russia on the field of battle and then lost on the field of diplomacy. Don't let that happen to you. Don't believe any of the promises of the very trust that tried to throttle you. Place your faith in the Independents; in the film exchanges which have helped you make a winning fight; in the Independent manufacturers who made it possible for you to be your own boss, and who are turning out better films every day so that you can crush your competition by means of Q-u-a-l-i-t-y! and not by bluffs or threats. Hook up with Laemmle films, Laemmle service and "Laemmle luck" and make the profits you are entitled to!

A SPEEDY TOPICAL FILM BY LUBIN.

The Lubin Company have released a film, showing the daredevil automobile driving in the great Fairmount Park Race when Erwin Bergdoll in a 90 horsepower Benz hammered around the famous Fairmount Park course of 202 miles at an average speed, for the entire race, of 61.25 miles per hour, smashing the records.

It's a picture that shows the 19 racing cars flying along straight stretches, turning the famous Hair-Pin and Sweet Briar curves at hair-raising angles, while an excited crowd of 50,000 people lined the course and cheered their favorites.

The race was very close. Wishart, in a 90 horsepower Mercedes, was only a minute or two behind Bergdoll most of the way.

Such famous drivers as Mulford, Zengle, Grant, De Palma and Jagersberger are also shown in this film of a world famous event in automobile racing.

THE CHRYSANTHEMUM—A LESSON.

A helpful and beautiful picture lesson in horticulture is among the latest Pathe pictures. In a positively instructive manner the horticulturist takes a "cutting" from a chrysanthemum plant, shows the method of "potting" same in fresh soil. When the plant has grown and begins to bear flowers the method of selecting the best ones and cutting away the inferior ones is shown. It is also explained that it is by this process that the large and beautiful blooms are secured, as by pruning away the weaker ones the strength is all given to the few remaining flowers, which as a result are larger in size and richer in color; the lesson is an exceedingly valuable one, and in this manner well taught.

The development of the favored bloom is next shown, a growth of six weeks being portrayed in two minutes; the opening, growing flower, as it passes into the fullness of its beauty is at once interesting, instructive and beautiful.

"It hurts me and other fans as well to see a big, reputable film concern do anything that at all looks like and approaches 'faking.' A short picture, recently released and called 'Among the Japanese,' was incorrectly and misleadingly labeled. It should have read 'Among the Japanese in Chicago.' 'Orientals tramping around the studio' would have been another good and appropriate title. It is impossible to take pictures of Tokyo and Osaka in Chicago. The number of critical and sharp-eyed fans is increasing every day and they know enough to know that pictures of Japan should be taken in Japan. P. F."

The picture in question, "AMONG THE JAPANESE," was photographed in Japan, for the Selig Polyscope Co., by Prof. Starr of the Univ. of Chicago—and not one single inch of this film, except the announcements, was made elsewhere.

When such authorities as the author of this article cannot distinguish between actual scenes from life, photographed in foreign countries, and scenes built and photographed in the Selig studios—when they believe that these actual "scenics" are only Selig studio productions, and on the other hand mistake Selig studio productions for actual taken-from-life "scenics"—then it is an assured and conceded fact that

SELIG SUPREMACY SPELLS SURE SUCCESS

The Wheeler Slide and Its Making.

The song slide is one of those institutions in the entertainment world which, although often prophesied out of existence, yet survives in undiminished popularity. When there was some controversy on this topic in our pages two or three years ago, it developed that the song slide was twenty or thirty years old in this country. We who write this saw colored slides projected, to which there was a vocal accompaniment, in the early eighties. The popularity of the song slide, therefore, antedates even that of the moving picture, which is a comparatively youthful contribution to the world's entertainments.

When moving pictures were leaping into popularity it was thought by many in the business that lantern slides for amusement, educational and other purposes would cease to be popular or to be shown. But the contrary is the case. Probably more lantern slides are made and shown than ever. The business of those firms who make it their aim to place lantern slides on the market are largely increasing instead of diminishing. One of the oldest firms in this country producing colored lantern pictures for song slide purposes is that of DeWitt C. Wheeler, of 120 East 31st Street, New York City. The business was founded by Mr. Wheeler some thirteen or fourteen years ago and has always shown steady progress in volume and quality of work.

The making of a song slide is an interesting department of the industry with a method peculiarly its own. To fit colored lantern slide illustrations to a song calls for a combination of qualities of an exceptional nature. In the first place, you have to show an audience listening to the song a series of scenes called up by the words which instantly arrest attention and strike at the understanding of a popular audience. The audience, in fact, has to see on the screen that which was in the mind of the author of the words. It comes to this, that the music of the song slide must interpret by means of photography what the librettist had in mind when he was composing the song. He must, in fact, provide a series of scenes and situations just as the author is supposed to have conceived them.

Whether it is actually done or not we do not know, but we can quite conceive a song writer and a song slide maker working in collaboration. It is a possible scheme and probably would produce good results.

Mr. Wheeler's skill in interpreting songs in the song slide is tested out in a variety of ways. He has in his possession a tremendous number of negatives which can be used for supplying backgrounds for his posed pictures. He has studio facilities for posing his artists. Or again he may, as some song slide makers we have known do, go to nature; that is, with the words of the song in his hand. He may take artists with him, pose them against suitable backgrounds in the country or the city and thus obtain the basis of your song slide. Posing, combination printing, printing in—these are some of the devices available for the making of a suitable song slide.

Of course, it has to be colored. On the occasion of a recent visit to Mr. Wheeler's studio, we were shown specimen's of his song slides, which in beauty of coloring, ingenuity of work and cleverness of combination struck us as reaching the ideal of this class of work.

The theme of the song, however uncommon, does not seem to phase Mr. Wheeler. If the hero dives into the cold ocean to resuce his lady love, Wheeler will illustrate it in colors. Or possibly said hero may take a flight in an aeroplane. The flight will be illustrated in the song slides. Adventure, humor, pathos—all come alike within Mr. Wheeler's deft handling. The handsome lover loves to perfection in a Wheeler song slide; the pretty girl never looks so pretty and pleading as she does in the same medium.

As we have said above, this is a unique kind of business demanding unique skill in carrying it out. The making of song slides with carefully posed figures and introduced accessories illustrative of dramatic action or sentiment or adventure, calls for a combination of wonderful qualities. Besides being a photographer and colorist Mr. Wheeler has to exercise the art of stage director. He has to create and to pose. Consequently the amount of real work that is put into the preparation of illustrating a set of colored song slides is really remarkable.

The Wheeler song slide is extant not only in the United States and Canada and in other English speaking countries but also across the Atlantic and Great Britain, where the song slide is as popular as it is here. Moving picture exhibitors who include the Wheeler song slide in their programs are always sure of obtaining an artistic product that satisfies audiences. The beauty of the coloring invariably elicits great admiration and the immense variety of subjects which Mr. Wheeler and his skillful staff handles evince a desire to please all the demands of the song slide loving public.

INQUIRIES

Correspondents are advised that no attention will be paid inquiries which do not give the name and address of the writers. For the purpose of reply, initials or noms de plume may be used.

Inquiry as to the private affairs of photoplayers will not be answered. This includes the question as to whether or not they are married.

No inquiries of a general nature will hereafter be answered by mail and only in special cases when a stamped self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Many correspondents ask the same question and we have initiated this department to save our own time and yet help out our readers when we can.

"SCRIBE."—We cannot undertake to keep track of the names of the members of the French and Italian companies. Personalities are not made so important abroad and the information is not forthcoming when desired.

BEN W.—The Reliance company advises us that you probably have reference to Miss Gertrude, and not Ruth, Robinson. She is a present member of the Reliance company, coming to them from the Biograph, where she occasionally played opposites to Arthur Johnson. This would appear to establish her identification. (2) If you will look over the files for the past year, you will discover in the projection department, almost as many remedies for condenser breakage as there are issues. What works with one operator does not apply to another, since room conditions are different. Why not experiment with the most promising suggestions until you find one that suits the conditions under which your operator works? There is no certain preventive.

"INDEPENDENT GIRL."—The question of Mr. Miller will be answered later. (2) William Shay was the hypnotist, and Miss Lucille Young the girl, in "The Battle of the Wills," done by the I. M. P. company. (3) Warren Kerrigan and Miss Pauline Bush generally play opposites with the American company. (4) Later. (5) Miss Julia M. Taylor was the Thanhouser Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet."

I. R. S.—The Bison company has not yet replied. (2) The Champion advises that you have reference to Robert C. Thornby. He is no longer with the company, having left last May.

P. Z. L. D.—This is hardly a matter to query the company on, but we confess we shared your bewilderment when we saw the action to which you refer. It is not improbable that the action led to a scene eliminated from the final version to get the reel within the required thousand-foot length. It not infrequently happens that a photoplay will run 1,400 to 1,800 feet in the rough and in the cutting to get it down to release length, some of the continuity is lost. We are of the opinion that the canoe in a later scene was to be set afire and then adrift, but this is merely guesswork. The "Story of the Films" does not offer any enlightenment.

GODFREY—Arthur Johnson was the singer in Lubin's "The Actress and the Singer." (2) He has not worked for the Imp. His previous connections were the Biograph and Reliance companies. (3) The actress was played by Miss Lawrence, who was with the Imp for a time. (4) Charles Kent both acts and produces for the Vitagraph. (5) The Vitagraph studios are in Brooklyn, on the line of the Brighton Beach road. The Edison studio is in the Bronx, close to the Botanical Gardens in Bronx Park. The Lubin studio is in Philadelphia. (6) No company will permit you to witness the making of a photoplay. In many studios even the other players are excluded.

H. M. C.—Miss Gladys Fields generally plays opposites to Gilbert M. Anderson in the Esanay Western pictures. (2) We have no information as to her matromonial affairs. (3) Henry Walthall was with Reliance last we heard. (4) The story that Maurice Costello is insane is a new one, but no more correct than the report of his death. He is working in the studio and is appearing now and then at receptions given in his honor by photoplay theater managers. He had a reception in Brooklyn the 19th.

P. S. Y.—Miss Mary Fuller was the Aida in the Edison production of that opera. We cannot state the company playing in "Il Trovatore" or "Faust." These were Pathe productions made abroad. In no case were the casts made up of opera singers. Why should they be?

B. H. Z.—Augustus Carney is the Essanay's Alkali Ike. He has been with the company for some time.

B. H. L.—Max Linder is not dead, but the Pathe company is using more American productions and the French product is largely used for "filler" or else is full reel stuff.

C. G.—You can mark a price on your scenarios or leave it to the company to set a value. If the former, mark the price on the manuscript and do not trust to a letter. (2) Send your script by mail. If it is so bulky as to need expressing it is not a photoplay. (3) You can get back numbers containing the articles on technique if you become a subscriber.

H. H. B.—No information as to ages, marriages or other purely personal details is given in this column.

D. L. N.—The American productions are made in the West. Warren Kerrigan plays most of the heroes. (2) The company has no Chicago studio that we know of.

T. M. G.—Most of the companies will sell you portraits of the leading members of their companies.

S. C. R.—We think King Baggott quite as beautiful as you say he is—but we can't tell you if he is married or not. William Shay seems to be the other Imp player you speak of. William Shea is a Vitagraph actor.

BESS.—Miss Lottie Pickford has not been with the Imp lately. She is now announced as a Vitagraph player. She is the sister, not the daughter, of "Little Mary."

B. C. H.—Regularity of features counts for more than coloring in determining the photographic value of a face. Other essentials are good eyes, and a mobile mouth. Two little lines running from the base of the norstrils to the corners of the mouth, scarcely noticed in the eye, sometimes age a face cruelly before the camera, and have cost more than one competent actress her chance.

C. R.—"Smoke pots" are merely iron pots filled with material giving off a dense smoke, but it is a generic term used for anything employed to produce the semblance of smoke. Steam jets are employed and sometimes the vapors of ammonia and muriatic acid. In the fire scene in Edison's "His Misjudgment," the scenery was actually set on fire and washed down the moment the picture making was over.

C. L. P.—The full cast of Kalem's "The Colleen Bawn" was published in a recent issue of the Moving Picture World. Look it up. Your second question does not lie within our province.

L. P. F.—William Garwood was the lover in "Courting Across the Court." It is a Thanhouser film. We know no film of that title made by the company you mention.

V. L. P.—Herbert Rawlins played Count Dantes in Selig's "A Craven Heart." (2) Hazel Neason was the girl in the Vitagraph's "Cupid's Chauffeur." (3) Kenneth Casey and Adele de Garde are not brother and sister. (4) A Biograph player, therefore, nameless.

O. F. S.—New York City parks are open to motion photographers who can show permits, and we believe that the former city ordinance against the use of Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, for Motion picture purposes, has been repealed. (2) J. W. Morrison and Grace Lewis had the leading parts in "Over the Chafing Dish." (3) Etienne Giradot played the burglar in "His Burglar." He is the same who scored a hit as the original Charley's Aunt in America.

H. C. H.—Frank Crane had the lead in the Thanhouser "Divorce."

E. G.—Charles Ogle played the title role in Edison's "The Doctor." Mabel Trunelle was the fiance, and Herbert Prior and Miss Sawyer the parents of the child.

F. F. B.—Miss Helen Davenport was the would-be murderess in the Reliance "Ever the Accuser."

W. H. T.—Owen Moore, King Baggott and George Tucker, were the men who submitted to dental operations in "The Fair Dentist."

S. R. T.—Francis Bushman and Dorothy Phillips had the leading parts in the Essanay "Fate's Funny Frolic." (2) Augustus Carney was not in the production. He is not a member of that section of the company.

B. T. Y.—See answer to H. M. C. The desired addresses may be found in the advertising pages of this issue.

JEAN.—The best way to get an autograph is to send a stamped and addressed envelope and a polite request in care of the company by whom the player is employed.

R. S. B.—Your question appears to deal with a purely local condition.

C. W. K.—Your letter does not make it plain whether you want to act in the pictures or the picture theaters. If the former, address the companies nearest you, enclosing photographs and stating experience. If you want the photographs back, send return postage. Unless you can show experience it is practically useless to apply. To obtain a position in a picture theater, apply to the local manager. He may give you a chance to try your act if you have one, and if you do well he can recommend you to the agent through whom he does his booking.

P. G. E.—Mabel Normand was the Betty in the Vitagraph's "Betty Becomes a Maid." She is now with Biograph. (2) J. T. Carrigan and Miss Kathleen Williams played the part. (3) Will be answered later.

G. B.—There is no recent information about Miss Leonard. Follow the news columns of the paper. Her engagement will be announced when she closes with some company.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

HELD UP HIS SCENARIO.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—I have read with considerable interest the various letters by Mr. Hall, Mr. Kitchell, and other scenario writers during the past week, and think you should be thanked for opening your columns to the writers to register their "knocks" and their "boosts," and thus enabling them to get better acquainted with one another. I think this acquaintance will eventually result in the formation of an organization of scenario writers along the same lines as the Friars, the Press Club, the Authors, the Players, etc. When that happy time arrives, and I predict that it will be within the next few years, scenario writers will enjoy the same rights as other authors. They will be in a position to demand that their names be attached to each film sent out that they have written so that the public will know who they are; so that the public can ask for and seek other pictures by the same author if they like him, and thus enable him to build up a reputation if he possesses the ability. Manufacturers will then have to solicit pictures from popular authors at the latter's price, the same as popular magazine writers are sought out by editors today. But such a condition can only be brought about by organization and concerted action led by authors of standing, like Mr. Hall and Mr. Kitchell.

Before I close I would like to register a real kick and would feel much indebted to Mr. Man-About-Town if he can explain it away. Recently I submitted an mss. to a firm that has always returned unavailable stories within four or five days. On this occasion the mss. was held five or six weeks. I had visions of a sale when I read a review in the World of a picture released by this firm utilizing the same theme as I employed. My hopes then and there vanished, and sure enough the next day I received a letter praising the mss. from the firm, but rejecting it because they had just released a picture along the same line. Now, I don't want to even insinuate that the firm used my idea, but I claim that inasmuch as the firm already had its picture ready or in rehearsal when they received my mss. they should have promptly returned my story instead of holding it until they released their picture. I may be wrong, but it looked to me as though they wanted to score a beat on the idea, so that my mss. would be of little value to other manufacturers who might want to purchase it. The story has been praised by other film-makers, but they all say that the idea has been used recently by this other firm, which places me somewhat in the light of a plagiarist. If the mss. had been returned promptly before the other release, I could have disposed of it easily.

In reference to Mr. Hall's $90 scenarios and the ones Mr. Kitchell received only $8 for, I think the rest of the writers would be much indebted to them if they made known who these films are, so that those new to the game would know who to avoid and whom to try to do business with.

Again hoping that we will see an organization of scenario writers in the near future, I am, respectfully, "A BOOSTER."

Brooklyn, N. Y.

"HER CROWNING GLORY" IN BAD TASTE.

October 6, 1911.

Editor The Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—Will you allow a "moving picture fan" to express an opinion on a late Vitagraph film, "Her Crowning Glory?"

I think that the story is in the worst possible taste, and I know many people who feel the same way, for it outrages every sense of justice and decency.

Think of what it would mean to a woman in such a case—her one beauty a mass of chestnut hair, curly—a true "Crowning Glory"—to be robbed of that, and tell me if it is a fit subject for ridicule. What kind of a man would he be who would hold a mirror for her to see that she was shorn of the one glory that had been her pride? What kind of a man to hold the scissors that had cut her heart-strings as well as her hair; to taunt her, call her a "hideous creature," and drive her out of his house without a chance to hide the disfiguring stumps of hair? It was a disgusting exhibition for a man to make; it must be a "tough hide" that is not touched by such distress as that capable actress depicted.

The picture ought to have its logical sequel, in which that imbecile father would be defendant in a damage suit, and made to pay the plaintiff about $25,000 as part compensation for her loss.

I noticed that whereas some of the other pictures had elicited applause, "Her Crowning Glory," ended in absolute silence. Indeed the silence was noticeable, and I heard many expressions of disgust later on.

What were the censors doing to put their approval on such a moral as is taught? The censors will not allow fight nor Beulah Binford pictures for fear the children will become depraved. Will not let us see a murder for fear some hare-brained boy will "go and do likewise," nor a safe-blowing, etc.—but what example does "Her Crowning Glory" set to our younger folks? That it is not only right to cut a woman's hair off while she sleeps, but it is a most laughable affair, and highly commendable, that papa stands ready to reward the venturesome little girl, and every one else will regard it as very facetious, and she will be petted and patted for her daring.

Oh ye censors! It is no harm for a child to sneak behind a sleeping woman and steal her one pride and glory! only very funny, and papa will play horse again! Yours very truly, HARRY F. CORBY.

36 Broad Street, New York City.

A PRAYER FOR RELIEF.

Lansing, Mich., September 25, 1911.

Editor Moving Picture World, New York City:

Dear Sir—If you know, or have ever heard of anything that will take the place of an illustrated song, I will consider it a personal favor, if you will advise me what it is.

If all the songs that are illustrated are like those we have had, it would appear that the slide makers are using only the WORST they can find. Just imagine torturing an intelligent audience with such as "Der Deutscher Rag," "Love Me," etc., and why Good Reliable Publishers will let such junk go out, is more than I can understand, and any manager who has the nerve to indict such stuff on his patrons, should provide his singer with a coat of armor.

Yours very truly,

H. F. FOWSER, Manager Vaudette Theater.

AN INDIAN CRITICISES INDIAN PICTURES.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—If the directors of the moving picture companies knew how foolish their women and girls look in the Indian pictures, with from one to three turkey feathers stuck in the top of their heads, they would be more careful. It certainly is a laugh to see Alice Joyce, and others made up as Indians, every person dressed the same with the same feather. Have lived all my life in the West and worked for different picture men. The genuine Indian women, there are many in this city who work for the picture. Have been with them and we always laugh and think it a great joke when we see the leading girls in the pictures made up as Indians, with the chicken feather in the hair. It is funny, but they would all look much better without them. The braves wear the eagle feather, one or two, after they are braves, but they have to earn them. The chief and council-chief have the war bonnet. Have also seen pictures with all the made-up Indian men with big war bonnets on their heads. Another big laugh, but don't think the managers know this; if they did, they would do different. Then again, they should get the real Indian people. There is about a hundred men, women and children in New York out of work most of the time, from the reservations out West, and only a few of them get any work. Pathe and Biograph use them more than the other companies, as they know just how to act and don't laugh all the time like some of the white men. Would like to have you print this some time, as I think it would do some good. Always get your Moving Picture World every week, and think it is a great paper.

Yours very truly,

JOHN STANDING HORSE.

Carlisle School. General Delivery, New York.

EXHIBITOR AND EXCHANGE SHOULD CO-OPERATE.

Salem, Ind., Sept. 24th, 1911.

To the Editor:

Dear Sir—A few days ago I was to meet the manager of the exchange from which I get my reels. While waiting, I looked around, and, among other places, in the inspecting room. There I saw a number of girls, supposed to be inspecting films, but their minds and conversation were upon a dance or a party they had been to the night before, and they did not look at the reels except when one was broken. If there were torn sprocket holes or bad patches they never bothered with them.

When bad reels are received by the exhibitor it is a question whose fault it is. It is either the fault of the exchange or the operator who ran it last. Before I went to see this I always returned the reels as they were, if broken. Most of the reels I returned in better shape than when I received them. Now, if every manager would instruct his operator to repair the reels before returning them, exhibitors would receive their reels in better condition. The exchanges will not have to employ so many inspectors, and it will save them money and they can save you money, and the reels will be in better shape. It must be remembered that the only opportunity exchanges have to examine reels is about one hour per day, between 11 and 12, and it is impossible to repair many reels in that time.

I always caution my operator to take good care of the reels, as they are very expensive. A reel is often sent to a theater for two to four days and receives no care. Two or three other houses use this reel in the same manner and what is the reel in about three weeks' time? A piece of junk, of course. Now, if every operator will take care and repair his reels, we would all get reels in better condition, which, of course, will mean better projection. Would like to read the opinion of others on this matter.

Ire main,

Yours for success,

J. H. JAMES, Mgr.

ANOTHER GOOD OPERATOR DISCOVERED.

Editor The Moving Picture World.

Dear Sir:—Noticing "Similar Complaints" recently published through your columns, I am taking this liberty of writing. While playing in Pittsburgh this last week, I visited a little nickelodeon on Sixth Street—the Bon Ton—and the way the pictures were being run certainly did appeal to me very strongly. There were some clear, steady, flickerless and bright pictures being delivered. I never before saw a more perfectly handled light—not a "puff," "brown corner," "bottom" or a "ghost" did I see the five different times I was in the house.

At first I could not "get next" to the flickerless, soft eye-resting effect of the picture, but on being told that the curtain was of a pea-green color, explained matters. Any operator who can obtain such excellent curtain results is a credit to his profession.

With 8 years' operating experience, I can easily sit in the audience and size up the operator, and I feel safe in saying that Howard L. Butler (I asked his name in view of writing this letter), the operator, is, in my estimation, worthy of the modest, but often used term, A-1 operator.

I am not writing this with the intention of giving this poor unfortunate a case of "swelled head," but only as a fulfilment of the old saying, "Give even the devil his dues."

Yours respectfully. A PIONEER OPERATOR.

FROM A LADY SCENARIO WRITER.

Editor of Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir:—I have noticed in several back numbers of the Moving Picture World how quite a few scenario writers have aired their troubles and grievances. In justice to the film companies, I wish to relate my experience. Six months ago I was seized with the inspiration to write moving picture scenarios. My experience was limited to the sale of three short stories. I was a rank novice in the business, but meant to stick to it until I either found myself unfitted for the work or made a success of it. I sent in my first "scenario." It was returned. Again I attempted to get my work before the producers, for I had been told by several literary people and authors that my work was good. My scenarios came back to me and to my great surprise and indignation I found that they had not even been read. I was very generous in my criticism of the companies and their methods. My next venture was sent to a company in which a certain scenario editor evidently felt sorry for me. He wrote me that my work was good, but that I must first learn how to write scenarios before I expected them to be read. I had been sending them in to the companies in short story form. So much for ignorance. Some will doubtless say that my mistake was inexcusable. I profited by it, for I wrote to my friend, Mis Grace Gauntier, and asked her assistance. She sent me a scenario outline which I studied for three weeks before I attempted another scenario. When it was finished and sent in, three weeks later, I received my first check of $25.00. Sinc then I have devoted my spare time to scenario writing and in the four months that I have learned how to write them, I have netted over $200 clear profit. Besides this I have bought my own typewriter. I review every moving picture magazine and study the synopses, so that I am not sending in anything that has been released. Every company that I have written for has treated me with the utmost consideration. I too thought one of my scenarios had been stolen, but afterward found thot it was merely a peculiar coincidence in the similarity of scenarios. My experience has taught me to "look before I leap." Thanking you for your kindness and wishing you every success, I am, respectfully, one of the little writers. MRS. S. J. N.,

Covington, Kentucky.

ANNOUNCEMENT No. 13

Talk No. 4 on Exclusive Service

THE MAN AND THE MASTER

The One Builds Without Thought, The Other With It

THE picture house standing upon a programme of unrestricted competition in a like degree is weaker than the house which exercises a control over its programme.

An intelligent exhibit is not possible without some form of control; in Picturedom, the force of this statement is shown by the successful exhibitor's efforts to monopolize the programme.

Every successful exhibitor is working for a form of control; if you please to monopolize his programme, his business needs force him to this step. The National is the only programme which meets frankly this necessity—Exclusive Service means the preservation of novelty in novelty, a control of your bill as against your competitor.

The value of publicity in any legitimate enterprise is universally conceded, hence the wider the scope of publicity, the greater its value. In picturedom the exhibitor operating with any other than Exclusive Service is practically dependent upon a six hour poster or lobby display to the idle passerby, in his efforts to increase his steady patronage.

The exhibitor operating with Exclusive Service has open to him every avenue of publicity that the human mind has devised; he becomes Master in a field where the thirst for entertainment keeps pace with the skill of the Master.

Every National Exchange is able to give its patrons thirty days' booking in advance, every bill-board, every show window, every paper in every City, Town, Village and Hamlet in the land (the tried and trusted mediums of publicity) are calling, clamoring, crying for the privilege of placing that thirty days' booking before the public whom you would attract.

Without Exclusive Service advance booking is valueless and likewise impossible.

The true showman understands the force of the opportunity which advance booking develops.

MOVING PICTURE PROGRAMS.

The Moving Picture Program Co., of No. 1416 Broadway, New York, has fitted up a suite of offices for the publication of handsomely illustrated moving picture programs for moving picture theaters. Henry E. Hacker, a well-known publicity representative, has surrounded himself with an efficient staff of assistants, and his work has already received meritorious commendation. The program will be furnished to houses in New York and all other points throughout the country. A unique feature of the program and one of excellent drawing powers for the house is a series of weekly cash prize offerings. The company has already received business recognition among the larger advertisers.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEW ENGLAND.

The Nicholas Power Company, makers of the famous No. 6 moving picture machine, has appointed Mr. F. W. Sweet as special representative for the New England states. Mr. Sweet reports a most important installation of the Number 6. Mr. Claghorn, general secretary of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association, has purchased a No. 6. The machine will be used to give motion picture shows for the United States soldiers at the various forts in Boston Harbor. It is always gratifying to mention these items, as they show that motography is being recognized as a great factor for good. In fact, Mr. Claghorn remarked that the mission of these entertainments was to keep the men away from undesirable resorts.

Manager Frank Altman, formerly of the Scenic Temple, Chelsea, Mass., opened his Apollo Theater, Washington Street, Boston, on Columbus Day, October 12. When visited by the writer, the house was jammed and a good show of Licensed reels was on the program. The house seats about 800, and is brand new from cellar to roof.

On Monday, October 9, the new Olympic Theater, Lynn, Mass., was opened to a business that must be called phenomenal. It is one of the finest and most expensive photoplay theaters in this country. On the opening day, many near-by managers journeyed down to Lynn to see this house. Proprietor Horsman and general manager Arthur Lord, showed their appreciation by taking the "bunch" down to Marblehead, Mass. At the "King Solomon Club," the managers were regaled with a first-class layout, consisting of everything to eat or drink. Among those present were: Frank Howard, formerly proprietor of the Licensed exchange in Boston; Charlie Hodgton, proprietor of the Princess, Wakefield, Mass.; the Ware Brothers, of Beverly, Mass.; Sam Grant, general manager of the Gordon Amusement Company; John Koen, of Salem; Felix Alland and G. I. Appleby, both Boston managers.

The Puritan Theater, Boston, Mass., hopes to open for the first time, Monday, October 23. Mr. Charles Heath is managing the house, which will run Licensed pictures and vaudeville. The Puritan is a cosy theater on Washington Street, near Northampton Street. Mr. Heath is a well-known Boston picture man, and should do well with his project.

Manager John Finn, of the Walnut Hall Theater, Woburn, Mass., is certainly giving a big show for the money. Four reels of Licensed pictures, vaudeville and illustrated songs, make up a pretty good show for five and ten cents, and Manager Finn is making good.

The Scenic Theater, Hartford, Conn., is to move to Asylum Street, and will take a building formerly a church. Strangely enough, the Scenic is moving from a building on Main Street, which was formerly a church. The change in location should prove beneficial, as the new location is more centrally located.

Mr. J. F. Kane, stage manager of the Central Square Theater, Lynn, Mass., playing vaudeville and pictures, was married on October 11, to Miss Eva Corliss. Mr. Kane will remain with the Central Square, and was the recipient of many gifts.

The Fall River, Mass., Lodge of Elks, dedicated their new building, and the vaudeville and picture interests of Fall River, helped things along. A big show of vaudeville and pictures was given, aided by Manager C. E. Cook, L. M. Boas and J. W. Barry, all managing local houses. The entertainment was voted a big success by the Elks.

Manager Arthur G. Pearson, who operates the Odd Fellows Hall, Somerville, Mass., with trust pictures and vaudeville, gave the employees of the Boston office of the General Film Company a big blow-out this week.

Manager H. F. Jackson, of the Bijou Theater, and Cummings Theater, Fitchburg, Mass., has left his theaters in order to attend to some business out of the State.

Manager E. P. McCarthy opened his new photoplay house in Springfield, Mass., and played to big returns. The Star Theater, as it is named, has an excellent situation on Elm and Bartlett Streets, and should prosper.

It is rumored that the Gem Theater, Lynn, Mass., which has been dark for some time, will soon be reopened to the public, with a program of photoplays and illustrated songs exclusively.

Manager Joseph Mack, of the Hub Theater, Boston, Mass., surprised local picture men by jumping his house over to the Licensed side, after being one of the leading exponents of the Sales Company for a long period.

The Thelma Theater, Bangor, Me., will be ready for its opening in about 4 weeks, if present plans prevail. This house is located on Exchange Street, and will run Licensed pictures and vaudeville. Mr. Pope D. McKinnon will run the house, and is also the sole proprietor. Mr. McKinnon has an up-to-date house and should prosper, as competition is not too strong in Bangor.

John L. Fernando has had the plans for his new photoplay theater, Waterbury, Conn., approved, and expects to start building immediately. The house will seat about 400, and will be fireproof.

During the week of October 16, Dante's Inferno was exhibited at the Cambridge Theater, Cambridge, Mass. Business was unusually brisk, as it always is during presentations of the wonderful Inferno pictures.

A new picture theater is promised at 530 Dudley Street, Dorchester, Mass. Mr. John Williams will own and manage the house.

The tenth week of the exhibition of the Kinemacolor pictures of the coronation has been reached at Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass. No abatement of interest has been noticed, and it is expected that the pictures will be seen in Boston for some time to come.

Columbus Day, October 12, proved itself a winner for local picture houses, all of which reported the very best of pictures.

As there is some controversy regarding the value of using subjects of over 1,000 feet in length, the writer inquired of Mr. Lowrie, of the Beacon Theater, Boston, as to how he found the "Two Orphans," a Selig release. Manager Lowrie remarked that he was well satisfied and that in the future he will exhibit all excellent reels regardless of length. The "Two Orphans" made good in the Beason, which seats 800. This is pretty conclusive evidence that 2,000 and 3,000 feet subjects are welcomed by exhibitors.

Putnam, Conn., is the possessor of a new theater devoted to photoplays, that is one of the most up-to-date in that State. The house has been named the Orpheum.

The Acme Theater, Eastport, Me., is dividing its time between vaudeville and pictures and regular road attractions. Manager W. A. Shea is finding that the photoplays are drawing very well at the Acme, which is a first-class house in all respects.

It is rumored that Messrs. Hickey and Stockbridge, of Needham, Mass., are about to erect a photoplay theater in that town.

Mr. Louis M. Boas, general manager of the Marcus Loen enterprises in Fall River, Mass., namely the Savoy, Premier and Bijou, has again left here for Berlin, Germany. Mr. Boas spent the spring and summer "across the pond," in the interests of the Marcus Loen people, and only just returned home. However, he was called back, but it is expected that Manager Boas will return soon.

The Morton Picture Theater, New Haven, Conn., has had its first opening, and reports big business. The house is located centrally on the corner of Church and Congress Streets. The house is first class and entirely fireproof.

The Keith Theater, Campello, Mass., is now nearly completed, and expects to open early in November. With a seating capacity of 1,000, and a good bill of Licensed pictures and vaudeville, there is no reason why the Keith should not prove a success, as competition will not be strong. The house is new throughout.

On Friday evening, October 20, the Cummings Theater, Fitchburg, Mass., H. F. Jackson, manager, exhibited moving pictures of the Rainey-Follette activities. These are the pictures taken by Mr. Paul Rainey during his recent arctic expedition. With prices of from fifteen cents to fifty cents, business was good, and Manager Jackson again showed himself an astute manager.

Mr. C. L. Benson, who is connected with the Premier and Bijou Theaters, Fall River, Mass., is on a honeymoon trip, which takes the bridal couple to the West.

Messrs. Howard and Horsman, of the Olympic Theater, Lynn, Mass., recently presented their general manager, Mr. Arthur Lord, with a solid gold watch and a Masonic charm. The presentation speech was made by Mr. "Mike" R. Sheedy, who came over from New York for that purpose. The excellent opening of the new Olympic is the talk of Lynn picture interests.

Mr. F. F. Proctor, who was contesting with Mr. B. F. Keith for the Keith-Proctor Fifth Avenue Theater, was given the decision by the Portland, Me., courts.

Mr. James H. Donovan, who was a partner in the Woonsocket, R. I., Opera House, together with Mike R. Sheedy, has sold his share to Mr. Sheedy and has also given up the position he held as resident manager. Mr. Sheedy is now the sole lessee, and has installed Mr. G. E. Hill, a well-known theatrical man, as resident manager.

Mr. Tom Hennessey, the genial manager of the Theater Voyons, Lowell, Mass., did a big business with "The Two Orphans." "Colleen Bawn" was also used by the Voyons, and Manager Hennessey remarked himself to be a firm believer in two and three-reel subjects.

William Manning, connected with the Savoy Theater, Fall River, Mass., has returned to his duties after a trip with his bride.

The World in Motion Theater, Pittsfield, Mass., on Sunday, Oct. 22, gave benefit performances for the building fund of the Pittsfield Hebrew Alliance. Sunday, October 29, will witness a repetition of these benefit performances, which consist of Independent pictures and illustrated songs.

"Pop" Lubin was in Boston recently on private business, but found time to drop into the offices of the General Film Company, where he chatted for a moment with the local managers who were about the office. Mr. Lubin was told by the managers that his product had advanced in great fashion. It is the truth to say that more first-run Lubin reels are now exhibited in Boston than ever before.

The construction of automobiles was shown by 6,500 feet of moving pictures at the Clayton and Craig schools, Boston. These reels are very clear and should prove of great value to all interested in the industry of automobiles.

The Dreamland Theater, Boston, closed its doors Monday night, October 16, for extensive alterations and repairs. The house will reopen nearly brand new. Competition in the vicinity of the Dreamland has increased of late, and the best is needed for success.

The Williamson and Patch Amusement Company will build a first-class photoplay theater on School Street, Concord, N. H.

Another theater is soon to be erected in Boston. It will replace a building at 19 to 25 Harrison Avenue, between Essex and Beach Streets. Plans for the proposed house from C. H. Blackall, the well-known architect, have been accepted, and the foundation will be laid beginning early next month. The property is owned by the Ames estate, and was formerly occupied by a Chinese restaurant and stores. A seating capacity of 2,000 is planned for the new house. It will have an entrance on Beach Street. There have been several Boston picture men after this property, but the writer has been requested to withold the names of the owners, which will be made known soon. Vaudeville and pictures will be the policy

HENRY.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Representatives of organized labor have arranged for the exhibition in this city of the film, "A Martyr to His Cause." This depicts the scenes attending the arrest of John J. McNamara, secretary of the International Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, who was to be placed on trial October 11, at Los Angeles, Cal., for complicity in dynamite outrages. Half of the proceeds are to be given to the McNamara defense fund, and a number of labor unions are buying tickets in $50 and $100 lots.

F. J. Rembusch, George Rembusch and Grace Rembusch, have organized the Rembusch Amusement Company, at Shelbyville, and will conduct a moving picture theater in that city. The company has been incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $5,000.

The business of the Atlas Amusement Company in this city, has just been incorporated, with an authorized capitalization of $10,000. R. G. Hesseldenz, G. G. Schmidt and Mary E. Hesseldenz, are the stockholders and directors. The company operates a moving picture theater, and during the summer months, a large airdome.

Martin J. Hyland, superintendent of police, has ruled that theaters may not give performances on Sunday, because there is a city ordinance expressly forbidding theatrical performances. He has ruled also, that the Sunday performances at moving picture theaters will not be interfered with. He says the only way these could be stopped would be under the law forbidding one following his usual avocation on Sunday. He says he does not propose to begin enforcing the law in question against moving picture theaters, because it would be discriminating in favor of others who follow usual avocations on Sunday.

There has been introduced in the city council, by Councilman George B. Rubens, an ordinance regulating moving picture theaters and airdomes. It is provided the latter may be located only outside the fire limits and that the walls must be of incombustible material and seats fastened to the ground. The license fee for moving picture theaters and airdomes is increased from $25 to $100 a year, while machine operators must pass an examination before the building inspector, electrical inspector and president of the city council, for which a fee of $5 will be charged. Walls of moving picture theaters must be of noncombustible material, and auditoriums, foyers and exits of fireproof material. Besides the main entrance, there must be an exit for each 200 of seating capacity. Aisles must be three feet wide and rows of seats thirty-one inches apart, measured from back to back of seats. The seats must be eighteen inches wide, and fastened firmly to the floor. Standing in aisles is prohibited, as is the use of chairs or stools in the aisles. An important feature of the ordinance is that vaudeville features are to be permitted, provided curtains, scenery, wings or other combustible properties are not used.

An unusual case is on trial in the superior court, where William Fox is asking $10,000 damages from Albert Worm because the latter permits a moving picture theater to be operated in Worm's property. Fox alleges the moving picture theater damages his property. This is the first suit of its kind ever brought in this city.

Dallas Dyler has purchased, for $18,000, the property at 722-730 Massachusetts Avenue, on which he will erect a modern moving picture theater building, at a cost of about $15,000.

The Moving Picture Managers' Association is preparing a moving picture theater ordinance which will be submitted to the city council, with a recommendation that it be passed, in the near future. Among other things, the ordinance will provide that light vaudeville features may be given in moving picture theaters. At the present time vaudeville is prohibited in such places, on the ground that vaudeville constitutes a theatrical performance, and that a theatrical performance may be given only in a building erected according to city ordinances for theatrical purposes.

There is considerable agitation just now against overcrowding in moving picture theaters, ordinances providing that aisles must not be obstructed in any manner, including persons standing. Inspectors of the city building department and State inspection department, are visiting moving picture theaters each night, trying to obtain evidence against overcrowding. The advisory commission o Mayor Shank has also adopted a resolution ailing on the mayor to see that the ordinances in his respect are enforced.

George W. Hannaum, Mrs. J. W. Reubelt and Dorothy Donnelle have recently organized the Go. en Gate Theater Company in this city, and will establish a moving picture and vaudeville theater, to be known as the Golden Gate, in South Illinois Street, near Washington Street. The company has been incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $9,000

William Tucker, who for some time has operated two moving picture theaters in Shelbyville, has sold them to Russell Forster, of that city, and A. K. Kelsey, of Muncie. Mr. Tucker is looking for an opening in Indianapolis.

A moving picture show is being given on Sunday, at B. F. Keith's which, during the week, is a vaudeville house. A part of the Sunday proceeds are given to charity.

CLARENCE L. CUMMINS.

LOUISVILLE.

The Novelty, on Fourth Avenue, between Green and Walnut Streets, is being completed as fast as possible. With M. Switow at its head, one of the finest theaters in Kentucky will begin operations. The Novelty is intended to live up to its name in the smallest particular, as the traditional last word in photoplay houses and their maintenance will be incorporated into it. It will represent an investment of about $30,000. House Manager Jacobstein, of the Crystal, another Falls Cities house, said that the new establishment will probably be opened during the first week in October.

The Olympic Theater has just been completed at Brook and Market Streets, and is now doing business on a large scale. The house seats about 500 persons, and embodies the latest and best ideas in theater construction, having half a dozen commodious exits, despite the fact that it was remodeled from an old building. The auditorium is square-formed and the seats have been set in raised tiers so that every occupant is afforded a clear view of the mirror screen. The exterior of the theater is handsomely finished in fresco, studded with half-hidden electric lights, the outside color scheme being green and yellow, with a big crescent-shaped electric sign, reading, "Olympic," swung across the vestibule entrance. The Olympic Amusement Company is the owner of the new East Market Street house, which cost about $15,000.

Max I. Greenstein, a well-known Louisville attorney, announced last week that he has secured a long time lease on a building at 226 West Market Street, in the heart of the retail shopping district, which will be converted into a handsome moving picture theater in the near future. James H. Button & Company, a realty concern, assisted in securing the lease, and it is the purpose of Mr. Greenstein to erect a model photoplay house, which will be in turn leased and operated by a syndicate of Eastern moving picture men. Joseph & Joseph, architects in the Commercial Building, have been engaged to draft plans for the new theater, and the injunction of Mr. Greenstein is that no expense be spared in preparing an establishment embodying the most approved details of beauty and comfort. The plans for the theater will be in shape for the work to proceed in the near future, and work upon the house will be rushed to completion.

The Mary Anderson Theater, one of the finest houses in the South, and possibly the most popular vaudeville house in Kentucky, started its season last week, under the management of the B. F. Keith syndicate. The regular vaudeville bill is wound up with two reels of Keith's Special Daylight Motion Pictures, which are proving to be a magnificent wind-up for a high-class Show. The pictures are thrown on a mirror screen, the necessity of darkening the interior being obviated.

Irvin Simon, manager of the Princess concern, went to New York City last week for a fortnight's vacation. Incidental to his vacation Mr. Simon proposes to look up some new ideas in photoplay and vaudeville acts for the Princess patronage locally.

The repairs on The Broadway Theater, owned by the Broadway Amusement Company, which was damaged considerably by fire about ten days ago, have been completed and the only remaining task is the installation of a new and larger mirror screen, which will be completed by the end of this week. Joseph Steurle, a member of the company, has returned from a business trip to Chicago.

The Broadway Amusement Company has secured state rights for the exhibition of Pawnee Bill's has sent them en tour through Kentucky with great success. The reels are now on circuit through the Bluegrass portion of the State, Lexington, Paris, Versailles, etc., and are scoring a big hit wherever they are produced.

A move toward a higher standard of excellence in moving pictures, putting them on an educational instead of a sensational basis, has been started at Lexington, Ky.

Louis Hayes, proprietor of a prominent picture show house in Henderson, Ky., developed the truism last week, that the man behind the wickerwork in the box-office, often gets a lot more than he expects. Mr. Hayes was disposing of pasteboards at the show one day last week, when someone passed an unusual half dollar to him in exchange for a couple of tickets. The coin was undoubtedly good, but its date, 1853, caused Mr Hayes to pander and institute research. He was yesterday advised by the American Numismatic Society, that the 1853 half-dollar is worth $2,500 in coin of the day, as there are only two halves of this coinage in existence, one being possessed by a grocer of Los Angeles, Cal. The value of the coin does not exist in its unusual date, but in the fact that but two specimens of that coinage are in existence.

Arthur Bloomfield, of Winchester, Ky., is preparing to invest about $7,000 in an up-to-date picture theater, having leased a suitable building for his enterprise. Plans for the new house are now being prepared, and it will be erected as soon as possible.

Dr. Fraser Williams, and others, of Lafayette, Ky., have announced their intention of establishing a handsome moving picture theater in Cadiz, Ky. Arrangements are now being made to secure a suitable structure and the show will be in operation before long.

State Labor Inspector Pat Filburn swore out warrants last week against James Bentley, manager of the Savoy Theater, on the Bardstown road, for employing Amy Leonard, 12 years of age, at an amateur performance; against J. M. Wentzell, proprietor of the Norman Theater, for employing little Nellie McGill as an actress between film displays and against the parents of the children involved in the case for permitting their offspring to work while under the legal age limit. The point which is to be threshed out by the picture men at the trial of the cases is whether, according to interpretation of the Kentucky child-labor statute, the award of a cash prize in an amateur theatrical contest to a child below the labor age limit constitutes employment of that child or not. There are several unusually precocious youngsters in Louisville whose parents take great pride in their histrionic ability and enter them in every possible amateur contest. The picture show managers want to know whether the winning of prizes offered for superiority in such entertainments is against the law or not.

A fire which is believed to have been caused by crossed electric wires in the scenery loft last week damaged the Broadway Theater, at 814 East Broadway, to the extent of $1,000. The blaze started, luckily, when no one was in the theater and consequently no one was injured. Stage settings, picture machinery and one of the biggest mirror screens in the city, 12 by 16 feet in dimension, were destroyed along with a portion of the rear of the structure.

According to Mr. Joseph Steurle, work of construction upon the handsome Ideal Theater, which will supplant the airdome now in operation at Twenty-third and Market Streets, will be commenced about November 1 by the Broadway men and it is expected that the theater will be ready for business within sixty days afterward.

L. J. Dittmar, of the Majestic Amusement Company, and president of the Kinemacolor Company, which holds State rights for the special Coronation films in Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky, has started upon the third highly successful week's run of the colored Coronation views at the Shubert Masonic Theater in this city. During State Fair week the wonderfully colored films drew capacity houses at every performance.

The Hipp Theater Company filed articles of incorporation last week at Jackson, Ky., its purpose being to establish and maintain moving picture houses in the eastern Kentucky city. The new concern is capitalized at $6,500, with the following incorporators: J. E. Stivers, S. J. Crawford and T. M. Davidson.

Ernest Peach and Sam Buchanan, of Nashville, Tenn., have purchased the People's Theater building at Henderson, Ky., and are installing necessary equipment for an up-to-date moving picture show, which will be put into operation in the near future.

Julius DeRose, who for the past two years has operated a modern picture house in Pineville, Ky., has entered into partnership with J. D. Holderman, superintendent of the Pineville Lighting Company, last week to install and operate a picture show in the Pineville Skating Rink building. The project will be put through as soon as possible.

C. O. Brown, of the Taylor & Brown Amusement Company, of Big Stone Gap, Va., recently leased a two-story brick building in Middlesboro, Ky., and is having plans drawn to remodel the structure into an up-to-date moving picture theater. Every modern convenience will be provided, and work upon the house will be rushed so that it can be opened to the public as soon as possible.

Manager A. E. Bleich, of the Airdome Picture Theater, in Hopkinsville, Ky., sold one of the Airdome picture machines last week to a company in Lafayette, Ky., who are planning the immediate establishment of a moving picture emporium. Mr. Bleich intends to procure a larger and more improved line of equipment to supply the demand for high-grade service at the Hopkinsville Theater.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

In the Northwest.

The congregation of the Sunday school at Plymouth Congregational church, Seattle, Washington, has decided to install a moving picture show, to be used in the opening exercises.

Moving pictures as an aid in social center work in school building, were endorsed by George H. Elwell, president of the Minneapolis Board of Education, before the Eleventh Ward Improvement Association. Well selected films, he declared, given at these social meetings, not only would cultivate a taste for better things, but eventually would bring a higher standard of pictures to the theaters. Several shows visited by him, he stated, had not a single fault, but others were too dark and offered suggestive pictures.

William C. Schmidt, of St. Paul, Minnesota, chanced to be in Monroe, Wisconsin, when a train was wrecked near that place, and secured a long strip of film, showing the results of the disaster.

Having a slide "Keep Your Seats: No Danger," within reach of the operator is said to have prevented a panic in the Madison, Wisconsin, theater. Some one tipped over a fire extinguisher at the front of the stage, it is reported, and alarm was given, but the slide was slapped in and order restored.

"Stage robbery, train robbery, another stage robbery, another train robbery and the Northfield bank robbery, follow in rapid succession. The chase by the posse out of Northfield, looks as though the pictures had been taken on the half-mile track at the state fair grounds. The women, who are made to stand with uplifted hands while the train robbery is in progress, show that the styles of millinery have not changed nearly so much as the modiste's assert they have. Altogether, besides being bad morally, it is a cheap and poorly made film."

At the instigation of the Women's Club of Faribault, Minn., the mayor and police stopped the show of the Jesse James pictures.

Alderman Carl Minkley, of Milwaukee, Wis., has introduced an ordinance into the City Council barring children of school age from attending moving picture shows between the hours of 8 A. M. and 4 P. M. on school days. The suggestion came from a truant officer, who declared that many children stayed out of school to see the films.

The ordinance pertaining to theaters, including fixing of license fees, probably will be revised at Minneapolis, Minn. The fire department committee wishes to be made a member of the committee dealing with moving picture theaters and the city engineering department believes it should have something to say regarding their construction.

No moving picture advertising was carried in the Model edition of the Bremerton Washington Search Light, which Rev. R. Livingstone Wolfe was to edit for a week. In explaining his objections, Mr. Wolfe declared that the straining of the eyes to watch every movement of the pictures on the screen injured the retina and the effect is exceptionally bad on the eyes of young children. He declared that the majority of the scenarios depicted dime novel tales and that many people who would not continue to look on the inside covers of a "Diamond Dick," are regular patrons of the picture playhouses.

John Collier, before the first annual Conference of Civil and Social Development, at Madison, Wis., October 26, will take the position that it is as absurd for a public school not to take advantage of the motion picture improvements as it would be for them not to use the products of the printing press.

Captain George Sinclair, of the North Side Police Station, at Minneapolis, Minn., allowed the "James Boys" pictures to be shown only one night at the Northern Theater, 404 Twentieth Avenue, N. The Minneapolis Journal has looked over the dust-biting film as follows: "From the time the gang forms until the 'last stand' is made, the film shows a waste of gunpowder that would stock the arsenal of a third-rate nation. By actual count thirty 'bit the dust.' A section of the film is labeled, 'even the outlaw enjoys recreation,' and then follows a bar-room dancing scene. The almost numberless changes of horses and the fact that the gang goes through it all without even a change of shirts, tends to show that the strenuous life is not entirely of this day.

In the Southwest.

Richard A. Healy, proprietor of the new Healy house, at Fort Worth, Texas, is said to have canceled the films, "The James Boys in Missouri," when he learned they did not get by the Dallas Board of Censors.

In the Southwest, moving pictures seeking to prevent and eliminate tuberculosis, will be shown at an exhibit of the Committee on Prevention of Tuberculosis and the United Charities, at the State Fair, at Dallas, Texas.

An ordinance has been introduced in the city council of San Antonio, Texas, regulating music in moving picture shows. No musical instruments must be played at the entrance, in the foyer, or within thirty feet inside the lobby, or on the sidewalk adjoining the theater. No loud music may be played, no loud or vociferous language is permitted. A fine of $5 to $200 is prescribed. The ordinance has been held up.

Under the State law of Kansas, mayors are permitted to act as censors of pictures.

A. H. Simmons, of Houston, Texas, is planning a $60,000 theater on North Broadway, in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

What the Sunday New York "World" said about pictures projected at the Budget Exhibit by

"STANDARD" No. 4

"Don't leave the exhibition without visiting the moving picture show. It's free and it's marvelous. It's wonderful. It's real." "Standard" No. 4 Machine and a "Mirroroid" curtain are being used there. The combination is wonderful.

This is the second consecutive year the Authorities of New York City have decided on and used a "Standard" at their show.

It is licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Co., is guaranteed absolutely and will outwear any two other machines ever invented. What more could an exhibitor ask for?

FIREPROOF and FLICKERLESS

AMERICAN MOVING PICTURE MACHINE CO., 101 Beekman St., New York

The New State Amusement Company has been incorporated at Oklahoma City, Okla., with a capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are: Ben Greenhood, A. Levine, A. J. Meininger, all of Oklahoma City.

Moving picture shows are a feature of the miniature Trinity Play Park in Dallas, Tex., as shown in connection with the Child Welfare exhibit under the auspices of the Texas Congress of Mothers at the State Fair at Dallas. The Texas Congress and the United Charities also conducted an educational moving picture show during the fair. The best ways of prevention and cure of tuberculosis and methods for obtaining pure milk and ridding the community of flies and disease were shown.

Twelve moving picture shows in Dallas, Tex., were ordered re wired by the city electrician.

The Scout Younger Film Producing Company has been incorporated at Shawnee with a capital stock of $3,000. The incorporators are: Scout Younger, Tulsa; L. C. Humphreys and D. C. Burkett, Shawnee.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

Manager Gus Cook, of the Star Theater, St. Charles, Ill., recently turned over his theater for one night to the St. Charles boat club, a benefit performance. The regular moving picture program was supplemented by musical features and local cartoon slides.

Fred E. Carpenter and others plan to erect a $100,000 vaudeville theater on North Main Street, Rockford, Ill., it is reported.

Manager Alger, of the Crystal Theater, at Paxton, Ill., recently offered the Paxton band as an attraction. Locating a band at a small theater ordinarily is a problem, but here the seats were arranged in the rear. A new operating room is being built in the Crystal, the lobby redecorated and the ventilation plant improved.

A movement is said to be on foot in Peoria, Ill., to reduce the annual moving picture license from $200 to $50. A resolution was introduced before the city council asking that the city attorney prepare a new amendment to the ordinance regulating places of amusement. This change, it is said, contemplates licensing small theaters according to their seating capacity. The fee recently was raised from $50 to $200.

R. S. Hopper, manager of the Lyric Theater, at Freeport, Ill., has purchased a theater at Forrester, Ill., and will run pictures.

Manager W. M. Sauvage, of the Lyric, at Albion, Ill., has installed a mirror screen.

Litchfield, Ill., claims the distinction of having a one-armed bill poster and moving picture machine operator. C. E. Gilpin posts bills in the daytime and a night has charge of the machine in a Mount Olive, Ill., picture show.

Two ten-year-old lads of Elgin, Ill., held up a girl, according to the local papers. By the time it got into the telegraph news, moving pictures were blamed and it went the rounds of the State. This leads the Kewanee Star Courier to remark, editorially: "Of course, the pictures may have been to blame, in a measure. And it is to be hoped that by and by the general quality of the pictures may be improved, so that old and young may learn something useful from them and may get some real benefit. On the other hand, perhaps a seance in the wood-shed would make a still deeper impression upon the two young robbers, than would any pictures that were ever projected upon a screen. And after that seance, they would be perfectly immune and could be exposed to pictures of robbers without the slightest danger of catching the disease."

A special committee from the Jerseyville Illinois city council visited the building, which is being remodeled by Zed Reddish, and disapproved of the plan to build an addition of wood and the new structure will be of either granite blocks or brick. The committee also visited the airdome and found that the girders in the roof were in a very dangerous condition and declared that they should be removed.

The Powell-Croak Amusement Company, of Oklahoma City, has been incorporated. Capital, $10,000. Incorporators: B. H. Powell, Edward Croak, and Mary L. Powell, all of Oklahoma City.

The Panama Amusement Company, of St. Louis, Mo., has been incorporated. Capital stock, fully paid, $30,000. Incorporators: G. W. J. L. and F. J. Hollocher, G. W. Jackson, H. G. Krull, A. T. Weber, William Gotch, 35 shares each: D. Morehead, 5 shares; A. F. Weber, S. S. Slater, 50 shares; to conduct and operate music halls and places of amusement.

Fire Prevention Association, according to press reports, Russell Moore, chairman of the committee, and deputy inspector of the Michigan inspection bureau, reported to have found considerable fault with the operating rooms. Openings for pictures and the operators' lookout were declared to be lacking automatic shutters, as also were the doors leading into the room, and new booths were found with ventilating apparatus through which smoke and vapor may pass in case of fire.

Charles Yates, who owns the airdome at Taylorville, Ill., has rented the Brockamp Building and will use it for a moving picture show.

The Moline Amusement Company, of Moline, Ill., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,400 to operate places of amusement. The incorporators are W. J. Talty, L. K. Cleaveland and R. I. Stanley.

A. Padevic has leased Baldwin Park, at Quincy, Ill., for three years and will have charge of all amusement features.

P. K. White has repurchased the two Collins Street theaters, Rexstone I and Rexstone II in Joliet, Ill., from Eugene Vasevery.

James J. Moran and others are building a new vaudeville theater at Water and Front Streets, Decatur, Ill.

The Illinois Electrical Advertising Company has been formed by four young men of Freeport, Ill., and will make a tour showing moving pictures and advertisements of local merchants.

Mrs. P. G. Welting, of Worcester, N. Y., will erect a $10,000 opera house at Toledo, Iowa.

The Vaudette, South Fifth Street, Springfield, Ill., W. W. Watts, proprietor, is making more seating room by adding overhanging balconies on both sides. This place is enjoying an unusually good business.

J. J. Reilly has resigned his position as superintendent for the Hapgood Plow Company, at Alton, Ill., and will devote his full time to managing the Princess Theater, a moving picture house.

William Peterson, son of a moving picture man of Bloomington, Ill., took one of his father's machines and films and gave four shows at the high school for the benefit of the school publication. The films shown were "The Freedom of Slaves in the South." "Enoch Arden," and "Maude Muller."

J. H. Trowbridge, Lebanon, Ind., although 82 years old, never saw a show until he witnessed moving pictures of the work on the Panama Canal.

Sorority birls at the University of Iowa will not be allowed to accept invitations from young men to attend theaters and moving picture shows on Sunday nights. Neither will they be allowed to go on Wednesday nights, unless there is an unusually good attraction.

Conrad Striewing has purchased the Nasawan photoplay theater, at Decatur, Ill., and will eliminate the illustrated song, adding another film. He has taken a five year lease on the building at Water and William Streets. The name of the place will be changed to the Crystal. Marion Slater is the new operator, succeeding Martin Pensinger, who has taken a position in Omaha. Morton P. Harvey, who sold the Nasawan, will now have exclusive charge of the corner where he will sing.

PITTSBURG.

At a meeting of the Exhibitors' League it was decided to retain Mr. Jos. Thompson, of Beaver Falls, Pa., as attorney. Also to commission Mr. Fred J. Herrington, the president of the organization, in the double capacity of president and state organizer.

Under the auspices of the Exhibitors' League, a demonstration of the comparative safeness of present day moving picture houses was given at the Coliseum Theater, on Southern Avenue. At this demonstration, a whole reel of film was burned before the gaping eyes of more than 500 spectators. Mr. Herrington, the owner and manager of this photoplay emporium, invited the burgess of the borough and surrounding boroughs and the council of the boroughs, and it is gratifying to say that all were satisfied by the demonstration, except, of course, a limited number of the juvenile audience, who came in to see a fearful explosion, but stayed to see only smoke. It is expected by the League to demonstrate another exhibition of this sort at the Olympic Theater, on Fifth Avenue, in the near future, for the benefit of the Mayor of Pittsburgh, the Council and the newspaper men.

Mr. G. W. Smith, proprietor and manager of Smith's Theater, at 4909 Second Avenue, is offering his services as constable to Hazelwood, and is respectfully soliciting votes. Smith's Theater, by the way, is a dandy little house. The seating capacity is about 270. The projection equipment meets with all the requirements of the law and good projection. Two reels of pictures, an orchestra, and a really good illustrated song by Mr. Jimmie Smith, with now and then an accompaniment by his sister, form the program for a nickel.

Two moving picture lenses were stolen from the operating room of The Minerva Theater, at No. 19 Fifth Avenue, and the management would greatly appreciate information of the identity of anyone trying to sell these lenses to an exhibitor. Any clue concerning the recovery of these lenses will be appreciated also by the Pittsburgh Photoplay Co., at 412 Ferry Street, or the Moving Picture Exhibitors League of Pennsylvania, at Roberts Building, Pittsburgh.

This month there have been three new additions to the Pittsburgh moving picture circles, namely: The Doris Theater, 827 Wood Street, Wilkinsburg, Mr. J. W. Hunter, Mgr.; The Pitt Theater, at 6012 Penn Avenue, E. E., where the old Lyric Theater used to be. Mr. Mills is the manager of the Union Theater, on Smithfield Street, near Seventh Avenue: The Union Amusement Co., managers and owners. All these theaters have flocked to the Independent standards, using Pittsburgh Photoplay service.

Mr. Leigh Hunt has been promoted as chief shipper at the Ind. Film Exchange since Mr. Fred Lacy has severed his connection with this concern. Mr. Lacy will keep himself in trim in the capacity of the manager of his two theaters. The Peerless Film Exchange, consider themselves very fortunate since the addition of Mr. Charlie Donahue to the staff as night shipper. Both the Independent and Photoplay offices have undergone various improvements in both system and personnel.

The Kalem three-reel "Colleen Bawn" was exhibited to a very large and audience at the Arcade Theater on Fifth Avenue.

Mr. Demas, of the Minerva Theater, on Fifth Avenue, has shown himself a very enterprising manager in every way. His wide-awakeness was shown when he exhibited as a feature, "The Rosary," on the same week the theatrical show of the same name was being shown at the Lyceum Theater.

The announcement that the Men and Religion Movement in Moline, Ill., was after 2,000 signatures to the petition asking that the moving picture shows be closed on Sunday developed that the public has an interest in the photoplay. Rev. C. A. Lincoln, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Moline, visited every one of the theaters and declared that he had not seen one single film that he would class as unclean. He admitted that he found some things that convinced him there was room for improvement and some pictures that might be omitted with advantage to morals, but none he saw had a tendency toward immorality. "The shows seemed to be composed of an average lot of films, too. It is said one or two of the films shown appear to be uplifting and helpful. Most of the moving picture dramas have the right moral emphasis. The love scenes are somewhat too numerous, possibly, and some of them are somewhat silly, but there was nothing really offensive. Among the educative films displayed was one showing the real life activities of the Boy Scouts of America. They were shown at work in the woods, giving first aid to the injured, saving near drowned, marching and practicing signal work. Some pictures contain valuable educational features."

Commenting on this the Moline Mail says:

"But Mr. Lincoln to the contrary notwithstanding, parents should see to it that their children are accompanied by persons in whom they can place their confidence when they attend these shows. It is not believed there is an immoral show given in any of the houses of Rock Island or Moline, at the same time no one knows where the suggestiveness of some of the films may lead. When children are accompanied by their parents to the pictures the evil tendency loses its effect. No one can be too careful in guarding their children."

George A. Dehl, said to be a pioneer moving picture house manager in Moline, promised to present $500 to the city hospital if he could not produce films that have the best sermons beat. "I make the proposition to the clergy," he said, "that they bring the Rev. Billy Sunday to Moline and have him preach the best sermon in the list, and that they bring a great temperance lecturer here and instruct him to make his best effort. When they are through and departed, I will put on two reels of film in my moving picture house, and if the public does not vote one of them a greater temperance sermon than the speaker delivered, and the other a greater religious appeal than the address by the Rev. Mr. Sunday, I will give $500 to charity—the city hospital, for instance. The temperance picture I refer to is 'The Drunkard's Reformation,' the religious picture is entitled 'The Resurrection.' The former is a great moral lesson, the latter is founded on the book by the immortal Count Leo Tolstoi."

Other moving picture managers in Moline declare that they are not relying entirely upon the National Board of Censorship, but are watching closely local sentiment and cutting out portions of film which might prove objectionable.

One manager who said that he had cut out two hundred feet was asked by a reporter the nature of the pictures. The manager replied: "The pictures were those of some Arabian women dancing in their native costumes, and, though, such dances are often seen at high class opera and in first class theaters, I removed the objectionable portion rather than have any question raised."

A WORD IN SEASON TO EXHIBITORS

The New Feature Film, consisting of two or more reels, goes much better with a lecture. The sound of a pleasing and trained human voice is doubly welcome when it helps your patrons to understand better and to enjoy more. In some places the lecture will be a novelty. The feature film, being a novelty too, needs both introduction and explanation and the lecture will supply both very acceptably. Wherever tried the lecture has been found a ready means of attracting the best class of patrons and putting more money into the box office. I supply—without extra charge—advertising copy for the press or for special folders, telling all about your feature film and the popularity of the lecture. It makes good advertising. Below is a list of feature films, on which I lecture or for which I will supply printed lectures at reasonable rates:

"The Passion Play" (Pathe) in 3, 4 and 5 reels.
"The Inferno of Dante" (Milano Films), 5 reels.
"The Crusaders or Jerusalem Delivered" (World's Best Film Co.), 4 reels.
"The Two Orphans" (Selig), 3 reels.
"Foul Play" (Edison), 3 reels (full lecture printed in Moving Picture World).
"Enoch Arden" (Biograph), 2 reels.

Coming great features are Pathe's "Hunchback of Notre Dame," adapted from the story of Victor Hugo; Milton's "Paradise Lost," 3 reels, by the Vitagraph Co.; "Zigomar," 3 reels, a very fine Eclair production; "The Black Arrow," by the Edison Company, adapted from the story of Robert Louis Stevenson; "The Discovery of America," by the Selig Company. I am booking engagements for these features now.

W. STEPHEN BUSH—Moving Picture World

Licensed Film Stories.

ESSANAY.

HE FOUGHT FOR THE U. S. A. (Nov. 7).—The scene of this story is laid on a plantation of a wealthy Southerner in Virginia. Frank Langdon, a young Southerner, is in love with Virginia Randolph, while his brother Bob, is infatuated with Virginia's sister. War is declared between the North and South, and while Bob and his father are faithful to the South, Frank declares he will fight for the North. Branded a traitor by Virginia, Frank joins the Northern army. Later, made a Lieutenant, he meets his brother on the battle field, saves the latter's life, but pursues him with a squad of foot soldiers to the old Southern home, near which the engagement took place. Virginia hides Bob and when Frank enters she begs him to spare the younger brother. Frank finally consents to do so, but under the impression that Virginia loves Bob, writes his former sweetheart a note, in which he expresses his hope that she and Bob will be happy together. Not until after the war, when Frank returns, does he learn that Virginia has always loved him, while Bob has become engaged to Virginia's sister.

SHOWING UNCLE (Nov. 9).—Uncle Bill comes to the city and is lavishly entertained by his young city nephew, Charley. Uncle is very much impressed by the greatness of the city and with the myriad of its inhabitants. They are discussing curiosity when Charley, just to show his uncle how curious city people are, tells him to cross the street and he will lay on the sidewalk as though dead. It is soon circulated that a crazy man is loose and what Charley gets from the crowd and the cops is sufficient to land him in the hospital and to swear off all public demonstrations in the future.

GEE WHIZ (Nov. 9).—Jim Souser's wife is in the country and Jim, as may be imagined, has made the best of her absence and has had a right royal time. One morning after an all night party in the front parlor, Jim receives a telegram saying his wife will be back some time during the day. Jim then remembers all the things he has and hasn't done since she left and finds that the ferns have dried up to tinder and the goldfish in the waterless jar crumble to powder in his hands. He then has a time in getting duplicates of the ferns and the goldfish, but wifey never suspects when she inspects the house.

THE EMPTY SADDLE (Nov. 10).—When war is declared between the North and South, John bids his sweetheart Mary good-bye and goes to the front, where he is given scout duty. John carries with him a small locket given by Mary, and in a skirmish with a number of Confederate scouts, the locket saves his life. The next day in battle, John, riding his faithful horse Billy, is mortally wounded in saving the flag from the Confederates. Alone on the battlefield, old Billy guarding over him, John detaches the locket from his neck and slipping it on Billy's bridle rein, tels him to go to Mary. Mary alone, waiting in anxiety to hear from John, is on her knees praying when the old horse runs up. The empty saddle and the locket tell the story and the girl, again dropping on her knees, murmurs, "Thy will be done."

THE GIRL BACK EAST (Nov. 11).—Tom Gray and Jack King are prospecting together in the West. One day they receive a letter from Dorris Dean, a girl whom they both love, asking one of them to come to her assistance, as she is in trouble. They toss a coin to see who shall go, and Jack wins, but later, knowing that Tom will never recover from the blow, he leaves a note telling the other that he will give up all claims to the girl and that Tom should go back. Tom sees Jack leaving the house and thinks he is going back East. In his intense jealousy he shoots Jack from behind, but wounds him slightly. Deeply repentant when he learns of Jack's former sacrifice, he urges Jack to go back and Jack consents to do so. The boys exchange guns as tokens of remembrance and it is then that he learns that it was Jack who shot him. At first moved to have revenge, he later suppresses the desire and goes on to the girl back East.

C. G. P. C.

UNCLE'S MONEY (Nov. 7).—Mr. Whiffles, a wealthy old gentleman, living in the rue de Jerusalem, is importuned by his niece and nephew to some and spend the rest of his declining years with them. But Mr. Whiffles is having far too good a time to accept any such invitation, particularly when he knows that friends niece and nephew are badly in need of funds, and evidently have designs on his exchequer. Just after he refuses their request, he learns that Mr. Hytin Nance has absconded and his funds are now a minus quantity. Hastily recalling his loving relatives, he tells them that he has decided to accept their invitation. In their country home things run along smoothly and uncle is very well cared for until they discover that his securities, safely locked away in his safe are nothing more than packages of newspapers—then they throw uncle out. Almost at the same moment that he hits the ground, a messenger arrives, telling him that the absconding banker has been arrested and that his money will be returned. Consternation reigns, as may well be supposed, and Whiffles finds great pleasure in witnessing the discomfiture of his mercenary relatives.

SELIG.

THE COQUETTE (Nov. 6).—Hugh Mainard, a big, strong fisherman, and Ida Darrow, the pretty lame girl, become much attached to each other. Mabel, who is called "The Coquette," is rescued from a shipwreck by Hugh and Bob Darrow, Ida's brother. The newcomer is taken into the Darrow home, and Bob soon falls in love with her. But she favors Hugh and he soon forgets Ida. This arouses a certain jealousy in Bob and also a strong resentment against Hugh's treatment of his sister. A fight ensues, and in one of the most unique scenes ever produced in a picture, the two rivals, still fighting with the desperate abandon of angered men, roll down the cliffs and over the brink, dropping through space into the raging sea below. They keep up the fight in the water until they are forced to stop from sheer exhaustion and realization of their folly. Mabel is turned out of the Darrow home, and, broken-hearted, goes to live with the parson. A year brings many changes in her life and she eventually finds her reward in marriage and forgiveness.

WESTERN HEARTS (Nov. 7).—Sam Long leaves his invalid wife to seek work in a neighboring town. He is unsuccessful in his quest and being penniless, and his wife in need of food and medicine, he steals a wallet of money from Dr. Lane. While returning home he loses the wallet on the road. It is found by some of the boys, who return it to the doctor. Sam, meantime, has reached home and finds his wife in a serious condition, screaming for help. Sam now learns of his loss but cannot leave his wife to look for the wallet. The sheriff hears Mrs. Long scream and rides to the town and brings Dr. Lane. The doctor recognizes Sam, but repays good for evil by showing deserved mercy.

OLD BILLY (Nov. 9).—Baby Lillian, a dear little three-year-old, is the unconscious medium through which Tom Downey, Captain of Engine Co. 24, falls in love with little Widow Marming, the baby's mother. The fire inspectors decide that "Old Billy," the veteran horse of No. 24, has outlived his usefulness to the service, and he is therefore sold at auction, much to the dislike and regret of the widow, Baby Lillian and Tom. The once proud fire horse now descends to the burden of a milk wagon. Six months later, while "Old Billy" is peacefully standing before a house on his master's milk route, a fire breaks out in the apartment house occupied by the little widow and her child. Tom and his company are quick to respond, and as the engines go down the street, they pass "Old Billy."

This is too much for the hero of many fires, and forgetting his quiet occupation, he falls in line and dashes madly after the disappearing engines, the milk cans leaving a trail behind him.

Tom meantime has saved his sweetheart and her child from the burning building and they recognize their old friend. Tom buys him from the irate milkman, who arrives at this moment. A wedding follows the fire, and "Old Billy" is among the happy ones present.

LIEUTENANT GREY (Nov. 10).—Lieut. Grey, C. S. A., is sent to obtain plans of the Federal forts. He meets and is aided by Col. Carter's daughter, Elizabeth, a loyal Confederate. Later he is chased and wounded by a party of Guerillas, headed by the notorious Jim Jason. He seeks refuge in the Carter home, where the Guerillas find him. He shoots Jason, and holds the others at bay, saving the lives of his new-found friends, Elizabeth and her father. Aid finally comes in the form of a troop of Federal soldiers, led by Lieut. Brighton, U. S. A. Grey refuses to escape and is taken prisoner, and later sentenced to be shot as a spy. Before leaving, he confesses his love to Elizabeth and she confesses hers to him.

The Col. and Elizabeth intercede with Grant in Grey's favor and succeed in obtaining a reprieve. Elizabeth then goes to President Lincoln for a pardon. That kindly gentleman relents and Grey's life is saved, but he is forced to remain a prisoner during the remainder of the war. The war finally ends. Grey and Elizabeth are married and they pay a visit to their friend and benefactor, President Lincoln.

PATHE.

THE STORY OF THE TYPEWRITER (Nov. 8).—The opening scenes show the shop in which Mr. Sholes, the inventor of the typewriter, is at work upon his model. They show also how he became discouraged and how some of his friends deserted him while others came to his aid, and how a promoter kindly introduced him to a great capitalist, who undertakes the manufacture of his machine. Then we go through the factory of a larg typewriting concern 40 years later, and watch the various complicated machines, each doing its part of the great work of turning out almost innumerable typewriters. We see the parts cast, ground, drilled and finally asembled. The picture closes with the vision of the inventor and capitalist now realized—the typewriter in the public schools.

TERMS OF THE WILL (Nov. 9).—McConnell is notified by his lawyers that his deceased uncle has left him his entire estate in Mexico, provided he is married within thirty days. The fact that McConnell is already engaged to a most charming girl, but whets his eagerness to comply with the terms of the will, and everything is arranged that he should go to his estate and that his sweetheart should follow him and be married in Mexico. Upon his arrival in the Mexican village, a wily Mexican, by the name of Felix, learns the conditions under which McConnell inherits the estate, and coaching his sister as to what to do, he manages to make her compromise herself with McConnell to such an extent that Felix feels justified in forcing McConnell to marry his sister at the point of a revolver. A few days after the ceremony McConnell's real sweetheart appears, only to find him already married. Felix tries to win the pretty little American girl himself and this leads to a running fight between McConnell and Felix, in which Felix's sister is killed by a stray bullet. This, of course, ends the difficulty and McConnell and his little American bride are now enjoying life on their estate in Mexico.

THE BANDIT'S BRIDE (Nov. 10).—In a deserted little inn in the days of long ago, a bold and handsome stranger is drinking a cup of wine. The inn-keeper's daughter appeals to his sense of the beautiful, and he begs her to marry him; but she refuses, giving as her excuse, the love she bears for another. The inn-keeper himself rather takes sides with the stranger, who seems well supplied with this world's goods; but his daughter is obdurate, and the matter rests thus. Later the stranger has two of his trusty mates steal the girl and carry her to his own dungeon, where she is married to him by a quaking priest. It seems that the girl's husband is Alonzo, a robber baron, for whom a reward of 1,000 pestas has been offered, and this offer, falling into the hands of the girl's fiancé, he determines to win both her and the small fortune at one fell swoop. This he does in a series of brilliant scenes, and we leave the happy reunited lovers clasped in each other's arms.

LOVE'S RENUNCIATION (Nov. 11).—A starving artist is out with a picture or two, endeavoring to get enough money to pay his rent. While out he rescues a girl from death beneath a pair of runaway horses. She, it develops, is the daughter of a wealthy gentleman who receives the artist with open arms and assures him that his fortune is made. As time goes on the artist falls in love with the older sister, and one day the artist and the two girls go for a sketching trip to the seashore. The younger falls into the sea and is rescued by the painter and carried home, where she develops a case of pneumonia. On her sick bed she admits to her father that she loves the artist. The father, telling the young man, all the chivalry in his nature cries out that he should wed her, and in consequence he proposes and is accepted. Later, the sick girl discovers her fiancé and her sister locked in each other's arms, and stealing out, she goes back to the rocks on the seashore, where her illness is aggravated and she finally dies, but with her last breath puts her sweetheart's hand in that of her sister.

Special Releases of Feature Films

Do your pictures lack finish? Are they wanting in the details? Would you like to get the very finest results in the shortest space of time? To save money and sell more copies? Mr. S. M. Jacobi, an artist and expert, with a long experience in London, Paris and New York as theatrical scenic artist, costume designer, illustrator and press photographer, can help you to realize your ambition to make genuine films d'art. He will advise with your working staff, supply models of studio scenes or costumes, furnish the actual furniture and properties of the right photographic value and correct as to period, place them in proper position on the stage, suggest new lighting effects, and attend to the artistic composition of the picture, generally, both in and outdoors. This becomes particularly valuable for historical or classy plays. For terms, by the film or reel only, address,

She stated that she was going to leave half of her fortune to his favorite son and the other half to her niece, Bessie.

Jack and Paul each strove to share the fortune. Paul left immediately for Aunt Jane's, after locking his beloved brother, Jack in his bedroom. The amiable Jack escaped through a window and down a lattice work. Both arrived at Aunt Jane's. The two brothers, in trying to show how nice they were, got into all sorts of trouble, and sometimes Aunt Jane herself was the unintended victim.

Finally Paul and Jack came to blows, which terrified Aunt Jane half to death. Bessie and Dick Worthing happened to be near and heard Auntie's cries for help. Dick lightly but firmly ejected the two young men, while Aunt Jane watched him admiringly.

Home went Jack and Paul, and thither came a letter from Aunt Jane, stating that all her money would bo to Dick Worthington and her niece.

WHO OWNS THE BABY? (Nov. 8).—The Press Agent of the Sphinx Theater was entering his home late one night, wondering if there was any way to brace up the box-office receipts. On the doorstep he noticed a little bundle, which contained a baby. He called his housekeeper, and was just about to inform the police, when his advertising instinct suddenly stopped him. He saw the means of drawing some newspaper attention to the deserted theater.

He gave instructions that the baby should be clad in fine clothes. Then the aress pgent arranged with another person to leave the baby in the Sphinx Theater. There it was found after performance.

The newspaper men grabbed at this mysterious infant. The Sphinx Theater had columns in the newspapers. Suddenly something happened. In the end the baby was the means through which many hearts were made happier.

JACK'S UMBRELLA (Nov. 9).—Jack's wife gave him a handsome umbrella as a birthday present. Jack took it to his office to show to his friends. While there one of Jack's friends came in, and on learning that it was his birthday, invited him to a neighboring oasis (saloon).

In hus hurry to get out, Jack took his friend's umbrella by mistake. When he discovered his loss, he thought somebody had robbed him, and forthwith apprised the police department, and inserted an advertisement in the papers to the effect that the robber of the umbrella is known and would be dealt with according to law if he did not return it. The next morning he found several dozens of umbrellas on his front porch. As he did not need all, he decided to distribute them around his office. On his way he was captured by a cop, who thought he was one of the umbrella thieves, so he was taken to the station house. The captain of police, after hearing Jack's story, telephoned to his wife and to Jack's friend, to come down and straighten out the problem. Jack's friend was also nabbed by an officer who recognized the umbrella, and he also was taken to the police station. Everybody met at the lock-up, and after a while things were adjusted and the prisoners released.

THE HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT (Nov. 11).—Jack Winter, a young lawyer, had a nice house built for his beloved. The old people who lived next door, congratulated Jack upon the house. When Jack's betrothed came to inspect the home, she did not like it. Then she threw Jack over and married a wealthy suitor.

This incident crushed Jack completely, and he left the place and town. Two years later a young girl by the name of Katherine Wilson, visited the old people. She heard the story of the deserted cottage. One day she got into the house and managed to clean it thoroughly.

A short while after some tramps dropped a match in the house, which set fire to it. Katherine saw the flames, and together with the old folks, put the fire out.

The old people sent Jack a letter, telling him about the fire and the girl. He came and found the fair one cleaning the house. The seed of love soon entered their hearts and a short while afterwards the cottage was occupied by them.

EDISON.

A MODERN CINDERELLA (Nov. 7).—Here is a new and original working out of the slipper plot and Cinderella gets the prince by a route that is delightfully different.

We see her, allured by the waves on the beach and secure in her solitude, slip off shoes and stockings to go in wading. And then appears the prince in the guize of a most attractive summer man, and she runs to hide her feet under her skirts, leaving on eshoe and stocking on the sands. Embarrassed at her predicament, she disclaims ownership when he offers them, and so with a smile, he goes away with the shoe and stocking in his pocket.

Then, to add insult to injury, he tells everyone he meets about his find, and that he thought they belonged to a certain Miss Cinderella, who dodges an introduction to him.

Everybody at the hotel asks her about the matter and she grows hot and desperate at having to lib so often. Finally her chance comes. Camp Arcady, where the prince lives, is left alone one day, and she rows across to it, determined to regain her property. But our hero is watchful and returns. Cinderella is caught apparently robbing the camp, and dare not say why she is there. But when the handcuffs are brought from his trophies on the reach pole, she gives up. Then he makes her prove ownersnip by fitting the slipper to her foot.

LOGAN'S BABIES (Nov. 8).—Kitty Mulligan, Mr. Logan's fiancée, names Friday, the 13th, as her wedding day. On this day the landlady of the boarding house at which Logan is staying, volunteers to buy him a new tie, if he will mind the baby.

On her way to the store she meets with an accident, which causes a delay. In the meantime, Logan, who has become impatient, rushes out to a haberdasher's and leaves the baby and carriage outside. It starts to roll down to the curb, where it is picked up by a policeman, who takes it to the department caring for lost children. Logan, learning the whereabouts of the carriage, starts immediately to the place, and in his hurry, takes a perambulator containing a nigger baby. He hurries to his boarding house, gives the landlady the carriage and runs as fast as he can to his fiancée's home, only to find her in hysterics on account of him being late.

In the meantime both the landlady and the owner of the nigger baby learn where Logan is and both reach Mulligan's home just as the marriage is being performed. Logan is handed the babies and the bride promptly faints.

THE BLACK ARROW (Nov. 10).—Sir Daniel Brackley attempts to force his ward, Joanna, to marry Lord Shoreby, but receiving news of an impending battle, is obliged to hurry to the front. To prevent Joanna's escaping him, he takes her with him, disguised as a boy. Young Dick Shelton (Sir Daniel's nephew), brings reinforcements to Sir Daniel, and thinking Joanna a boy, assists her to escape. Joanna and Dick reach home, closely followed by Sir Daniel, who, becoming suspicious of Dick, plans to have him killed. This plan is overheard by Joanna, who warns Dick of his danger. In the excitement Dick discovers that his supposed boy friend is none other than Joanna, a childhood playmate. They renew their former friendship, which now develops into mutual love, but are rudely interrupted by the approach of Sir Daniel's hired assassins.

Dick escapes and hastens to the woods, where he joins the "Black Arrows," a band of outlaws, deadly enemies of Sir Daniel. Choosing Will Lawless, one of their number as companion, they start out to rescue Joanna, disguised as monks.

Dick and Lawless, through the help of Joanna's companion, manage to enter the palace unnoticed, and for a brief moment Dick and Joanna are clasped in loving embrace, only to lose each other when she is led to the hall for the marriage with Lord Shoreby. But lawless saves the day by piercing Lord Shoreby with a black arrow as the ceremony is about to begin.

Dick escapes and manages to save the Duke of Gloucester from an attack of Sir Daniel's soldiers. Gloucester thanks Dick warmly and by Dick's advice attacks Shoreby town. Dick is given charge of the main position and manages to hold it against the terrific attacks of the Lancaster army. For his gallant conduct Dick is knighted.

Dick and Lawless learn that Sir Daniel and his household have fled and thus escaped the terrible carnage. They soon overtake them and make short work of his remaining soldiers. Sir Daniel begs Dick's forgiveness, which he readily grants, but when his back is turned Sir Daniel attempts to kill him, only to be pierced by the last black arrow let fly by Will Lawless. Joanna and Dick, now Sir Richard, are happily married with the blessing of the Duke of Gloucester, who resumes his march amid the cheers of the wedding party.

WILLIE WISE AND HIS MOTOR BOAT (Nov. 11).—Willie, to eclipse a rival suitor whose sail boat has charmed the girl he adores, purchases a motor boat. He invites the girl, who gladly accepts. Willie has many trying adventures to make the motor move, and after testing his mechanical knowledge to its capacity, gives it up. Then a saviour in the shape of a small boy, rows up and shows him how easy it is to start the motor. The boat gives a start, so much so that the girl falls overboard. Willie's rival is at hand, and rescues the girl, while Willie reaches land much contrary to his plans.

ICEBERGS OFF THE COAST OF LABRADOR (Nov. 11).—A picture off the coast of Labrador, showing a number of icebergs that assume fantastic forms, as of peaks, towers and arches. On one of the towers of an icy formation, a face is distinctly visible, carved by nature's arctic hand. In the background, Labrador's rugged, rock-bound coast stands out majestically.

These icebergs vary in height from fifty to about two hundred feet, and in each case the depth below the water is about four times as great as the height visible.

The largest one shown in the closing scene is estimated to weigh over half a million tons. They all have their origin on the Western coast of Greenland, and are composed of fresh water.

KALEM.

THE LUCK OF RECKLESS REDDY (Nov. 6).—When Reckless Reddy rode past a clothing store he saw a rubber "slicker" coat for sale at a bargain, he could not resist the temptation of investigating. He was carrying a bunch of flowers and a be-ribboned box of candy on the way to see his girl, and he felt the "slicker" would add a finishing touch.

As he rode along, a friend hailed him and asked him to take care of his pup, giving Reddy a milk bottle, with instructions to see that the dog was fed regularly. The good-natured Reddy obligingly took the dog and placed the bottle in his pocket.

May, who had been waiting expectantly, welcomed Reddy and thanked him for the flowers. "I've another present for you in my pocket," said Reddy, thinking of the candy. May reached into the pocket of the new "slicker" and, horrors, extracted the milk bottle. Reddy cleared himself by bringing in the dog, which he left outside, and explained the purpose of the bottle.

A few days later, as Reddy sat by the roadside, a woman came along carrying a baby. Seeing someone down the road to whom she wished to speak, she placed the baby in Reddy's arms and hurried after her friend. Just then May appears. In vain Reddy endeavored to hide the baby. In vain he tried to explain its presence. May wrathfully accused him of unfaithfulness and Reddy, in desperation, tossed the baby into her arms and fled. May, carrying the baby, followed in pursuit, and both were stopped by an armed ranchman who thought that Reddy was trying to desert his family. The frantic mother appeared, assuming charge of her child, and the abused Reddy found that his luck had turned at last.

WHITE BRAVE'S HERITAGE (Nov. 8).—A ranchman dashes up to the Wentworth home and informs the family that a terrific prairie fire is sweeping down upon them. Wentworth gathers his men, bids his wife and child a hasty farewell, and hurries away to battle with the flames. At nightfall he has not returned and Mrs. Wentworth prepares to put little Bob to bed. She hears his prayers, places a rosary about his neck and tells him the story of the beautiful Madonna, a figure of which stands on the table.

In the night an Indian slips in, overpowers the mother and runs off with Bob. The father returns, hears the sad news and goes in search of his son, only to find the Indians have fled with him.

Fifteen years later Bob has grown up with the Indians and is known as White Brave, because of his fearlessness and skill in hunting. A party of settlers pass by in a prairie schooner and are annihilated by the Indians. Agnes, a young white girl, hides under the wagon, but is discovered by White Brave. Seeing her beautiful face and loose white dress, the young man recalls the only similar figure he has ever seen—the image of the Madonna—and he falls down before her. The Chief appears and claims the girl, which White Brave resents. The chief, infuriated at this sign of disloyalty, orders White Brave made a prisoner and conducted to the camp, along with Agnes. The chief's daughter creeps into the wigwam where White Brave is tied and severs his bonds. He proceeds to the chief's wigwam, where the Indian is entreating Agnes to become his wife. White Brave overpowers the chief and escapes with Agnes, closely pursued by the Indians.

Just as they are about to be captured, a party of settlers, headed by old Wentworth, appears, and puts the Indians to flight. White Brave is conducted to his old home along with Agnes. In all these years he has never parted with the rosary and a happy scene takes place when it is recognized and Bob's identity disclosed. He assumes his place in the white man's world, takes Agnes as his bride and the long years of his life with the savages are forgotten in his new-found happiness.

THE ENGINEER'S DAUGHTER (Nov. 10).—Jack Sinclair, the new inspector of the D. G. & X. R. R., meets Lillian, the engineer's daughter, and falls in love at first sight. Lillian's father, however, does not take kindly to Jack, and enters strenuous objections when Jack asks him for Lillian's hand. Jack is not disconcerted. Pursuing his suit, the lovers agree to elope. Mounting Jack's hand-car they start for a run to the adjoining town where they propse to get married. Lillian's father, however, quickly discovers their plans, mounts his engine, and starts in pursuit. As he is about to

BIOGRAPH.

THE BATTLE (Nov. 6).—In the days of '61 how many of the brave soldiers were urged to deeds of valor and heroism by thoughts of "the girl he left behind." This story tells of the transforming of a pusillanimous coward into a lion-hearted hero by the derision of the girl he loved. The battle takes place outside her home, and he, panic-stricken, rushes in, trembling with fear, to hide. She laughs in scorn at his cowardice and commands him to go back and fight. Her fortitude inspires him and he manages to rejoin his company before his absence is noticed. Ammunition is low and somebody must take the hazardous journey to procure more from another regiment, which he volunteers to do. This undertaking cannot be adequately described, for the young man faces death at every turn. The most thrilling part of his experience is where the opposing forces build bonfires along the road to menace the powder wagon.

THE TRAIL OF BOOKS (Nov. 9).—The couple quarrel over a trivial matter and a separation seems inevitable. Their little child understands there is something wrong and endeavors to smooth matters, without avail. Left alone, she goes out to amuse herself, and as several children pass on their way to school, she wants to accompany them. They playfully tell her she has no books. An idea! She goes into the house and gathers up an armful of books out of the bookcase, and off she starts by her "lonely." During this time mamma has been packing up her trunk to leave the place, and has ordered the expressman to call. In readiness to go, she looks for the child, and the only clue leading to her whereabouts is the finding of a book on the front lawn. The expressman remembers passing, in fact almost running over, a little tot with her arms full of books. The dropping of these books leads the mother on, accompanied by the expressman, until they find her in the hands of a couple of tramps. How she gets there is impossible to describe in a short space. You may be assured that by this time the parents' quarrel has been forgotten.

ECLIPSE.

AN EYE FOR AN EYE, or THE LAST DAYS OF KING HENRY III OF FRANCE (Nov. 8).—1. The Duchess of Montpensier meets the fanatical young monk, Jacques Clement. 2. She receives a message telling of the murder of her brother. 3. Henry of Navarre overhears the duchess incite Clement to kill Henry III. 4. Henry III is depressed because of the plot against him. 5. The Duchess of Montpensier threatens Henry III with vengeance. 6. The king prepares against an attack. 7. Henry of Navarre advises the king to flee. 8. Partisans of the duchess storm the castle. 9. Clement receives the message, "It is time to act." 10. Henry III designates Henry of Navarre as his successor.

VITAGRAPH.

HER COWBOY LOVER (Nov. 6).—Clarice Martin, of New York, goes West to visit her cousin Mary and her uncle John. She is engaged to Harry Brady. The match has been made by her parents. She thinks she loves him, but does not. He does not like her going West and makes her promise to write every day.

Out West Clarice meets with Karl Courtleigh, a cowboy. With him it is a case of love at first sight and Clarice gradually learns what love really is. She is very unhappy between love and duty. Harry becomes dissatisfied and resolves to go West on his vacation and find out how matters stand. He does not like the tone of Clarice's letters. He goes West to ask an explanation. Clarice, without mentioning Karl, tells him that she is doubtful of her love and asks to at least postpone the wedding. He upbraids her for faithlessness and insists that she keep her bargain, marry him at once and return East. She consents.

She has a final interview with Karl, who discovers that she really loves him and determines to have her if she will consent. He tells her if she changes her mind to signal him even from the auto on the way to church and he will make her his. Harry makes himself disagreeable and domineering and Clarice resolves to give the signal. Karl waits for the auto and as it passes picks Clarice from the car and takes her onto the back of his horse. They cut across country and are married and Harry follows just in time to be too late —Stung.

AULD LANG SYNE, Reel 1 (Nov. 7).—Among the green hills of Scotland dwelt two farmer lads, Tammas and Geordie, fast friends tried and loyal as members of the same clan. They are both very much in love with Jenny, a little Scottish lass, and Geordie dreams of what might be if he were successful in his wooing. Geordie persists in his attentions to her. He asks her to share her lot with him, but she replies: "I do not lo'e ye, Geordie, I must say ye nay." But quite different does she speak to Tammas. "I do lo'e ye, Tammas" and forthwith they are bethrothed.

Jubilantly Tammas, on his way home, tells Geordie that Jenny is his promised bride. The shock to Geordie is too much and losing control of his anger, he denounces Tammas and bad blood comes betwixt them.

On the happy wedding day, Geordie is not invited and from his home across the way he sees the happy couple enter their new home, while reflectively he stands gazing with his dog Jean from the window. Pensive and sad, he fills his cup with a large draught of consolation, lifts it high and says: "I'll tak' a cup o' kindness yet, for the Days of Auld Lang Syne." Throwing himself into the old armchair before the fireplace, Jean gazing into his sad face, dreams of days that might have been and he is lost in the realms of reverie, while the fire light throws its glow, intensified by the fast approaching darkness upon him.

AULD LANG SYNE, Reel 2 (Nov. 7).—Five years have elapsed since the last scene. A son has been born to Tammas and Jenny, now a romping little fellow of four years. The old enmity betwixt Tammas and Geordie still exists. Both men are busy about their duties on their respective farms. Jenny is deeply engaged in her household affairs. The child wanders off in the heather, across the hills and is lost. Jenny calls loud and long for her missing bairn, but he does not respond. At night, when Tammas returns from his labors in the fields, he meets his wife, who in tears, informs him of the child's absence.

He and his wife start in search of the little one, guided by a flaring torch. Their efforts, which are continued until the approach of morning, are in vain and they return disconsolate to their home.

Geordie starts out at daybreak with his herd of sheep and finds the discarded torch. He is puzzled until later his good dog Jean comes to him with the child's tam-o'-shanter, persisting in her master going with her to the place where she discovered the child, whom Geordie rescues aid hastens with it to the distracted parents, who clasp it lovingly and frantically to their bosoms.

Tammis relents in his enmity to Geordie; the two men shake hands and once more become friends. Jenny brings forth a flask from which they both fill their cups and "drink a cup of kindness," making up their differences with the words of "Auld Lang Syne."

ARBUTUS (Nov. 8).—Carleton Holt locates at one of the mountain inns. On one of his daily trips he hears a mountain maid singing in the woods. Jumping from his horse, he makes his way to where she is sitting to find her holding a bunch of arbutus in her hands. He is fascinated. It is mutual. Day after day, they meet at this same trysting-place, until weary of the novelty of courting an unsophisticated mountain lass. Carleton bids her farewell.

Left sad and alone, unable to find the consolation for her heart's longing, she finds a dead bird and pours out her soul in plaintive song. A famous singer visiting the mountains overhears Meg singing, approaches her and offers to give her a musical education. Meg accepts.

Some few years later, Carleton Holt becomes acquainted with Meg's benefactress, and she wins the love denied the mountain lass. A concert is given at the home of the prima donna at which Meg is to make her initial appearance. Carleton Holt recognizes the photograph of the girl to whom he made love in the mountains. Just after Meg has finished her first song, he advances to her side as if to reclaim the love which he had once rejected. Meg tells him that she leaves the city to-morrow and if he can find her then, she will give him his answer.

She goes back to the mountains where the arbutus grows. Carleton follows. At their old trysting-place, she gives him his answer by picking a bunch of arbutus, emblematic of constancy and love. Throwing them on the ground, crushing them under her feet, and points commandingly and bids him go.

WHO'S WHO (Nov. 10).—At the club, Bertie Hall makes a bet with his fellows that he will disguise himself as a woman and go in such attire until the end of the summer at a fashionable resort. While at the hotel he becomes acquainted with a young woman, who desiring to evade the attentions of the men, dresses as a man. Bertie and Georgia keep together for quite some time, both thinking that they are fooling each other.

One day, as Bertie is standing before the mirror with his wig off combing his hair, he is caught by Georgia, who looks in at the open door. She does not say anything at this time, but waits until Bertie is writing a letter at the desk down stairs. Here she snatches Bertie's wig and exposes his masquerade. Bertie jumps up and chases Georgia down to the beach, where he pulls off her false hair.

They congratulate each other and are soon engaged. At the club Bertie confesses that he lost the bet, but has won a wife.

AN AEROPLANE ELOPEMENT (Nov. 11).—Maude Brooks, is in love with an aviator, George Pickney. Maude tells her father that she intends to marry George, as he is a splendid fellow. But her father will not listen to her. So she decides to elope.

Maude meets George at the machine and together they fly up into the air. Mr. Brooks, who has been apprised of his daughter's intentions, starts in pursuit. He also flies in an aeroplane until something goes wrong. Then he has to descend and by devious routes manages to reach the express train, which runs to the neighboring town, where his daughter has fled to be married.

An exciting race takes place between the flying machine and the locomotive. When the train reaches the station, Mr. Brooks hails an automobile and arrives at the church just as his daughter has changed her name to Mrs. George Pickney. He is furious, but Maude's persuasiveness leads him to see things in a different light.

GAUMONT.

THE VAGABOND (Nov. 7).—Teaching the Gospel of Kindness. Showing how his nature is changed by kindness and how, when given an opportunity, he becomes a useful member of the community in which he meets with this good fortune.

A TRIP ON A DIRIGIBLE BALLOON (Nov. 7).—A film remarkable for its fine quality and unique interest, depicting a sensational trip on the French dirigible, the "Adjutant Vincenot." Several views of the ship are given, but the principal section of the film comprises views of Compiegne and the Chateau de Pierrefonds, taken from the vessel itself.

THE HOUR OF EXECUTION (Nov. 11).—At a gathering at the house of his friend, Claudius Pison, the poet Antony reads the poem which he has just written concerning the cruelties of the Emperor Tiberius. A traitor denounces Antony to the captain of the Guard, and he is arrested. Now his dying father expresses a desire to see him, and in order that Antony may accede to his wish, Claudius Pison begs that he be paroled, and offers to stand surety for him. He promises that, should the poet not return by noon the following day, he will die in his stead, and with this understanding Antony is allowed to depart. On his return journey, the poet is set upon by robbers and left in the road for dead. When he recovers, although very weak, he struggles on to arrive in time to save his friend. Claudius is about to be put to death when Antony arrives. The populace, recognizing the fidelity of the two friends, plead for their pardon, which is granted.

MANRESA, A SPANISH TOWN (Nov. 11).—Views of Manresa, a little village near Barcelona, and its environs. The film affords an excellent idea of the peculiar characteristics of the district, while there is a wild picturesqueness about the neighborhood which adds considerably to the interest of the film.

MELIES.

THE SPUR OF NECESSITY (Nov. 9).—While prospecting for gold, Jim. Brown is bitten by a rattlesnake, whose bite is deadly. He rushes home to his wife, who tries every means to save his life, but she realizes that whiskey is the one thing that is needed. The nearest village is many miles distant, and the liquor must be administered within the hour.

SCENE FROM "SPIN OF NECESSITY."—MELIES.

Mrs. Brown appeals to Jake Wilson, the only neighbor, but Jake is drunk and refuses to give up his liquor. There is a lively struggle, in which a woman's wit is matched against a drunkard's brute strength. It is a struggle to save a dear one's life. Mrs. Brown forces the bottle from Jake, rescues Jim, and by forcing Jake into sobriety, receives in the end, his everlasting thanks.

to your picture machine and make it do the work BETTER, with more realistic effect than you ever did it by hand; and that's not a "slam" on your skill, either.

The motor is noiseless. One simple lever on the motor itself allows you to vary the speed, up and down, from 300 to 3000 revolutions per minute—not by "steps" or jerks as other motors do it, but by imperceptible gradations. That is why it is the one A. C. motor that will do the work right.

CHAMPION.

FOLKS OF OLD VIRGINIA (Nov. 6).—Don Preston is refused the heart and hand of Vera Chatbourne. Vera likes him very much; though not after the fashion she cares for Frank Burnell. She loves Frank, and when he sues for her hand, she gives him all the happiness that man need look for.

The breaking out of war starts Don for the front at the head of a regiment. Not so Frank. He has an invalid mother, and she exacts a promise of her boy to remain with her and soothe her weary progress to the grave.

When it is discovered that Frank is not going to war, he is taunted by his comrades; but their taunts avail not. His moral courage rises above it all; he'll stay with his mother. Not understanding or knowing the reason of his action, Vera turns against him for his seeming cowardice, and thus she throws him over, and accepts her old suitor, Don, on the eve of his departure for the front.

Now six months later, Frank's mother departed the world in peace, and Frank flew to the service of his fair Virginia State. Then one day, it became his fortune to save a comrade in the heat of battle. That comrade was Don, mortally wounded. He dragged him into an old house. In looking over the wound, he found a locket of his sweetheart, and there came to Frank a jealousy born of Satan. The house was struck by a bomb and was soon burning fiercely.

He decided then and there to leave his rival to the flames. But he hesitated, his better nature regained the mastery of him, and he seized and carried the stricken man to safety—the Confederate Hospital. There, as if ordained by Fate, Vera was nursing. The heroism of Frank now stood out in bold relief. On learning the true cause of his first objection to joining the ranks, Vera opened up the well springs of her heart to him once more, and true happiness came to them.

THE MOONSHINER'S TRAIL (Nov. 8).—Up in the mountains of Tennessee, Dave Harvey and his son Jack plied their nefarious calling of making and disposing of illicit whiskey. For years they had defied government sleuths, and offset every plan and trap laid for their capture. However, boldness born of security proved their undoing, and Dave Harvey met with it. One day he drove from his cabin with his wagon stocked with "Mountain Dew" all neatly covered with hay—a very innocent load.

A handsome young revenue officer, one of the bravest and most intelligent in the service, came their way. The wagon did look quite harmless to him, but unfortunately for the Harveys, a jug had overturned and a tiny stream was dripping all the way. In an instant the officer's instinct was aroused. He followed the trail back until it brought him to the cabin.

Harvey's niece was at home. The sleuth had met her before and had been struck by her winsomeness as he slaked his thirst, by her kindness. The girl, too, had been taken by his manly bearing. But yet she deemed his presence a menace and had set off immediately to warn her relatives.

In the meantime, a mishap had befallen them, for an axle had broken on the wagon. Jack at once went for assistance. It so happened he missed the girl on the way, and when she arrived on the scene her uncle mounted the horse, which had been unhitched, and his niece getting on behind him, a wild dash was made for the cabin.

At the cabin the young revenue officer awaited their advent with drawn revolver. Jack was the first to fall into the trap. Later came the father, who found himself looking into the muzzle of a big .45. It seemed all up with them; but not yet. Down on the head of the young officer came a sharp blow from a club, in the hands of the young mountain girl. They fastened the handcuffs on his own wrists.

After making merry at his expense, the two Harveys turned into their blankets and sought repose. A revulsion of feeling overcame the girl. She released the prisoner. Before the morning, he returned with others and made his capture. Love triumphed over the sorrow which the maiden experienced, for locked in the sweet embrace of her lover, a new vista of a brighter world unveiled before her.

THANHOUSER.

THE MISSING HEIR (Nov. 7).—A lawyer is given the execution of a will, which bequeathes to the child of a disinherited son a large fortune. The disinherited son is now dead. The father, on his deathbed is penitent. By way of making amends he leaves to his son's offspring, his entire fortune.

He is ignorant of his grandchild's fate, but provides that a thorough search should be made. The will further provides that should the search for the child prove a failure, the fortune should go to the old man's nephew—a worthless and idle youth of loose morals. The nephew tries his best to make the finding of the child impossible, while the lawyer, who had a sentimental interest in the dead son, uses every known means to locate the missing heir.

The missing boy falls into the hands of an Italian fruit vender. The Italian reads in the papers that there is a hunt for the boy. He easily establishes the boy's identity by a scar on his cheek. Then he goes to see the lawyer to claim the reward.

But he meets the nephew at the lawyer's office and is bribed to keep quiet. It was the nephew's plan to keep the boy out of the way until after the expiration of the time limit set in the will.

In the tenement house where the Italian lived, there was a very wideawake, energetic janitor. And he had a sweetheart, a newsgirls, who also took a great deal of interest in what fas going on. The girl's suspicions were aroused when the natty nephew called on the shabby Italian.

The two men hold a conference in one of the Italian's two rooms, having sent the boy into the kitchen. The girl listens outside, at the keyhole, and is shocked to hear of a plan to send the boy adrift. She decides to rescue the boy by strategy.

The plotters are earnestly conversing in the front room, and they do not hear a slight stir in the back kitchen. But the janitor, a former sailor, comes up the dumbwaiter rope, hand over hand, hoists the car, and lowers the boy to safety, before the astonished villains realize that anything out of the way is happening.

Seeing that their scheme has failed they try to escape, but are trapped on the roof of the tenement, and ignominiously marched off by the janitor and turned over to the police. An the missing heir is produced in time to secure the fortune.

THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS (Nov. 10).—During the French and Indian war, while America was still under the rule of England, Col. Munro was the commander of Fort William Henry, in New York State. His two daughters arrived from England, and pushed their way into the wilderness determined to join their father.

The last stage of their journey was made under the escort of a young army officer, Major Heyward, one of their father's most trusted officer, and who was deeply in love with Alice, the younger girl.

Their guide was a treacherous Indian, who had planned to lure them into the wilderness and make them captives. They were saved, however, by a chance meeting with a trapper and his two Indian companions, who were men of reputation throughout that wild region.

The trapper, American born, had lived with Indians all his life, and because of his skill with his rifle was known as Hawk-eye. The Indians were the last of the tribe of Mohicans, who at one time ruled the country that is now New York City. But they had been driven back by the encroachments of the white men, and made their homes in the then wild region around what is now Lake George.

Through the aid of this trio, the little party of whites were led toward the fort, but their treacherous guide escaped, and backed by the Huron Indians, a hostile tribe, followed and attacked them.

During the attack the girls were captured, and carried off to the Hurons' village, Heyward and Hawk-eye, disguised as a medicine man and his trained bear, by skill and daring, managed to rescue the younger of the two girls, but the elder was still in the power of Magua, their former guide. He was cornered at last with his fair captive, and in an effort to rescue her, Uncas was killed. His death was avenged by the unerring rifle of Hawk-eye.

The old chief, the last of his tribe, mourned his dead, comforted by Hawk-eye, who tells him, "The gifts of our color may be different, but God has so placed us as to journey in the same path. I have no kin, and like you, no people. The boy has left us for a time, but, sagamore, you are not alone."

ECLAIR.

A FATHER'S HEART (Oct. 30).—It is night. A miserably dressed woman, carrying a tiny infant, stops before a beautiful mansion. She gazes fearfully about, embraces the child, and places it on one of the window balconies . It is evident that misery has prompted this sad abondonment. She steals away, crying bitterly—someone approaches—she slips in a doorway. It is the street lamplighter. Surprised to hear the cries of an infant, he stops to investigate, and soon discovers the abandoned child. Moved with pity, he carries it to the commissioner, and reports his discovery. The distressed mother follows at a safe distance. The goodhearted official is indignant at the commission of such a crime, and advises the man to take the child to a foundling hospital. But the lamplighter has decided to adopt the little one, and bring it up as his own. When he re-enters his modest home, he prepares food for baby with zealous care, and then puts it to sleep.

Seven years later the child has grown to be a beautiful girl, and is the joy of her adopted father. They are about to seat themselves at dinner one day when a summons from the commissioner arrives. The little girl will not allow the father to go alone, and together they arrive at the office of the chief of police. A woman awaits them—the unhappy mother, who, filled with remorse and desire to see her offspring, has returned for information. She sees her child and quickly clasps her in her arms. The foster father, fearing to lose the little one, denounces the woman for her cruel abandonment, and excitedly tells how he has reared and cared for the child all these years. The chief decides in the man's favor, and he leaves with the little girl, while the mother weeps bitterly. They re-enter their home, and happily resume their dinner. A knock is heard at the door, and it is soon discovered that the mother has followed them to their home. She beseeches the man to at least let her kiss her child. He hesitates, and at last, seeing a look of longing on the child's face, gives his consent. The mother clasps her daughter rapturously to her heart, and leaves the room. Soon the man and child hear sobs, and, opening the door, find the mother weeping on the landing. The kind heart of the lamplighter is touched. He raises the unfortunate woman, and, bringing her back, says, with the utmost tenderness, "Stay with us and we will be two to love—our little girl."

WAITING AT THE CHURCH (Nov. 6).—Harry Graham is to marry Elsie Williams at high noon and the preparations are all made for the event, which is to occur at the church in the presence of a few relatives and friends. Graham visits the office where he is employed and announces the coming event to his fellow workers. He is admonished to make haste, as the hands on the clock dial are rapidly approaching the hour. He rushes out and at his lodgings has trouble in preparing his toilet. Becoming impatient, everything goes wrong, but he is finally arrayed in his wedding suit.

Starting on a run for the church he collides with a nurse carrying a child. The woman is thrown violently to the ground and badly injured. The prospective bridegroom picks up the child and impatiently awaits the coming of the ambulance to convey the nurse to the hospital. He stuffs a wad of bills into the hand of the surgeon and tries to dispose of the child. No one will take it off his hands and he is in a quandary. In the meantime the wedding party has arrived at the church and awaits.

Graham rushes on and at last, in his desperation, places the baby in an ice wagon, but it does not remain. The vendor of congealed water grabs the baby and pursues and gives it to Graham. The latter hails a cab, jumps in with the child, and is driven to the church, where he arrives just as the patience of the party is exhausted. The ceremony is performed, but as the bridal party emerges from the church, the cabman approaches with the baby and indignantly demands that Graham care for his own.

There is consternation, and the bride and her parents are horrified. Graham is roundly denounced and his troubles multiply and he is in despair. At this time the parents of the baby arrive and are overjoyed to find their offspring, and all is made clear. Graham is forgiven and is once more happy. THE WIFE'S AWAKENING (Nov. 9).—The drama opens with the household of Enoch Harrington plunged in sadness. Their first born has died and the father and mother are inconsolable in their grief. Mrs. Harrington later seeks diversion in society, but the husband is engrossed in his work as a scientist, having a labaoratory in his house. He conducts several experiments and is on the verge of success in his invention when an explosion of the chemicals occurs and it subsequently develops that he is blinded for life, his eyesight being permanently destroyed. The wife is saddened for a time, but again seeks relief from sorrow by attending society functions, being the gayest of the gay.

At a ball she meets Gilbert Huston, a blase devotee of fashion, who has a penchant for flirting with young, handsome married women. He is genuinely impressed with the beauty of Mrs. Harrington and lays siege to her heart. She is lonely, as her husband's affliction prevents him from mingling with her set, and turns to him. The intimacy is dangerous. At first she is horrified and then listens interestedly. The villain pleads ingeniously and she yields and consents to elope with him. They plan flight and everything is in readiness.

They have an interview in the garden underneath her husband's window. He overbears and it is made clear. He is heartbroken as the perfidy of his wife dawns on him. Harrington procures a revolver and debates whether to end his own life or try to wreak vengeance on the polished tempter. While he is revolving the matter in his mind, the wife has stealthily repaired to her room and is packing a few of her belongings in a grip. She discovers a shoe and stocking worn by her dead

NESTOR.

BIG NOISE HANK (Nov. 1).—Hank Rouser, "Big Noise Hank," as a daring stranger had called, him, was mad clear through. Julius Jones had faithfully promised to return that $500 after thirty days, and now it was long past due, and not even a line from Mr. Jones. So after a little friendly persuasion, in which Hank's six-shooter was brought into prominence, the bar was effectively cleared of its patrons, despite the protests of the barkeeper, and the bully sat down to despatch a few terse sentences to his tardy friend, upon the receipt of which, Julius, with the aid of Caleb, his old family servant, quickly packed his traveling bag and started on a little journey, which he wrote to M. Rouser, would surely keep him away several months.

As Caleb pushed out the rowboat which was to take his master to the railroad station by a short cut, he tumbled into the water, and Julius upon coming to his aid, met with the same fate, while the boat with his coat and bag drifted calmly away. Hastily they returned to the house for dry clothing, but had scarcely reached the sitting room, when a violent ringing of the bell and a cautious glance through the window warned them that Mr. Rouser, true to his promise, had arrived! Caleb had scarcely time to lock his master in the bedroom before their unwelcome guest after shooting off the lock on the door, strode angrily into the room, and to the servant's consternation declared that he would camp right there until Mr. Jones returned!

Julius had gone supperless to bed, and had almost given up hopes of breakfast, when his door opened stealthily and Caleb appeared—not with breakfast, however, but the morning paper with the headlines, "'Julius Jones Drowned—Body Not Yet Recovered!" Then followed a long account of the empty boat, the coat and suitcase. But comment was cut short by Mr. Rouser lustily calling for breakfast! As it was impossible for Caleb to get out through the sitting-room, Julius hastily tied the sheets together and assisted him out of the window.

All might have gone well had it not been for the new policeman, who, seeing a man leaving the house in that fashion, called for assistance, and in a few moments, not only were Caleb and Hank whisked off to the station house, but Julius as well. Fortunately, the lieutenant recognized the latter and his servant, and at once discharged them, while "Big Noise Hank" was unceremoniously locked up for carrying concealed weapons and disturbing the peace.

MUTT AND JEFF AND THE LADY STENOGRAPHER (Nov. 4).—Hurrah! Mutt and Jeff go into the life insurance business; the former as a canvasser and the latter (lucky dog!) as a chair-warmer in the company's office.

Mutt tries his "muttiest" to insure various people, but his efforts spell failure. Though a magnet, he's not magnetic, and the people's wrath as well as hands and feet are drawn to him. At last, an old man permits the persistent canvasser to explain the multitudinous advantages of insurance; but, alas! the aged fellow, though a very good listener, does not hear—he's both deaf and dumb.

Jeff, however, fares quite differently; he is "solid" with the man "higher up" and is making a decided hit with charming lady stenographer. The little chap believes in making hay while the sun shines, and as a result, the girl coyly consents to go to the theater with him this very evening.

Mutt tires of the "receiver general" job and goes home pretty well mussed up and feeling pretty sore. Here he finds his little friend all spruced up and enveloped in his evening togs. What's up? Jeff won't tell and departs. Mutt follows; and at the affectionate meeting of Jeff with the pretty gir-r-r-l, his optics bulge out with envy.

Will the lady be glad to see a nickel show? No; she will not. Mutt comes to the rescue and walks away with the fair one.

Who is that big, burly gent camping on Jeff's trail? The stenog's hubby. Ha! the plot thickens. With a diplomatic whisper Jeff saves himself, and the tough "gink" goes after the "tall" game. Poor Mutt gets the finishing touches and soon reposes on the cold, cold ground. The "woman in the case" casts a derisive smile at the fallen Don Juan and leisurely walks away with her hubby.

Jeff, true to his business training, sits upon Mutt's chest and hastily writes him a life insurance policy.

THE SUITCASE MYSTERY (Nov. 4).—"Red Mike" and "Yellow Joe," a pair of crooks, overhear Ethelyn Flounce's appeal to Policeman Mac-, club. Her suitcase, filled with all her valuables, has been stolen. Won't the uniformed chap please find it for her? He will.

The two crooks are also on the lookout for the lady's valuables, and prove to be better sleuths than the guardian of the peace. From the interior of an auction room issues forth a man and a suitcase. The man fits the description given to the police and the case well. "Red Mike" and his companion, "Yellow Joe," are very much on the job and follow both the man and the suitcase.

After some patient work on the pursuer's part, they almost succeed in getting the lady's valuables, but the lynx-eyed officer of the law is there with bells on and captures man, suitcase and valuables—three Teddy bears and a doll.

RELIANCE.

A MIX-UP IN SUIT CASES (Nov. 1).—Arthur Jones, at a summer resort, goes fishing. His bait giving out he pulls for shore and replenishes his bait box. At the fisherman's hut he meets Helen Brown, a pretty summer girl. Later, as she rows past him, he essays a coirtly bow from his boat and tumbles into the water. He is pulled out by the fisherman, and his dripping, bedraggled condition awakens the mirth of the girl and arouses his ire. He is compelled to don the fisherman's clothes while his garments dry, and the ill-fitting garments make him appear ludicrous. Before starting for home he is invited to a house party. So is Helen. When they depart they get each other's suitcases by mistake. On reaching home she opens her suitcase and finds pajamas, socks, etc. He discovers lingerie, stockings, etc., in the case he gets. He immediately goes to her home, exchanges the suitcases and finally wins her hand.

THE GREATER LOVE (Nov. 4).—Burns and Harris, two fishermen, are in love with Rose, the belle of the seaside village. Harris is the favored one, and Burns lays a trap for him by having his friends ply Harris with liquor previous to an appointment with Rose. When Harris calls on Rose he finds Burns there, and his intoxicated condition causes Rose to turn from him and accept Burns. When the rivals meet a few days later on the seashore a fierce struggle takes place, but they are separated by mutual friends. The two men are on the fishing schooner, some days later, which is destroyed by the storm, and they are the sole survivors, keeping afloat on a raft. Burns becomes insane from exposure, grabs the precious jug of water and drains the last drop, and then attempts to kill Harris. Realizing that he must either kill Burns in self-defense or leave the raft, Harris leaps into the water, and after being buffeted about is finally cast up on the shore. His story is not believed by the people, who openly accuse him of murder. Burns is picked up by a boat in a dying condition. He tells the whole story before expiring, and Rose, realizing the injustice she has done Harris, goes to his cabin to plead for forgiveness. Looking through the window she sees him with a pistol in his hand contemplating suicide. Rushing into the room she explains the situation, and Harris tenderly clasps the girl in his arms.

BISON.

THE CATTLEMEN'S WAR (Oct. 31).—Helen Fisher and Jack Logan, children of neighboring ranchmen, become engaged. At the round-up the cowboys of the rival ranches get into a dispute over a stray calf and blows are struck and Fisher's men driven away. Old man Fisher is very angry when he gets a report of the incident, and backs up his men. Logan refuses to give in, and the war is on. Helen and Jack get the sheriff to stop hostilities, and Jack purchases a cow and makes a present of it to Fisher. This peace offering shows the ranchers the pettiness of their quarrel, and they shake hands, much ashamed of their hot-headedness.

A YOUNG SQUAW'S BRAVERY (Nov. 3).—The Cheyennes open up hostilities by fatally wounding a lone Sioux warrior. His horse carries him to the Sioux camp, where he tells the story of the attack and expires. The Sioux go on the warpath and in a fierce battle Big Thunder is captured by the Cheyennes. His sweetheart, by tricking a Cheyenne brave, enters the Cheyenne village and cuts Big Thunder's bonds. The lovers escape, but are hotly pursued. Brought to bay, and fighting for their lives, they are rescued by the Sioux warriors, who swoop down upon the Cheyennes and defeat them in an exciting battle.

AMBROSIO.

JUDAS (Nov. 1).—The picture opens with Christ preaching to the multitudes. Priscilla, a wealthy woman of great beauty, tells Judas to request the Messiah to rest at her house. Christ rebukes her with the words: "Woman, your thought is sinful: the Son of God will not stay beneath your roof." With his disciples, he then proceeds on his way, working miracles, healing the sick, etc.

Priscilla, full of hatred, persuades Judas, who loves her, to go to the Romans and bertay the whereabouts of Chirst for a sum of money. Christ is taken by the soldiers, and Priscilla, from her balcony sees him pass to Calvary bearing the cross upon which he is to suffer. Remorse seizes her, and when Judas comes to claim the reward of his treachery a sensational scene takes place, in which Judas is spurned. Rushing to the place of execution Priscilla casts herself before the cross and begs forgiveness of the suffering Christ. Judas sees her, and filled with horror at the terrible act he has committed, he is so overcome by his accusing conscience that he ends his life by hanging himself to a tree.

LUX.

BILL AND THE BEAR (Nov. 3).—Bill and his little bear are employed to track burglars. They succeed in tracking them to a river where bruin spends a lively quarter of an hour fishing them out one by one. The bear quite enjoys his unexpected bath, and succeeds in obtaining free board and lodging for several little burglars.

TOMMY'S CAMERA (Nov. 3).—Tommy has been a good boy at school and his delighted parents present him with a camera. Tommy then sets out in search of something to snapshot. Going into the kitchen he soon finds a subject worthy of his attention. The cook and the butler are snapshotted in the act of consuming their master's whiskey. Unknown to them Tommy steals quietly out and goes into his auntie's bedroom. He manages to snapshot that dear old lady in the act of removing her wig. The old lady does not notice his presence and neither do his fond mamma and papa when they have a slight tiff and papa gets his face slapped. Tommy's sister and the nice young man that calls to talk finance with papa are also caught in a compromising attitude. The consternation of the guilty ones can well be imagined when they enthusiastically inspect the negatives. The cream of the joke is when they each get hold of the negative which reveals to them the misdeeds of the others. They all start laughing at each other, but the laughter dies away when they exchange negatives.

AMERICAN.

THE STRONGER MAN (Oct. 30).—Cliff Judson, a notorious bad man, in a drunken imbroglio, claims another victim. He tells his sweetheart that the shooting was accidental and she believes him. He is supplied with food and water and makes for the desert.

Bert Stevens, the sheriff, soon discovers his trail, and not waiting for any supplies, such as what Judson took along, soon follows him. After riding a long time he locates Judson, with the aid of his fieldglass, preparing to camp. He pushes on and soon has his captive in his power.

Stevens, who is now feeling the horrors of thirst and exposure to the sun, suddenly becomes blind. Judson takes advantage of the opportunity, and deliberately shoots the sheriff. He finds the key to the handcuffs and is soon freed. Judson then returns to his sweetheart and tells her that the sheriff did not find him. She does not believe his story, and after he has repaired to the mountains, goes in search of the sheriff.

He is found by Bessie in an unconscious condition, but is soon revived by water. She takes him home and nurses him back to health.

Sometime after Judson visits his sweetheart, who accuses him of attempting to kill the sheriff. A quarrel follows, but it is stopped by the appearance of the sheriff. Judson is ordered out of the country. He repairs to the saloon, borrows a gun and when the sheriff appears, fires at him. He misses. The sheriff, in self-defence, shoots and mortally wounds Judson. Bessie, who had followed, rushes to the sheriff's side, ignoring her erstwhile lover, for she has learned that he is the nobler man.

THE WATER WAR (Nov. 2).—Ed Newton gets into trouble with the ranchmen as soon as he starts surveying for a big dam. Tom Daniels rides up and informs him that Bill Dolan, one of the wealthiest ranchmen, wishes to see him. He goes and is told by Dolan that the work must be stopped at once. Dolan tries to impress upon Newton, but without effect, the fact that his reservoir meets all the requirements. Here Newton meets Margaret, the ranchman's daughter.

After the surveying has been completed and the work begun, the arrogant ranchmen attack the workers of the dam, in which battle Ed Newton and Bill Dolan are seriously injured.

Hostilities having ended, the injured engineer is cared for at the Dolan home. During his stay there he and Margaret have fallen in love, much to the disgust of Tom Daniels, who thought that he would be the one to win her hand. So Daniels swears revenge.

When the big dam is finished Ed shows Margaret over the place. In the tower they discover a bomb which had been placed there by Daniels. Margaret throws it into the river. A fierce struggle ensues between Daniels and Newton, in which Daniels is finally bested and thrown into the river below.

THE THREE SHELL GAME (Nov. 6).—Dick Hankle, an outcast, is seen crawling out from beneath a freight car. After many rebuffs he finally secures work at the Weston ranch, where he is made welcome by the daughter Clara and her mother.

Weston and Dick start for the bank to pay off a mortgage long due. At the entrance to the bank they are attracted by a three shell game and despite the remonstrances of Dick, Weston gambles away his money, returning heart-broken to his home.

Clara and her mother blame Dick for their father's weakness. Appalled by his desperate situation, Dick goes forth into the mountains, where he luckily meets the three shell gambler, whom he holds up at the point of his revolver. He then goes back to the ranch and returns Weston's money. In the joy which follows he successfully pleads his cause with Clara, who had learned to love him during their brief acquaintance.

SOLAX.

FOLLOWING COUSIN'S FOOTSTEPS (Nov. 1).—George Moore, a young man living in the country, visits his cousin, Harold Sidney, in New York City. He tells Harold he has come to have a good time and Harold promises to break him in. Harold shows him a number of photographs of different girls giving a little story with each. George sits with eyes and mouth wide open taking it all in. George refuses a cigarette, but Harold tells him in order to be a sport he must learn to smoke. The usual sick scene follows. The next day Harold, dressed as the typical college boy, takes George for a walk. Harold flirts with several girls and makes engagements. They escort two girls to a soda fountain. George is very bashful and the girls make fun of him. He slips out and runs home. Harold finds him at the house and tells him he has got to be a sport and go out and get acquainted. George goes to the park alone. He tries to flirt with a couple of girls, but they get indignant and threaten to call an officer. He walks away, gets some cards printed. After making faces at a young lady, he offers her his card. She bangs him on the head with her parasol and he runs away. Thinking his clothing is what is causing him to be turned down, he buys a flashy suit and cane and goes out to try again. He gets very bold and finally gets thrown in the pond. Harold witnesses the ducking and rescues his cousin, who has had enough and wants to go home.

A HEROINE OF THE REVOLUTION (Nov. 3).—Ruth Fairfax lived with her widowed mother on the banks of the Potomac. She was in love with Will Rathburn. Will is a captain in Washington's army. One day while going to the spring, she sees two British soldiers hold up an American soldier and take from him a message from George Washington to Colonel Montgomery. Ruth, hiding behind a tree, hears one of the British soldiers read the message, which is to the effect that Colonel Montgomery must turn his regiment aside in order to elude 5,000 British soldiers who are lying in ambush waiting for him. She rushes out, grabs the message and runs home followed by one of the British soldiers. She jumps on horseback and flies to warn Montgomery. A most exciting chase follows. She reaches the American regiment just in time to save them, and falls in her lover's arms.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE ACTOR AS A SOLDIER (Nov. 4).—Smith's time to become a soldier under conscription has arrived. Smith is an actor, and we see him at a farewell dinner given him by his pals. He makes a bet that on the following Monday morning he will be back with them, exempt from all military service. Off he goes to the barracks, and soon we see him attired in his new garb. He adopts all sorts of tricks in order to win his bet. In his squad he does everything wrong. His rifle always gets on the wrong shoulder; his fingers get jambled in the barrel. On sentry duty, he wraps himself up with all manner of apparel to keep out the cold. Before the commanding officer or at mess, he appears as Hamlet, or Napoleon, and is always giving one the impression of a mad actor. Taken before the surgeon, he is examined and his antics procure for him the coveted document informing all and sundry that "Mr. John Smith is unqualified for military service on account of mental debility." Armed with this, he repairs to the restaurant where his friends have assembled in the hope of winning their bet. But they are doomed to disappointment for at the stroke of time agreed upon, Smith enters and collects ten to one all around.

POWERS.

FOR THE TRIBE (Nov. 11).—Frank Deerhead is his name to-day. It's twenty years since Banker Ferguson adopted him, and took him away from the land of tepees to the East, where he became one of the Ferguson family, and a valuable business aid, trusted and highly honored by the old banker. More than that; in fact, for it had long been whispered about that the handsome cultured Indian was paying reciprocated court to pretty Jane Ferguson.

He wrote his father, Chief Sharp Arrow, often, and he was the pride of the tribe. One day the long-kept peace of the tribe was broken by Fierce Wolf, who incited his Indian brethren to rise against their white neighbors. Old Sharp Arrow delivered a mighty oration, pleading with the braves to be peaceful, but they would not have it so, telling him he was old and tired of the excitement they craved. So the old chief sent for his son, from the land of the white man.

And Frank came. Came, and saw, and conquered. But even while he was preparing to go back to his love and the Eastern light, Fierce Wolf, the plotter, laid the old chief low in a jealous rage. But before he went to the Happy Hunting Grounds, he called his son to him and charged him with the duty of keeping peace in the tribe.

Frank's situation—Jane Ferguson, luxury, civilization on one hand; on the other, his father's last wish that he remain the Indian chief he was born to be. And now, as ever, the call of blood, of race, of tradition and the primal order of things—conquers absolutely. Frank is an Indian.

MOBILIZATION OF THE AMERICAN FLEET (Nov. 7).—The gathering of the greatest fleet ever assembled under the American flag has set the world agog. One hundred and two fighting vessels strung along the beautiful Hudson River is an inspiring sight, and most appropriate it is that Uncle Sam chose that magnificent setting for this gigantic display of his strength on the seas. We steam up along the line of grim fighters, then take a survey of the general make-up of several of the biggest of the water bull-dogs, with their trim decks and majestic new-style skeleton masts.

But even more than this, for we now go into the quarters of the men, and call them out on the big parade deck to go through their masterful drills for us. We size up the work of various crews, then watch them at the serious work of keeping their big floating home in order. By this time they are all pretty well tired out, so they adjourn to the forecastle, and start their dances, music, and those hundred and one pranks and tricks that have made your Uncle Sammy's Jacktars the rollicking, jolly sailor boys that they are.

REX.

THE TALE OF A CAT (Nov. 2).—Mrs. Moore takes in washing to support herself and her blind little child Helen. Among her patrons is Mr. Thornton, a wealthy widower. His little motherless boy, Robert, alone and lonely all day in the big, empty house, with its luxury and dreariness, its wealth and woe, yearns for a comrade. So Mr. Thornton gives him a kitten to be a companion to him. Housekeepers are not the most tender and sentimental brand of humanity, and Thornton's housekeeper, determined to be rid of the feline nuisance, gives it to Mrs. Moore when she calls for her wash.

The heart of the blind little girl is made happy by the soft, furry, little pussy. So, as all through life, one's joy is another's grief.

Then Fate, or a feline whim, or the wander-lust, or kittenish kittishness, impels the cat to return to the scenes of her childhood. She meanders back to her former master, and the little girl is desolate over the loss of her loved possession. She sets out to find the treacherous treasure, and after an ardent and arduous search, discovers her in the proud and protecting possession of Master Thornton. She demands the cat, and what at first looks like a belligerent episode transforms into a peace congress. The boy looks at the tender little face, shy and sweet and sombre with the shadow of suffering. He looks into her unseeing eyes, and something that one day the world would call manhood, comes to the fore. That which more than any other one thing has banished brutality and bestiality from the earth and made men civilized—the little thing called sympathy—surges through the three feet of his being, an eloquent response to the silent sorrow of the other. They become friends.

Mrs. Moore, anxious about the girl's absence, sets out to seek her, and finds the three playmates together. She asks the girl to come home, but the boy, who now wants to keep his new playmate, even more than before he wanted to keep the cat, protests. He appeals to his father to detain the girl, and the latter solves the problem by engaging Mrs. Moore as housekeeper.

Mr. Thornton procures surgical assistance for the girl. The operation is successful, and the little blind girl can at last SEE the blessings of friendship. The years fly by, you know, and perhaps some day the boy and girl will tell another little boy and girl to love dumb animals.

YANKEE.

A COWARD'S REGENERATION (Nov. 6).—Courage was never a great factor in the make up of Dick Moore, and when his father orders him to give up the girl whom he loves, Dick, after a mild excuse, consents to do so. But when he meets his sweetheart, her love and beauty overcome all promises and he decides to run away.

In the mean time, the butler and his wife decide to rob the old man of a large sum of money, and in the struggle which ensued, the butler picks up a riding crop which belongs to Dick and strikes the old man in the head, killing him instantly. Dick's crop is considered sufficient evidence and a general search is made for him. Instead of facing an inquiry, he deserts his sweetheart at a ferry landing and disappears.

A year later, as a private in the U. S. army, he volunteers to carry important papers across the enemy's camp and almost loses his life in the attempt. While in the hospital tent he is put in the care of a special nurse, in whom he recognizes the sweetheart he had deserted. Explanations follow and the young woman is finally satisfied that she can trust her future with the man, who, though at one time a coward, had completely vindicated himself in the brave action for his country.

HE DIDN'T LIKE THE TUNE (Nov. 10).—Mr. and Mrs. LeMoine have just returned from their honeymoon and are visited by Mrs. LeMoine's brother, Franklyn Bachelder. Mrs. LeMoine and her brother both possess musical talent and are very fond of one tune that they play as often as possible, which proves very annoying to Mr. LeMoine. His constant pleading to have them play something else proves unavailing and at last the "worm turns." LeMoine, seated in his room, hears the strains of the hated tune and in a rage rushes down to the music room and tearing the violin from his wife's hands smashes it into a thousand pieces.

The wife and brother plan to repay him for his loss of temper by pretending that the wife has eloped with another man. They leave a note stating these facts and leave the house.

The brother disguises himself and taking two grips they board a train. When the husband reads the note he jumps into an auto and gives chase. An exciting race takes place between the auto and train, in which the train wins. The supposed elopers board a launch and are chased in another by the husband. The chase continues in carriage and auto until finally in a roundabout way the elopers reach their home and are having a hearty laugh over their sweet revenge when the husband comes. When he discovers the trick he shamefacedly promises never again to interefere with their music and to buy his wife a new violin.

Book Your Churches

AND CLEAN UP FORTUNE AFTER FORTUNE WITH THE CRUSADERS

OR JERUSALEM DELIVERED

(Copyright 1911, World's Best Film Co.)

Owners of state rights to "The Crusaders, or Jerusalem Delivered" are making a mint of money by booking all the big churches in their territory AFTER they have cleaned up the bookings of theatres in the very same cities and towns. Fifty cent admissions are a common occurrence. Imagine the pot of money you can make by booking on a fifty-fifty basis! You are letting a golden opportunity slip away from you if you don't secure the rights for at least one state. Some of the richest territory in the United States and Canada still open. Write or wire for particulars.

Melies Announcement

Beginning with our releases of November 2nd, "RIGHT OR WRONG?" and "MEXICAN AS IT IS SPOKEN," we will include in some of our Subjects a dissolving view of the actor or actress taking the leading part from ordinary attire into that used in the picture of vice versa, with the name appearing above.

The idea is to acquaint the public with our actors—popularize them—and create a greater interest in the picture.

G.MÉLIÈS

IN POISON'S GRIP. NOTHING BUT WHISKEY WILL SAVE.

The Spur of Necessity

"WHISKEY! At any price, by any means!" are the words of Mrs. Brown, whose husband, Jim, has been bitten by a deadly rattlesnake. To send to the nearest village would mean Jim's death, for the liquor must be administered within the hour. Jake Wilson, the only neighbor, is called upon for it. He, drunk, refuses. But a determined woman's will can work wonders. How necessity spurs Mrs. Brown to a drastic course of action that saves not only Jim's life, but Jake's career, is a breath-abating story.

THE MACHINE OF LONG SERVICE

Power's Cameragraph No. 6

The Only Moving Picture Machine Guaranteed Against Wear and Tear

Our fourteen years of experience in the exclusive building of moving picture machines have taught us many things that other manufacturers have still to learn. The culmination of our efforts to produce a moving picture machine for steady service is Power's Cameragraph No. 6. It is not only the superior of other machines in absence of flicker, steadiness of picture, ease in running and freedom from noise in operation; but it is the only machine on the market which is built to last.

The purchase of a Power's No. 6 is an investment; not an expense.

The Higher the Fewer

An Airy Aeroplane Comedy

Released Tuesday, November 14th

A prizefighter who inherits a mania for aeroplanes and a title, loves a cultured girl. He determines that this "swell dame" should carry his name through life. So he carries her off in an aero-plane and cinches things up in the air—for the higher he went the fewer thoughts his sweetheart had of his rivals. A number of delicate comedy situations punctuate the story. The "big scene" shows the prizefighter dressed in a frock coat and silk hat, going up with the "swell dame" at his side, defying the laws of gravitation.

A MOTHER'S FAITH

The Story of a Resurrection

Released Friday, November 17th

The never-do-well son of a rich man "goes wrong" but throughout his long career of dissipation his mother never loses faith in him. After the death of his father the son comes back, a broken-down tramp. His sister sees him before he sees his mother and she advises him to go out into the world and "make good"—and thus sustain his mother's unbroken faith. The boy strikes out and after years comes back a man who knows how to earn a living by toil. This story will bring many a tear.

Yes, GRIT Did It. GRIT Triumphs is one of the prime factors of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Co.'s success.

GRIT

GRIT

is worked into every element of the Sales Co.'s organization. It's ours by birth and by cultivation.

GRIT

Independent grit opened the doors of theatres playing stock company, vaudeville and legitimate drama to make way for the motion picture plays released by the Sales Company.

THE BATTLE

An Influence that Makes the Hero

In the days of old [illegible] were urged to deeds of valor and heroism by thoughts of "the girl he left behind." This story tells of the transforming of a pusillanimous coward into a lion-hearted hero by the derision of the girl he loved. The battle takes place outside her home, and he, panic-stricken, rushes in, trembling with fear, to hide. She laughs in scorn at his cowardice and commands him to go back and fight. Her fortitude inspires him, and he manages to rejoin his company before his absence is noticed. Ammunition is low and somebody must take the hazardous journey to procure more from another regiment, which he volunteers to do. This undertaking cannot be adequately described, for the young man faces death at every turn. The most thrilling part of his experience is where the opposing forces build bonfires along the road to menace the powder-wagon. This, without question, is the most stirring war picture ever produced

Approximate Length, 1,084 Feet

THE TRAIL OF BOOKS

How a Reconciliation Was Brought About Between Husband and Wife

The couple quarrel over a trivial matter and a separation seems inevitable. Their little child understands there is something wrong and endeavors to smooth matters, without avail. Left alone, she goes out to amuse herself, and as several children pass on their way to school, she wants to accompany them. They playfully tell her she has no books. An idea! She goes into the house and gathers up an armful of books out of the bookcase, and off she starts by her "lonely." During this time mamma has been packing up her trunk to leave the place, and has ordered the expressman to call. In readiness to go, she looks for the child, and the only clue leading to her whereabouts is the finding of a book on the front lawn. The expressman remembers passing, in fact almost running over, a little tot with her arms full of books. The dropping of these books leads the mother on, accompanied by the expressman, until they find her in the hands of a couple of tramps. How she gets there is impossible to describe in a short space. You may be assured that by this time the parents' quarrel has been forgotten.

Approximate Length 994 Feet.

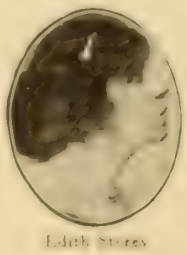
VITAGRAPH

"HER COWBOY LOVER"

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 6th



Edith Storey

There's a dare and dash to it that keeps us going; there's an element of humor about it, too. The race between the cowboy's broncho and the automobile keep things moving at a lively pace. When the lover lifts the girl from the auto onto the back of his galloping horse, we have a climax that makes us stare in amazement.

"AULD LANG SYNE"

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 7th

Miss Turner

"Hoot, Mon!" It's a two reel subject, both reels released on the same day. A headliner. Feature Film. A Scotch Lyric suggestive of "Bobbie Burns."

"ARBUTUS"

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 8th

Helen Gardner

It takes the eye and holds the attention by its logical sequence. The climax is convincing because it is right. Arbutus is a rare flower, suggesting the title. The play is a rarity in excellence of acting, photography and theme.

"WHO'S WHO?"

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10th

Maurice Costello

Let your people decide the question by exhibiting this felicitous comedy, giving them a good laugh and "getting in right" with them.

"AN AEROPLANE ELOPEMENT"

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 11th

Earl Williams

"A Flyer." By all means get in on this and treat your patrons to a sight they will never forget. It fairly whizzes with thrilling races between motor boat, railroad train and automobile. The elopers win by a big margin.

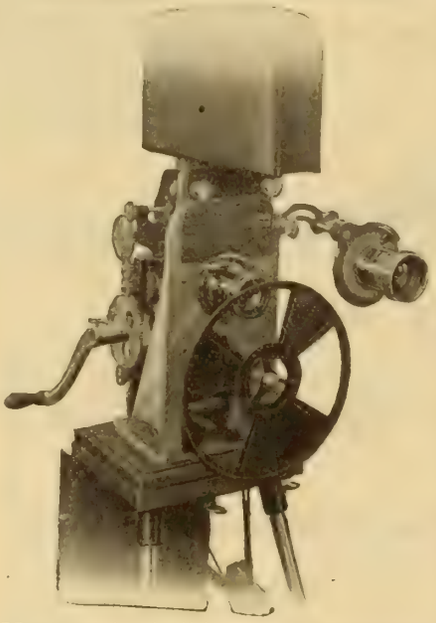
Thomas A Edison

A motion picture show can't be any better than the machine that produces it.
You can't expect a cheap machine to give good exhibitions any more than you can expect a boy to do a man's work. You're going into the motion picture business to stay? —then start with the right machine. Don't risk throwing your entire investment to the birds to save the slight difference in cost between a cheap machine and

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

The Best Motion Picture Machine Made



You can't build up a constant, steady patronage with a machine that flickers, breaks down, requires constant repairs and at best lasts only a fraction as long as the Edison. The Edison will outlast any motion picture machine made, is simplest to operate, most accessible, and all parts are interchangeable. The pictures it projects are constant, clear and steady. It is the machine that will make money for you.

Facts and Comments

WE want to do what we can to discourage the notion, so prevalent among the moving picture constituency, that no particular histrionic ability or experience is required to become a successful thespian of the silent stage. This idea is not confined to the "fans" generally, but finds credence in many circles, entitled to know better. Perhaps the reported statement of a well-known director, to the effect that he looked more for types than for individuals has given rise to this heresy. The director's statement, assuming it has been made at all, has been imperfectly understood. There is deep truth in the saying, that types rather than individuals are sought. How is the type sought for to be represented except through individuals? A type is often nothing more than a composite picture. The composite picture may to an extent be fanciful, but it must always express certain well defined characteristics of a set of individuals, pursuing a certain vocation or holding a certain position in the social order. To become a type therefore for the purpose of the silent stage the actor must have such characteristics or must be able to successfully simulate them in addition to having the average histrionic ability.

To one who has followed the progress of the silent stage from its humble beginning, nothing seems more striking than the development of special histrionic skill, different and distinct from that displayed on the speaking stage. A capable and experienced actor of the silent stage will be able to convey without sound of words emotions at once subtle and profound. The gifted artist cannot help improving in his art through constant practise and we could at this moment name three, possibly four actors capable of transmitting into the minds of the spectators a distinct picture of all the light and darkness of Hamlet's soul without uttering a word. There is no doubt that this art is capable of extraordinary development, which will far transcend the comparatively narrow limits of mere pantomime, using the latter word in its generally accepted sense. It is a curious and significant fact that many renowned actors of the speaking stage are at first lost when they attempt to find the soul of the audience without using lips and tongue. The best of them must have their preparatory sessions with the camera before they can make their art assert itself. This is notably true of the famous French actor Mounet-Sully, who has repeatedly acted in classic productions for the Pathe Company.

WE are sincerely sorry to observe that a Miss Kate Davis, described as a contributor to a "Mother's Magazine" at the Mother's Congress of Pennsylvania, held at Williamsport in that state, characterized the moving pictures as "a hotbed of iniquity." The lady further remarked that they were "training schools for criminals," recruiting grounds for white slavery and the houses of ill fame." These startling statements the lady assures us are backed up by "criminal court records, police reports and the Florence Crittenden Home Statistics." Miss Davis said a good deal more, but what we have cited above will give a fair indication of the general character of her remarks. It is said, that Miss Davis would like to become a moving picture censor in the State of Pennsylvania. In that state the censor receives the handsome emolument of two dollars and fifty cents per reel. Of course we cannot know, to what length the lady mentioned would carry her destructive censorship, if she were appointed. There is scarcely much danger of her being appointed, for the Keystone state is governed by a stalwart political machine and there are scores of party hacks after the job.

Now while Miss Davis is waiting for the improbable she ought to have ample time to answer a few questions which we think it fair to ask of her. Where have these fearful pictures been shown? Has she seen them herself? If she has seen them herself will she, in the interest of clean pictures, be kind enough to give their titles and enable us to look them up. While we have not seen every picture made in the last year we have seen a good many and of those we have not seen we have received competent reports. We would frankly consign thousands upon thousands of feet to oblivion, not because they were immoral or degrading, but stupid, monotonous and tiresome. The percentage which is objectionable on strictly moral grounds is small enough to be negligible. Does Miss Davis know that we have a National Board of Censorship in which American womanhood is very fittingly represented? Perhaps we are wasting space and time in replying to this dismal hoot from an obscure individual, but it seems hard to let such reckless strictures from a woman go unchallenged. Women are the best friends of the picture and the friendship is mutual. Wilkesbarre, the home of Miss Davis, we have always regarded as one of the best moving picture cities in Pennsylvania and as far as we know all the theaters there and in the sister city of Scranton are conducted on a high plane.

THE vexing problem of catering to two different and distinct tastes at almost the same time and always in the same place continues to worry managers, who think they must mix pictures and vaudeville. They recognize the painful truth that the people, who dote on cheap vaudeville, do not always rise to the higher level of the moving picture, while the friends of the latter, a more refined and intelligent class, turn in unfeigned horror from the vaudeville. Seeking in their distress to please both classes, some managers now propose to feed the neuropathics, that crave cheap vaudeville at certain hours only and devote the rest of the time to the patrons of the pictures exclusively. We wish them all the success in the world, notwithstanding our firm conviction, that this will be no solution of the problem. As far as the average moving picture house is concerned we are inclined to hold that it has passed the vaudeville disease in its worst form some time ago. The moving picture entertainment has a sound constitution and thrives even where the noxious weeds of cheap vaudeville seek to choke out its life. In the meantime it will be interesting to watch the experiment of catering to the two elements of the amusement-seeking public in the same house at different times. The result may not be an absolute test, but it will compel the devotees of anthropoid vaudeville to stand up and be counted.

Over Their Heads.

By LOUIS REEVES HARRISON.

AFTER sixty thousand years of savagery and thirty-five thousand of older, middle and later periods of barbarism, and two thousand years of the Christian era and about a hundred years of civilization we seem to be at the dawn of enlightenment, but to hear some men talk about audiences one would think that those who attend the moving picture shows constitute the lowest and vilest element on earth. Music, graphic art, drama, romance and poetry have been enjoyed and appreciated for two thousand years by the common people, yet individuals still exist to tell us in a burst of lofty self-appreciation how careful we should be not to write over the heads of those most eager to learn and keenest to enjoy what is good—those who work hard and get so little for it that they need entertainment that is not costly. Down among the commonest of common people in the midst of hard struggle I find that men are in deadly earnest, with large-horizoned ideas of humanity's perfections and imperfections, have that individual initiative and capacity for effort that springs largely from hard necessity. The work of meeting progressive needs so keenly stimulates the mind that no one need be amazed to find the most thoughtful among those who honestly earn every dollar they get.

There is an amusing story told by a playwright who took an historical drama written about the lost boy-king, Louis of France, entitled "The Dauphin" to a producer. The producer pursed his lips, looked wise and said: "You will have to change the title because people will not understand a play named for a fish."

It looks as though the heads we are writing over are not those of the audience.

It is no easy matter to prejudge the taste of millions of men, women and children. No individual publisher or producer can do more than make a guess at it and when he guesses wrong he hates to acknowledge failure and falls back upon denunciation of what he should respect—the really keen and discriminating judgment of the whole people. When an editor is so unfit for the position he occupies that he can not bring up to the examination of an article or story the quality his readers expect we hear that "it is over the heads of the people." This in face of the fact that periodicals circulating up into the millions among these people pay the highest prices for literary quality. The editor who compares himself with his subscribers to their disparagement is masquerading in false colors, possibly for the sake of holding down a lucrative position for which nature failed to qualify him in a moment of sad forgetfulness. The same is true of the actor who almost sheds tears when common opinion refuses to place him in the spot light, and the director who says that it is not worth while doing well because merit will not be appreciated.

The men of real talent and power are not engaged in damning public taste, but in studying it.

Go to the matinees where there are mothers with babies and a lot of noisy children. Be not afraid—the child is the father of the man—of giving attention to what the kids say. Great scientists of modern times are studying children in the light of literature and evolution, and attempting to interpret through them some of the most interesting phenomena of human beginnings in the individual and the race. One of the most remarkable conclusions reached is that children are all ready and qualified for higher things than we are actually accomplishing and that our system of education checks rather than advances their possible growth. You will be amazed at their criticisms of photoplays, their clear perception of faulty details, their scornfully-expressed contempt for subtitles that explain what is obvious and their nice discrimination between theatrical pretense and that high art which seems not to be art at all. They laugh and jeer at supposed dramatic situations, especially at overacting in a tragic situation; they enjoy comedies that have something comical in them, such as weaknesses of human nature that we all recognize as a personal liability; they like a melodrama with snap and action in it with plenty of thrilling suspense; they sit absorbed in a truthful picture of a human being tortured by poverty or anxiety in a desperate struggle for release; they sometimes sympathize with a poor burglar who robs the bond-swindling capitalist and gets away with the spoil, but they never favor the despoliation of the wage-earner, who is deprived of a chance to work. They are nearly always in favor of what makes existence rational and enjoyable for all, though these views may be changed in later life.

Once in a while a producer puts out a meritorious play and goes to watch the presentation only to leave the theater in disgust at the reception accorded by the audience. During a lasting sense of indignation he grows careless and indifferent about future work. "What's the use?" he is inclined to say, but those are disappointments authors are obliged to meet when right types are not selected to fit the rôles or the action is obscured by faulty development. When failure ensues there is something wrong and close examination should follow rather than complete discouragement. Most often there is an idea lacking in the piece; there is no real reason for its performance other than an abortive attempt to arouse emotion by stale methods. Sometimes the drama is so intense that it sets people to thinking hard over similar situations in their own lives so that they become absorbed in thought and fail to give open recognition of what stimulated their minds. The greatest trouble lies either in a lack of good plays or ability to select from those submitted and this difficulty is on the increase because many deserving authors have been driven into other fields by those who should have encouraged dramatic composition. It is not fair to ask a playwright to submit a fine line of original scenarios for the sake of selling one or two at a rate that would not pay the salary of an office boy during the time consumed in their preparation and examination. Starting with the idea that capable authors are inclined to write "over the heads" of the audience, a vast amount of time and money is wasted in examining scripts of those amateurs who are compelled to keep their ears plugged for fear of catching cold from the draft through their skulls. Writing plays is as much a matter of professional knowledge and training as setting or acting them—the author often exercises the initial selection of what reaches the public—and no important part of the production should be entrusted to amateurs or incompetents. The scenarios of professional writers should be—and are in many cases—separated from the chaff and be given separate consideration based on mutual respect and common participation. Whenever and wherever this is done, photoplays result that are not above popular comprehension nor beneath notice.

SCHUCHMANN BUILDING NEW THEATER.

Peter Schuchmann, of Chicago, Ill., is building a beautiful fireproof picture theater at 518 South 48th Street, Chicago, which he expects to open about December 15. Mr. Schuchmann has owned and managed five different pictures theaters and promises that the new house will be a model in point of design and finish.

Must We Buy Our Peace?

By W. Stephen Bush.

FROM various parts of the country, from small towns and large cities comes the news of sporadic "crusades" by the daily papers against the moving pictures. The picture play is described as "immoral," the picture house is denounced as "a fire trap." Whence comes all this journalistic animosity? Are we expected to look credulous and believe that the papers are actuated solely by a desire to promote the public good? Are there no ulterior motives?

Let us have a little heart-to-heart talk with our esteemed daily contemporaries and throw the searchlight of simple truth into the editorial sanctum. To begin with: We do not believe that the installation or operation of a moving picture machine has ever resulted in the death of a single human being. At the death harvest of Boyerstown there were no moving pictures at all and the panic at Cannonsburg was due not to any mishandled electricity, but to a foolish cry of "fire." Now what of the toll of death at the holocausts of Chicago and Brooklyn, where theater fires resulted in a loss of life so terrible, that even at this distance of time we cannot recall the awful catastrophies without a shudder? What of the victims of theater fires since those dreadful events? What of the notorious immorality of so-called musical comedies here and elsewhere and suppressed even in New York City by an appeal to the police? What of the flaring posters of so-called burlesque shows, their rank dialogue and vulgar exhibitions of underdressed and overpowdered females? In regard to these things the trumpet of the editor is singularly silent. Why?

Because, friends and brethren, there is a thing in the land which is called a complimentary ticket. The "comp" issued to the journalistic "dead-head" and the advertisement handed into the counting room make all the difference in the world. The exhibitor of a moving picture entertainment charging five cents admission can never expect to make the same hit in the editorial sanctum as the gentle advance agent of the "Tough Girls" Company surrendering a half dozen of box seats to the editor for himself and his friends. We do not wish to be understood as saying that the free tickets to the moving picture house would be refused at the newspaper office; such an assumption we fully realize would be absurd in the extreme, but we do wish to say that mighty little immunity from unfavorable criticism is handed out for the small sum of five cents.

Let us, dear brethren of the daily press, beat our sinful breasts and admit that the complimentary ticket supplemented by a fair sized "ad" will do wonders of editorial partiality. Many a bucolic editor lashes himself into a fine moral frenzy over the prevalence of bribery in public life and laying down his vitriolic pen graciously accepts a goodly number of "comps" for himself and family and in consideration thereof turns the eulogistic hose on a production that stands more in need of the fire hose. Let the star-eyed Goddess of Truth weep as long as he can see the show without paying a cent for admission. He can salve such conscience as a long practise of the journalistic profession has left him by attacking the wicked moving pictures, "the source of all juvenile crime," etc., etc., etc. Nor is the editor of the city paper much superior to his rustic brother. There may be in very large cities individual critics whom "comps" and "ads" cannot influence, but they are exceptions. The free ticket is the tough band that joins press and theater in unholy wedlock. It is an axiom in the newspaper world: "Once a dead-head, always a dead-head." The sale of immunity from newspaper attack by the press to the theater is as notorious and open as the trade in herring or codfish.

Crystalized into practical advice to the exhibitor the lesson to be drawn from the foregoing remarks is a mighty simple one. If you want to avoid "crusades" advertise in the daily papers of your town. The law permits a man to buy his peace. A large percentage of advertising in the yellow press nowadays is based on this commercial, but solid foundation. Some time ago the exhibitors in Philadelphia had formed a project of advertising in common, proportioning the expense according to seating capacity of each place advertised. The project never reached more than the experimental stage, but the idea of advertising in common is surely a good one. If there are say fifty exhibitors in a place let them buy sufficient advertising space in the columns of their daily papers to assure them of consideration in the editorial department. Not only will they be benefited by a more friendly policy on the part of the newspaper, but it will help their attendance. Nothing is truer than that advertising pays. Then let them flood the editorial and counting rooms with "comps" and the improvement in the tone of the paper in its attitude toward moving pictures will soon be noticeable.

It is a well recognized fact, that the power of the press lies chiefly in the mischief it can do. At present the investment of exhibitors is too often imperilled and actually damaged by unwarranted, ignorant and malicious attacks in the newspapers. On the theory, that a man is entitled to protect his property by all lawful means, it is altogether proper for the exhibitor to appeal to the newspaper with the only kind of arguments, that seem to have any weight.

A Splendid Example

THE sensation-mongering sheet in Minneapolis, which endeavored to bolster up a waning circulation by printing malicious and mendacious reports about the alleged immoral and unsanitary conditions of moving picture theaters has now ample time to reflect on the proper meaning of the phrase: "I have caught a Tartar." Exactly in line with the advice given to them recently in these columns the exhibitors of Minneapolis have gone to the opposition paper, in this case very evidently a decent and responsible publication and have fired a broadside at their journalistic enemy. They at once took concerted action, formed a temporary and special organization, called upon the officials of the fire department for a refutation of the libellous articles printed in the yellow paper and prepared statements of facts, as they really exist. These statements cover the ground with skill and thoroughness. After making a general declaration to the effect, that a "thorough inspection of motion picture theaters reveals some minor defects, but not one fire trap," the aggrieved exhibitors put their respective places before the public in fair and honest descriptions, from which it must appear to an unbiased person, that no fault can be found.

The fire marshall, the city building inspector, the city electrician and the aldermen certify over their signatures and in an official document to the fact that they have examined the moving picture entertainment in Minneapolis with a view of finding unsafe and unsanitary features and that they found them "as a whole, to be safe and sanitary and as well safeguarded against fire as any class of public buildings in the city." The officials characterize the alarming and sensational reports as "unwarranted."

We congratulate the exhibitors of Minneapolis upon their intelligent action and their firm stand against scribbling maligners. They have taken the bull by the horns and have with admirable tact and judgment laid their cause before the forum of the public, which with all the facts before it, will, we are sure, quickly see through the base motives of the yellow prints. The exhibitors in Minneapolis have set an example well worth imitating in other localities should occasion demand it.

We express the ardent hope that the owners of the libeled moving picture theaters will not let the matter rest but take further action in order to make the lying sheet respond in substantial damages. There is nothing more calculated to cool the sensationalism and the hot and eager mendacity of the yellows than a libel suit and a heavy judgment. It will be warning to others as well as a justly deserved punishment for the original offender. In the present case it would seem that the libellous publication was wholly gratuitous and unwarranted, willfully injurious and an ideal case for the awarding of exemplary and punitive damages.

Friendly Legislation

THE proposed ordinance for regulating motion picture theaters in this city is set down as a subject for a public hearing in the Mayor's office on November 4th. The ordinance was drawn up by a special commission appointed by the Mayor and seems on the whole to have been conceived in a spirit distinctly friendly to the moving picture entertainment. The substantial features of the ordinance will be printed in our next issue for the benefit of the New York City exhibitors. As evidence of the friendly spirit pervading the ordinance we call attention to the two sections, one of which defines the motion picture house for the purposes of the ordinance as "any public hall or room in the City of New York, in which motion pictures are exhibited, in which the seating capacity does not exceed six hundred and in which there is no stage or scenery." This would seem an encouragement to exhibitors, who want to run a straight moving picture house and a blow at the mixed motion picture-vaudeville entertainment. The other section refers to the admission of children under sixteen years unaccompanied by parents or guardians. It proposes to admit children without any escort after school hours, provided that a certain portion of the auditorium be set aside for their exclusive use and that they must leave at 7 p. m. The part thus specially set aside for children under 16 years of age must be in charge of a matron, who is to be not under forty years of age and who must have a special license to be granted by the Mayor upon compliance with certain conditions.

Of course, this part of the ordinance would become operative only after a corresponding amendment of the state law, as at present embodied in the penal code. The commission who have drafted the proposed ordinance realize this fact and at the end of their draft suggest an amendment to the penal code of the State by inserting a provision which will allow the admission of minors under sixteen years of age into any moving picture house complying with that portion of the ordinance which sets aside a special space for children in charge of a matron. There is little doubt that the legislature, upon a proper request from the Mayor's special commission, which has drafted the ordinance, would amend the law as suggested. Of course, every exhibitor would be free to do as he pleased in the matter, if he does not want a special space for minors he need not have it and will be assumed to be willing to forego the benefits of it.

What we like best about the proposed ordinance is the implied recognition of the educational merits of the moving picture of today and the implied rebuke to those ignorant meddlers and fanatics, who can see nothing good in the motion picture and denounce it without rhyme and reason. Viewed from this standpoint, the action of the Mayor's commission is of interest to exhibitors of moving pictures everywhere and may well be regarded as a step forward in gaining public respect and confidence. Mayor Gaynor has always shown a special and most intelligent interest in children and we believe is a favorite with all young folks who come in contact with him. His commission in seeking to enable orderly and well behaved children to enjoy a moving picture entertainment has acted in the Mayor's spirit. A licensed matron will be a relief after the "plug uglies" and "bouncers," that are seen in too many local moving picture houses.

RANDOM SHOTS OF A PICTURE FAN.

It seems that one of my shots has missed fire recently and that I owe an apology to the Selig Polyscope Company. The Seligs put out a film called "Among the Japanese" and in criticizing it I ventured to say that the only thing Japanese about it were the Japs and that the picture was taken in Chicago and not in Japan. The Selig Company now declare that the picture was actually taken in Japan and name Professor Starr, of the University of Chicago, as the man who took the pictures on the spot. The explanation of my error is simple. The professor has no eye for scenic effects and what he showed of Japanese streets and markets and docks and bridges was not at all sharply characteristic, as it most assuredly would have been if a trained and experienced camera man from the Selig company had taken the pictures. That the mistake is an eloquent, if involuntary, tribute to the perfection of the Selig studio I can see very plainly. It is a tribute which the company well deserves. I believe, however, that the Selig directors will agree with me in my criticism of Prof. Starr's amateurishness in handling a moving picture camera, the work of which was intended for such a firm as Selig, from whom we have learned to expect the best at all times and under all circumstances.

While I am on the subject I do no more than voice the sentiments of the great majority of my fellow fans, when I say to the Seligs, "Palmam ferat, qui meruit." There is no question that they march in the van and it is with some effort that I now check my flow of praise for their excelling merits. I am happy to think I have been mistaken, for I well know that the reputation of the Selig company is dear to every true friend of the moving picture and especially to us fanatic fans who break into a happy smile every time the S and the diamond appear on the screen. By the way, their innovation of having the main title of the reel or subject appear in smaller type on every subtitle is hailed by all fans as a most happy idea.

While the operators and exhibitors (not to speak of the manufacturers) are organizing we fans might as well get busy and incorporate as "The Amalgamated & Discontended Knockers" or, if the majority prefer, as "The Consolidated Happy Boosters & Roosters." If we ever do get organized I think we will try to make an example of some of our deadly enemies, the operators, who remind one so much of what the Bostonese would call an inchoate and unsyncopated flush. New York City is jammed full of them. In the so-called best houses there is always trouble about such simple matters as framing the picture. It just tears the brain cells open to watch a couple hundred feet of a badly framed picture and, of course, the bad breaks always come just about when the climax is due. Film jumping off the sprockets and tearing, with the consequent delay, is another favorite sport of the operator, who has missed his vocation.

Last Summer I attended a moving picture entertainment in Pitman's Grove, N. J., somewhere between Purgatory and Hell. The operator was a young chap from Philadelphia and an expert in his line in spite of his very youthful appearance. I know that boy would have quit the operating business if he could not do a thousand and one per cent. better than some of our licensed men here in this so-called metropolis. Why don't you, Mr. Editor, start a search for a good moving picture house in New York City? With such detectives as Sherlocko and Watso on your staff you ought to be able to find one, if there is one to be found, which I respectfully, but firmly, refuse to believe.

Cannot something be started to keep the film manufacturers from doing the same thing at the same time? I just about resigned myself to one Indian picture per show, when I observe to my horror that the sleuth is now breaking into the pictures everywhere, Licensed, Independent and just plain pictures. The moving picture industry is very much in the limelight these days and in no position to stand a deluge of old sleuth stories. Give us variety—or cut it out. P. F.

Reviews of Notable Films

"THE EVILS OF IMPURE LITERATURE"—(Gaumont).

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

GAUMONT of late has been producing a series of subjects based on real life portrayals. Fifth among them is "The Evils of Impure Literature," which I viewed in George Kleine's private projecting room the other day. So far as a one-man's opinion goes, this film should be in great demand, as it affords a powerful object lesson on the dangers attending the reading of prurient literature by young people of both sexes.

The subject is a delicate one, but the Gaumont people have succeeded in preaching a great visual sermon without once offending refined good taste or the nice sensibility of pure minds.

The care taken by the author to prevent his own daughter of tender years from reading his famous work, while thousands of other girls, just as pure and good, are exposed to the temptation, shows a selfishness that happily is not often possessed by men of letters. But there is no improbability about the case of Paul Miral, the French author, whose Gospel of Love (that is the title of his work) created a sensation in literary circles, and secured for him the honor of being elected a member of the Society of Arts. What mattered it to the learned and distinguished members of the society that thousands of homes had been polluted by the work, since its literary merit appealed to their critical tastes! Good morals, forsooth! That factor of the equation remained for the church and good fathers and mothers to solve. But in the case of poor little Kitty of this story, the only child of a struggling widow, there was no guardian angel to snatch from her hands the poisoned work, and she went down in her tender maidenhood into the valley of dark shadows, to return, mercifully, a repentant Magdalene to her forgiving mother.

The scenes showing the interview at the Miral home, between Kitty's mother and Madame Miral, wife of the author, will appeal to all mothers. The interior shows luxury and gilded ease, and we see the fine scorn of the visitor when she notes these evidences of wealth and remembers that they have been secured at the expense of bleeding and broken hearts. When she has told her story, the tears of both women intermingle. The author enters at this juncture and is amazed at the spectacle. When he is introduced to the visitor the latter gives way to an outbreak of passionate reproach, accusing him as being the author of her girl's ruin. In a climax of rage she hurls the Gospel of Love at his head and is forcibly taken from the room by a man servant.

The home-coming of Kitty reveals fine, talented acting. The mother is seated at the supper table, but the meal is untasted, while she gazes abstractedly into space and is lost in thought. The door opens slightly, then a little more, and Kitty comes slowly and noiselessly in—like a shadow. The mother neither sees nor hears. She is thinking of her lost one. Kitty tries to speak, but her lips fail her. She tries again, and there is a slight sound, for we see the mother start and we feel that she thinks it a figment of her fancy. Then Kitty's lips frame in pleading tones the single word, Scene from "The Evils of Impure Literature"—Gaumont Subject, Kleine Release.

"Mother," and the elder woman gazes in affright, as if at an apparition.

In self loathing Kitty throws herself at her mother's feet, but she is gently raised to the mother's heart and is caressed with pitying touch. Then Kitty feels so undeserving of this great forgiveness and love, so foul a thing in comparison with this saintly mother of hers, she is obsessed with the conviction that she is not fit to breathe the same air. And we see her try to break loose from her mother's arms and go back into the night. But the arms clasp her more tightly, while kisses and tears are showered on the wan face.

Then that supper scene, where the starving child is waited on by the mother. I have rarely seen more subtle acting than is shown by the impersonator of Kitty. Those big, tired eyes, how they watch every movement of the mother and center often on her face, as if to read her very soul, and ascertain if it is possible that she—such a thing as she—can be taken back and be forgiven and the past forgotten. And we see the lines on her face grow softer and her eyes grow big in wonder, as she becomes convinced that her mother's love has done all these things.

I should like to see this picture presented with a musical program arranged by Organist De Carlisle, of the Grand Central Theater, St. Louis. It affords a splendid opportunity for all who delight in "playing the pictures."

The release date will be fixed some time in the near future.

"THE CHAINS OF AN OATH"—(Vitagraph).

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

A PHOTOPLAY well worth seeing for the powerful contract enforced between the lives of plain people in Russia and America, and for the remarkable character portrayal by Miss Edith Storey. An audience is often wearied by the sight of a peasant girl or squatter's wife in a photoplay, daubed with face powder, rouge and lip-salve, more outrageously slapped on than by the soubrette who gets "fifteen per" for singing through her teeth "By the Light of the Silvery Moon" at a vaudeville performance. Miss Storey is a wholesome girl of strong physique and natural conduct, who does not cause such a rule as that assigned her in the Russian play to appear like a drawing all out of proportion. The average actress makes up for a peasant as though she expected to appear in an operatic chorus and looks as much like one as a [illegible] like a woodland nymph. A very large part of the art of the motion-picture actress is subservient to accidents of person, such as form, features and nerve in emergencies, and too few of the ladies much photographed are really worth it because they depend upon artificial aids rather than open-air exercise for magnetic personality.

Acting is not subject to the conventional exactitude of painting, sculpture and poesy; it is largely an art of the individual, and a woman who carefully preserves her natural endowment of health by well-known means will be more effective in a picture than the creature who smirks and frets because photo-dramatic roles call for a self-expression or self-repression only reachable by women in fine control of their physical mechanism. Miss Storey's training has been that of an athlete while she has had small opportunity in the flimsy and commonplace cowboy, "hoop-la" drama that hits the lowbrow bing where the bones are thickest; she has been in a fine preparatory school for better things to come in Vitagraph production.

It is not an easy matter to truthfully portray the character of an Indian squaw or Russian peasant woman—both crushed and hopeless creatures—relegated to almost purposeless existence by the brutality and degradation of the male of low order. Dull, utterly miserable, dragging out an existence of semi-slavery without a redeeming spark of kindness or sympathy from the lords and masters, women of this class are not supposed to have anything that is heroic in their natures, whereas the reverse is the case. The suffering they endure enobles them in an inconspicuous way. The peasant girl in this play is bound by oath to marry a brute in her own class on the eve of departure for America to earn money for a father in extremity, and she not only performs her unselfish duty but respects the promise exacted from her to wed a man who is not her natural choice.

On reaching America the girl finds herself in a civilizing environment that appeals to all that is fine in her, is put in contact with the most unrestrained and complicated existence for women in the world, but she preserves her natural poise in spite of bewildering sensations aroused by her new surroundings. Charmed by the attractions of unchecked self-government, she improves rapidly, acquires an education and forms an intuitive attachment to a young man worthy of her in her superior condition. He declares his love and she is drawn to him by all the impulses of her sex, but is compelled by conscience to consider the prior engagement—a mere detail for the civilized woman—and resolves to fulfill it. There is no faltering, no tension, no attempt to compromise with her ideas of right and wrong; she leaves a tender note for the man she loves and goes back to the gloomy country of her birth ready for the sacrifice. She returns to her home and announces her readiness to keep faith from principles higher than those displayed in loftier circles of society and this forms the best part of the story, though there is relief at the end.

The producers are to be congratulated on a wise choice of type, and the young actress upon the art of concealing art that gives her impersonation a delightful fidelity to truth.

"FROM THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA"—(Imp).

THIS is the first two-reel Imp release. Briefly, it may be summed up as a sugar-coated educational picture dealing as it does principally with the operation and maneuvering of a United States submarine war vessel. Perhaps the principal difficulty of making a picture of this kind is the obtaining of permission from the government officials to allow a moving picture company such unlimited use of one of their vessels. In "From the Bottom of the Sea" we have one of the most interesting nautical pictures that has been produced in many a day and millions of people will marvel when it is finally released.

Scene "From the Bottom of the Sea" (Imp).

There has been woven around these naval maneuvers a story of heart interest that will keep it from being a dry educational picture to those who prefer human interest in the pictures. The story is a simple one, dealing with the love of a young ensign for the daughter of a United States Naval Lieutenant. The young man's love is reciprocated, but her father withholds his consent, for the reason that the young man has not yet made his mark. Hovering about is an attache of the Diplomatic Corps of a foreign power. He is a much older man than the young ensign and far more able to undertake the responsibilities of matrimony. But the lieutenant's daughter has made her choice and the lucky man is the ensign.

News comes that the ensign has been detailed to command a submarine torpedo boat. The lovers are pleased with this news, for they hope that soon this first commission will give the ensign an opportunity to prove his worth. He pays a visit to the submarine lying at the wharf accompanied by the unscrupulous diplomat, whom he does not suspect of any evil design. While in the hull of the deep sea vessel the foreign attache manages to steal the ballast tank blow valve, which is a part of the compressed air apparatus used in sinking and raising the vessel. Carefully concealing this beneath his coat the attache leaves the vessel in company with the ensign. The ensign returns later with the father of his sweetheart who is to go with the young suitor on the first trial spin and instruct him in the ways of handling the craft.

From this point forward the film becomes extremely interesting because of the maneuvers of the submarine boat.

Scene "From the Bottom of the Sea" (Imp).

We see the perfect handling of this remarkable craft as it rises and dips beneath the waves, completely submerging itself and rising again with an exactness and certainty that leaves little doubt in the mind of any beholder as to the practicability of the modern submarine. Following the thread of the story, there is trouble below with the vessel when an attempt is made to rise. The men are shown undergoing the physical and mental hardships incident to such a perilous predicament, all of which is done in a remarkably realistic way.

The acting, of course, is good, but what helps it immensely is the remarkable interior setting of the submarine vessel, which is pictured herewith. This interior setting deserves more than passing notice. The producers exerted every effort to make it an exact counterpart of the interior of the U. S. S. "Octopus," a submarine vessel stationed at Newport, R. I., where the picture was taken. A photograph was taken of the interoior of the "Octopus," measurements were carefully taken down and the scene was made with these as a pattern. Several days of painstaking work resulted in this stage setting, which cannot be commended too highly. So careful were the Imp people in arranging this scene that all the machinery represented was genuine and practical mechanism. Steamfitters were employed to cut and join the pipes, the valves and gauges and other mechanical parts. The scene in itself is a lesson on the interior construction of a submarine boat. We get an idea of the working of the periscope, which is an instrument that enables the sailors to see what is going on above the water line, while they themselves are 18 feet below. We see the water-depth gauge and the workings of compressed air apparatus in discharging torpedoes, rising and lowering the craft, etc., etc.

The point in the story is reached where the sailors are beginning to feel the terrible effects of their imprisonment. One of them goes out of his mind and unless something is done by some volunteer all hands will perish. This is the opportunity for the young ensign to make his name, and he is not long in realizing it. As the inspiration comes to him he volunteers to make his exit through the torpedo tube and go for help above. It is a desperate chance, but the only one. Into the torpedo tube he goes fearlessly. The heavy breech is closed and locked and he is propelled far out into the water by the great force of compressed air and is shot above the waves as by a catapult. He quickly reaches the parent ship which usually accompanies submarines on trial trips. This boat is equipped with a complete diving apparatus and other paraphernalia for the quick assistance of disabled submarines. It is not generally known, perhaps, that modern submarines are tapped on the side for a fresh air supply. A diver descends from the boat with an air tube, which he screws into a tap on the side of the submarine, and at once a fresh supply of air is pumped to the men within.

By these heroic means did the young ensign rescue the vessel and all those on board, including the father of the girl he loved. The villainous naval attache is confronted by the young ensign and accused of his murderous act which, no doubt, is the end of his official usefulness. After this the two lovers are gratefully united by the lieutenant and the young ensign honored and applauded by the seamen.

A CALIFORNIA FISH STORY.

Hungry Fish Nibble at Gaston Melies' Bait.

Mr. Gaston Melies has just returned to New York from Santa Catalina Island, Cal., where he spent a fortnight's vacation in drawing from the Pacific Ocean specimens of fish unprecedented for size in that locality. The photo herewith gives an excellent view of Mr. Melies and his haul, of which no less an authority than the Los Angeles Express has the following to say:

"AVALON, Oct. 8.—G. Melies came in with another catch of nineteen yellowfin tuna today, all landed on light tackle while fishing from the launch 'Heral.' His catch yesterday of a yellowfin tuna weighing thirty-six pounds is the record so far this year for this species of fish."

Mr. Melies will return shortly to the studio in Santa Paula.

JAY HUNT WITH ECLAIR.

Mr. Jay Hunt, for some time a director with the Vitagraph Company, has joined the Eclair forces at the Fort Lee Studio.

BERTRAM ADLER FULLY RECOVERED.

Friends of Bertram Adler, advertising manager of the Thanhouser Co., will be pleased to learn of his complete recovery from a severe case of typhoid fever. Mr. Adler is again back at his desk after six weeks in Lebanon Hospital, New York. We are glad to see this energetic young man once more on the job and sincerely hope that he will not be obliged to go through such an ordeal again.

The Los Angeles Tragedy

Insane Jap Attacked W. N. Selig and Francis Boggs—the Latter Instantly Killed—Selig Slightly Wounded.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

MOVING picture circles in Chicago and throughout the country were shocked last week by the news of the shooting of William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, and of Francis Boggs, general manager of the California plant. It was circulated at first that Mr. Selig had been shot dead and inquiries from anxious friends all over the city were received by 'phone at the general offices on Randolph Street. Finally it was learned that Mr. Selig was not seriously wounded, but that Mr. Boggs had been shot through the heart by an insane Japanese.

A telegram from James L. McGee, manager of the plant at Edendale, was received at the World office Monday, October 30, and read that Mr. Selig was doing nicely and that he would be out in a few days.

In the suspense that followed the first tidings of the affair, it was brought home with telling force to the minds of every one in the film business here that Mr. Selig's removal from the manufacturing field would mean a disastrous blow to the picture industry. The magnificent confidence he has shown in the future of moving pictures by investing over a million and a quarter in his Chicago and his Los Angeles plants has served as a stimulant to all his colleagues, while his liberal expenditures on productions have done much to raise pictures to their present high standard. That Mr. Selig has been spared is cause for great thankfulness and rejoicing, although we mourn with him over the untimely end of that sterling friend and manager, Francis Boggs.

Francis Boggs.

Francis Boggs joined the Selig forces in Chicago about four years ago, last September. He was a well known and capable actor and a successful stage manager at the time.

During the first three months spent in the Chicago studio, Mr. Boggs produced several successes, among them being "The Two Orphans," in a single reel. He had shown such aptitude for his new work that Mr. Selig sent him to Denver and through Colorado, where he produced a number of scenic and Western subjects. These proved so successful that in January, 1909, he left on an extended trip through the South and Southwest, taking with him a selected company. Winter quarters were established in New Orleans and there he produced several pictures that were marked by artistic touches hitherto unknown to the silent drama.

Mr. Boggs had by this time shown such ability as manager and producer that Mr. Selig gave him free rein to travel where and when he pleased, and so the entire Southwest was traversed until the company reached California. There Mr. Boggs confined himself at first to the production of Western pictures, which added considerable fame to the Selig output. He wrote to Mr. Selig, advising the construction of a Western studio, and stating as his opinion that California would ultimately have resident companies from every manufacturing plant in the country. Mr. Boggs was the first to produce a moving picture in California, and his vision at the time, of present day conditions there, was prophetic.

The first attempt at a studio was a yard, at the rear of a vacant store building, in the crowded downtown section in Los Angeles. Shortly afterward a bungalow was purchased in Edendale, a suburb, with the sanction of Mr. Selig. That was the beginning of the present Western plant, which is conceded to be the most beautiful producing studio in the world.

Mr. Boggs extended his product to dramas of a general character, and the high quality of the films turned out by him was widely recognized. His ambition was to make the silent drama fully as realistic as the spoken play.

He was a tireless worker, many day working 18 hours and never less than 12. He was a great student of literature and of the drama and read all that he could find printed on the art of photography. He had a remarkable talent for writing scenarios, and turned them out at surprising speed. The last time he was in Chicago I learned that he had completed three on his way from Los Angeles.

Mr. Boggs was one of the most loyal and kindhearted of men. No one on his large force ever saw him in a temper. He was considerate to all and had a winning personality that endeared him to his associates. That a man of his lovable qualities should have been singled out as the target for an assassin's bullet is something that can never be reconciled with our sense of justice. While we stand mute with sorrow at his grave, our hearts cry aloud, "I cannot understand."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

FROM a local correspondent comes an advertising scheme now being put out by a five-cent theater in the Bronx. In the accompanying letter he says:

> Knowing that your valued publication has always stood for the elevation of the photoplay theater, and, if my recollection serves me right, has even advocated an increase in the price of admission from 5 to 10 cents, I enclose you a ticket which has been circulated by the thousands in the immediate vicinity of this particular theater, which has only 299 seats.
> I think an article based on ruinous competition in general and the enclosed ticket in particular, might have the effect of bringing this manager to his senses, besides acting as a warning to all other managers who might be tempted to do the same thing.

The ticket, evidently run off by some local job printer, states that it will be accepted with five cents as the admission for two adults and one child, except on Saturday and Sunday. This is probably figured at two cents each for the "grown-up persons," as the ticket phrases it, and a penny for the child.

A Matter of Comparison.

This sounds pretty cheap, but the card states that the theater is under new management and possibly the new proprietor is willing to let his receipts go for awhile to get back the crowd the last management drove away. It means about five dollars a house, scarcely a profitable patronage, but there may exist local conditions which make this the most effective means of attracting attention to a changed condition. Proportionately it is no cheaper than the card given below, which the correspondent may see distributed any morning if he will look out of his office window before eleven o'clock. The other day the writer stood for ten minutes watching the distribution and in that time more than a dozen people came past the theater to the corner, obtained a card and went back to see the show.

VAUDEVILLE PRESENTED at 10 A. M.

The house prices range from ten to twenty-five cents, and the reduction is more marked since the card will admit to the twenty-five cent seats.

The Five and Ten Cent Theaters.

The Moving Picture World more than advocates the ten-cent theater. It looks forward to the time when the dollar photoplay theater will be an established institution, following the advance in quality of the films, but there will always be five-cent theaters in localities that will not support the ten-cent house, and ten-cent houses for those who cannot afford fifty cents or a dollar. It is the entertainment for the whole family.

The distribution of reduction tickets, if inexpertly handled, tends to emphasize the cheapness of the entertainment. The three-for-a-nickel show will not gain the respect even of the five-cent patrons and it is a bad beginning for a new management. No sweeping reduction should be made for any night show. Get the women and children into the matinees and the night business will take care of itself, provided the show is right. And remember that a woman values something that looks like a bargain. Do not throw out the tickets. Let some of the shopkeepers in the vicinity do the distributing, advertising a coupon with each purchase. Give them some posters to put in the window and get the benefit of the window display. You can cut both ways.

Just in passing, the man who charges five cents if he can get half as many patrons for ten, is cheating himself and spoiling his chances. Save in the poorest localities, the five-cent price is no business getter and it does keep away numbers of persons who argue that you can't get much for a nickel.

Another Good One from Blanchard.

J. M. Blanchard, president of the Blanchard Amusement Co., of Sunbury, Pa., sends in another of his folders, a one-color sheet in green ink on a yellowish paper that throws the color up well. "The Colleen Bawn" and "Lost in the Jungle" are supplied with cuts, while "An Old Sweetheart of Mine" carries only the Edison trademark. The front page carries a three-line announcement of the coming Essanay Baseball reel. Mr. Blanchard seems to think that it perhaps crowds the page, but this is a mistake. There is plenty of room and the announcement gains in importance from the position. The top of the first page is decorated with a stock cut of an elephant's head, and the title, "Toddles." For a moment the reader is at loss to know whether it is the sign of the Philadelphia Athletics, whose token is the elephant, or something else, and it takes the last page to advise them that Toddles is the Selig elephant. A second line in six-point, "in 'Lost in the Jungle'," would have been more distinctive. Along the same lines the Kalem cut might have been tagged "Lake Killarney" and the other animal cut similarly labeled. A caption more than doubles the value of a cut. It makes it plain that there is a reason for the cut and that it is not merely put in to fill up.

But by and large the folder is capital and the display so good that Mr. Blanchard should give the printer a cigar now and then; not the boss, but the man who did the actual typesetting.

One novel idea is a clock-face cut with the hands at the hour for opening the night shows, one face showing half past seven and the other nine. In this picture fashion it sets the hour more definitely than 7:30 or 9:00 could possibly do.

Businesslike and Effective.

W. L. Jennings, of the Lyceum Theater, Monroe, La., sends in a four-page folder in black with the statement that the sheet is the result of a suggestion made in this paper. He had the Selig "Two Orphans" on Nov. 2, and Edison's "Foul Play" on November 9th. No attempt is made at display advertising beyond a quotation from Mr. McQuade's article on "The Two Orphans," but the manager has picked up the one paragraph best calculated to excite interest. The rest of the sheet is given over to the story of the reel. Five thousand of the folders will be distributed in addition to newspaper advertising. These sheets will serve the double purpose of exciting interest and making clear the points of the two reels. The simple recital of the story is better calculated to interest than a lot of slushy puffery.

As a general thing it is well to give the casts of the special productions and these are generally available to the advertiser, either in the manufacturer's bulletin or through correspondence.

This is the day of personality in the film and the manager can add to the interest by playing up the personality of the stars. Keep posted on the personalities and pass the information on to the patrons.

Posters of Personality.

In this connection it is noted that the Exhibitors' Advertising and Specialty Company has just issued a series of ten portrait posters of as many licensed stars which sell for twenty-five cents each or two dollars for the set of ten. They are one-sheet size with a halftone picture of the player, the name of the company, and "To-Day." The posters are in tint with portraits in black and are really handsome.

Behind a frame they can be used repeatedly, or they can be stretched and brought out whenever wanted. The habit of folding posters and sticking them away in some odd corner until wanted is a poor one. If you use frames, get sheets of pastepoard cut to the right size, and put the poster down with glue. It is better to pay five or ten cents for a sheet of board than to pay twenty cents for a new poster. Varnish the face to protect from dust and it will more than last the season out.

Another good way is to paste the back of the poster as it lays face down on a flat surface. On this press cheap cotton cloth. When the paste has dried, varnish the face of the poster with transparent varnish and attach wooden rods to the top and bottom. If you get the right sort of varnish and do not get it on too thick you can roll the posters and stack them away until wanted. Keep the pasted cloth stretched until dry or it will wrinkle.

This applies, of course, only to stock stuff used more than one day, but the live house should have from fifty to one hundred pieces of stock stuff with which to vary the display.

Don't Be Hackneyed.

Don't let your lobby display become stale. One New York house has had the sign "Special Show To-Day" on view so long that it is torn and weather stained. It long ago ceased to mean anything to the few regulars who patronize the place and now it cannot attract the passerby. Instead of getting business, as the proprietor imagines, it is a danger signal. No man who runs his lobby like that has the enterprise to give a good show, and this battered sign is an index to the place.

But a sign does not have to be as stale as that to lose value. Keep changing the paper that supplements your poster of the film. Get enough on hand to vary the display daily and do not hang out each morning the stuff you had the day before. The stock paper comes in handy, but don't get barely enough for one display. If you advertise "A Western Reel To-Day," tell them to-morrow that you've something else. Don't hang up the same old "Great Western Picture To-Day" as regularly as you unlock the front door. Give variety to your display in the lobby as well as to the display on the screen. They are of equal importance.

And study your display. Try and get something that will make people talk. In some states the display of lethal weapons in posters is prohibited by law. Don't paste a piece of white paper over the gun. Make use of the prohibition to get a laugh. This paper has already reproduced a poster in which the guns are replaced by bouquets. If it has not been done in your town, try that. If you can't paint flowers, get the nearest paper hanger to give you some odds and ends of floral paper, or buy a roll if you have to. Perhaps the ticket seller can make paper flowers and will fake up some real bouquets. Try that and then tell the local papers about it. It ought to be good for a line. Suppose that your poster shows the heroine covering a burglar with a frankfurter sausage—a real one—don't you suppose that the joke will attract attention? And attention is what you are after, isn't it?

Motion Is Effective.

If you can, keep things moving in a double sense. Something in motion will catch the eye more quickly than any still display you can make. The flashing electric sign is worth a still sign with three times as much candlepower, and the same thing applies to your lobby display. It takes a little thought sometimes, but you can accomplish a lot with an electric fan or a clockwork movement.

If your operating room backs up against the street end—it should not—cut a window and let the crowd see the operator at work. If you get a crowd you'll get some of them in the house, and a crowd always is an asset in or out of the theater.

One effective exhibit that a live wire made was some bits of film obtained from the exchange. These were placed in a frame with a double glass set in a shallow box painted white and with a couple of globes to light the interior and display the film. The back of the box was painted black and lettered in aluminum, "What the Motion Picture Looks Like."

It was placed with the lettering facing the street and the frame side fronting the box office, but not so close that it blocked the way. Hundreds went into the lobby who could not have been attracted by a display of a thousand posters, and being inside, they kept on going toward the screen.

Do not let any special display stand in the lobby long enough to get stale, but keep the people looking for some new stunt; keep everlastingly at it and when people think of motion pictures they'll think of your house because you've made the two inseparable. Be busy all the time.

An Exchange Advertisement.

It does not properly belong to this department, but "Flickers," the house organ of the United Motion Picture Co., an Independent Exchange at Oklahoma City, Okla., attracts attention because it does not devote all the space to talking about "us." There are four outside advertisements and about two columns of house advertising. The rest is given over to news editorial and business booming, but the latter is not done at the expense of the former.

In the issue at hand are items relative to the opening of a new house, a write-up of Miss Dorothy Davenport, of the Nestor Company, a report of a legal decision as to child actors in photoplay theaters, and a spirited reply to a newspaper attack on the pictures, notes of coming features, and some shop talk, besides a half-column of humorous personalities and a report on business conditions.

A Good Editorial.

It has some things it wants to say and it pays the reader to look them over with other matter of general interest. It is a trade paper in miniature, well edited and well written. The editorial replying to one denouncing the showing of Beattie trial slides is worth reproducing. It runs:

[illegible] no right to call the kettle black.

LECTURES ON MOVING PICTURES.

Mrs. M. L. Metcalfe a Successful Speaker on the Subject.

Mrs. Mary Lawton Metcalfe, at a recent meeting of the educational department of the Richmond County Fair Association, delivered a most interesting lecture on moving pictures. The title chosen for her address was "Moving Pictures, the Lever for Progressive Auxiliary Education." Mrs. Metcalfe is one of the best known clubwomen in the United States and has achieved no little fame as a writer and lecturer on timely topics. In her address just mentioned she makes several telling points. She said, for instance:

"Modern education first aims to focus the attention of children.

"Modern education demands that interest of the child shall be engaged.

"Modern education aims to develop thought and expression of the child. Modern education distributes pure ideals.

"Modern education concentrates all its influence to strengthen the Love and Preservation of Human Life and that of animals.

"Modern education aims to provide auxiliary and ethical collateral work to demonstarte the manifold avenues to Progress and Success through right thinking and right doing.

"The minds of children must be fed with ideas and pictures progressively, until in the vigor of maturity, the individual brain is so charged with desire to produce, that spirit-mind dominates matter; and each generation pays tribute to men and women, the very bulwarks of spiritual strength. There are living agents of conscious force, for uplifting suggestion to establish liberty, justice, equity and truth.

"The Ten Links in moral and mental development, which can be taught and idealized through the moving picture apparati for national and international education, are identical with those of the young folks' library. They are namely:

"First.—Moving pictures to develop interest and cheerfulness.

"Second.—Pictures to suggest imagination, ideality.

"Third.—Pictures of kindness and sympathy.

"Fourth.—Pictures of emulation and industry.

"Fifth.—Pictures of courage and resourcefulness.

"Sixth.—Pictures of observation and investigation.

"Seventh.—Pictures of thought and reason.

"Eighth.—Pictures of patriotism and fidelity.

"Ninth.—Pictures of ambition and tenacity of purpose.

"Tenth.—Pictures dominated by spirituality and culture."

Mrs. Metcalfe delivered a most interesting and timely lecture on moving pictures at the convention of the New York Clubwomen, which had extended a special invitation to her. The convention took place at the Astor Hotel in New York City on October 27th.

Mrs. Metcalfe has a thorough grasp of her subject and, as her delivery is eloquent and persuasive, she will not lack for invitations to speak on the subject of moving pictures.

ANOTHER PICTURE OF RANCH LIFE.

The Tournament Film Company, of Toledo, O., announces that it will soon have ready for release another interesting picture of ranch life. The title of this subject will be "The Round Up on the Y6 Ranch." This suggests a plenty of rough riding, cattle driving, and the sports and diversions in which cowboys indulge on such occasions. The new picture will be ready in about fifteen days.

Working the Sound Effects

By CLYDE MARTIN.

IT is not always in the larger cities that you find the best talent in this line of business but often in some of the smaller towns you will find talent hidden from the rest of the world. Not that I consider Burlington, Iowa, off the map, but in this little city I had the pleasure of hearing two of the greatest finds in the Middle West, Mr. Ross Bolick, a pianist, and Mr. Frank Streedbeck, a drummer. These two young men are working at the Palace Theater under the able management of Mr. Lawrence Blank and, believe me, they know what sound effects are and how to use them. The boys are original when it comes to working cues and I give credit to Manager Blank for leaving most of the work to the musicians and letting them work out the effects to their own notions.

It is often the case that a manager will have capable musicians in his theater, musicians who, if left alone, would work out original effects and cue music. But the manager, nine times out of ten, will insist on the musicians working on his ideas instead of their own and possibly this manager will know as much about music as a Missouri mule.

I have always found that when the music is left to the musicians, and the manager lets them know that he has confidence in them, they will take a great deal more interest in their work and get better results.

Manager Blank, of the Palace, in Burlington, is a talented musician himself and between the three of them they are putting on music and sound effects that are showing a marked increase on the daily deposit slip. The Palace is showing to good business at all times and credit must be given to the musicians for holding up their end. Manager Blank is a man that spares no expense on his show; he is one of those strong believers that the show is what gets the money and any detail that can be worked out in effects is secured at any expense. Not long ago the Palace was featuring a war story, I forget the name of the picture, but one of the principal scenes showed the fife and drums. On this occasion Manager Blank secured the services of a man to play the fife and the boys worked hard on the scene and made it a big success. To some people, the drummer looks like an extra expense, but Manager Blank not only employs a drummer but often employs two or three extra people on a night to work the effects.

Several months ago the Palace showed the picture of the "Dubuque Regatta" and from all reports the picture fell flat. On a short stay in Burlington a few weeks later I suggested to Mr. Blank that it would have been a novel idea to have used a motor cycle back of the screen during the picture of the motor boat races. The idea looked good to Blank and he immediately wrote for a return date of this picture. He brought it back and advertised it extensively. That night he engaged a man with a motor cycle, instructing him to watch the picture closely and as the boats came to the front of the screen to take off the muffler and get the effect as near correct as possible. Would you believe me, the audience went wild over the picture and Blank is bringing it back for a third time; and still there are people that say "sound effects are no good." One of the Burlington newspaper reporters said that Blank had the picture down so fine that the audience could get a whiff of gasoline as the boats went by.

This is only one example of detail work. My tip to the exhibitor is: try the most unreasonable things and watch the box office receipts.

L. J. W., Ohio, writes: "I have been drumming in this state for nearly four years, most of the time in picture houses. I have always had a desire to work with a complete outfit of sound effects, but if you know the salary conditions in Ohio you would not say that the drummer should buy his own effects. The manager of the theater where I am working has the idea that I should buy an outfit of effects, but I cannot see it at my salary of ten per. In one of the issues of the Moving Picture World you made the statement that it was up to the drummer to furnish the effects. What would you do if you were in a position like this? As I have it figured out, a good set of effects would cost not less than sixty or seventy dollars; that would mean six or seven weeks this winter without a salary. Please do not publish my name or town."

No, old scout, I wouldn't publish your name on a bet, but I will try to give you a little advice. If you have been drumming for four years you must be a pretty fair drummer, but from your letter I believe that you must be a very poor manager of your own interests. If I were in your place I would not think of buying a set of sound effects on a salary of ten dollars a week. It is true that a good outfit of effects would cost no less than sixty or seventy dollars and it would seem out of the question for an exhibitor to expect a drummer to purchase such an outfit on the small present of ten dollars a week (I would not call it a salary).

As a rule, I believe the drummers of the country are the poorest paid people in the picture business and still their work can make or break a scene. Your state is to my notion one of the worst in the country as far as salaries in picture theaters are concerned. There are many parts of the country where a drummer can get good money, so take a tip from me and get out of a cheap place, then when you get to making good money you will find that it will pay you to have your own sound effects. A man that carries a complete outfit is bound to get the money in the long run. I trust that you will look at this letter in the right light and I will be glad to hear from you again.

Harry Aiken, Pennsylvania, writes: "I have been taking considerable interest in your sound effect letters in the Moving Picture World and I believe you are doing a great deal of good in this department. I notice you have asked for suggestions and I am going to offer one. Don't you think it would be better to work effects on the feature nights only, so the audience would not get tired of them? I have given this matter considerable thought and I believe you will agree with me."

I try to be as agreeable as possible, Mr. Aiken, but I am sure I cannot agree with you on this point. If sound effects draw crowds to your theater on the feature nights, why won't they draw on any other night? Then again, it is a decided fact that audiences do not tire of effects because every program that comes to a theater has different stunts for the drummers and effect men to work. There is a wide field to working sound effects and there are always surprises in store for the audience. If your effects tire the audience, it is a safe bet that the effect men have allowed themselves to get in a rut and are not on the job looking for new stunts and surprises. Think this over, Mr. Aiken, and I believe you will see where I am right.

Mr. G. W. B., Indiana, writes: "I am using a five-piece orchestra in my theater and I will say that I believe they are as good as you will find anywhere. I have a great drummer, who knows his business and makes most of his own sound effects, and I certainly agree with you when you say that the music and effects are half the show. I am not after any publicity, but merely want to thank you for the help you have been to myself and musicians. If your travels ever bring you in this part of the country we want you to come and see us. Keep up the good work."

Thanks for your kind letter, Mr. "B." I am sure it will be a pleasure for me to come to your theater the first time I am in your territory. I am glad my little letters have been of help to you and I feel sure that your musicians have some original ideas that would be of interest to the readers of The World. Let me hear from you again.

Drummer, St. Louis: I am sorry, but I cannot answer your letter through the columns of The World; if you will write me again and give me your name and address, I will be pleased to try and help you.

NEW FILM SPLICING DEVICE.

A. J. Wellman, of Catletsburg, Ky., has invented a clever device for splicing film. By adjusting the film in the machine, removing the emulsion and applying the cement, a lever is pressed down hard, completing the operation and obtaining a splice that will hold. The little machine is not expensive and should be in all exchanges and operating rooms.

BROADWAY THEATER, EVERETT, MASS.

By Henry.

Among small town theaters worthy of special attention is directed to the Broadway Theater, Everett, Mass., owned and operated by the Everett Amusement Company. The Broadway was first opened to the public February 8, 1909, at which time it had a seating capacity of 392 persons. It proved to be a good business proposition from the first and it was not long before a larger seating capacity was needed.

In order to accomplish this the company was reorganzied and, in July, 1909, the house was remodeled, its capacity being increased to 610 persons. As will be seen by the accompanying engraving of the front a neat and simple style of architecture has been followed. In the interior decorative scheme green and gold predominate. A feature is eight panel paintings done by a well-known Boston artist, depicting allegorical subjects. Eight hanging electroliers afford ample illumination.

The Broadway is provided with a commodious stage, 25 feet wide by 15 feet deep, and equipped with three sets of scenery. The operating booth is six feet by nine feet and is asbestos lined throughout. The throw to the screen is 82 feet and a 12 feet by 15 feet picture is projected. A new Powers No. 6 was installed on September 1 and equipped with a Gundlach-Manhattan lens, giving a steady, brilliant picture. Electric fans regulate the ventilation, providing an abundance of pure air at all times. Ample means of egress is provided by seven exits.

The Broadway presents three acts of vaudeville and four reels of independent pictures, supplied by W. E. Greene's film exchange, Boston. The vaudeville is of good quality. An admission of 10 cents is charged, with 15 cents for reserved seats. The house opens for an afternoon performance daily at 3 P. M., and at 8 o'clock for the evening performance. Mr. Walter Proctor, known throughout Massachusetts as the "wonderful blind musician," is always to be heard at the piano. Mr. George Fisher, an excellent violinist, aids in playing the pictures.

To Mr Nathan Brown, general manager at the Broadway, belongs a greater portion of the credit for making this house what it is—a really meritorious example of photoplay theaters. He personally supervises all programs. He has gained the respect and confidence of the public to the extent that the Broadway was selected by the Board of Aldermen of Everett, on July 4, 1910 and 1911, for free picture shows for Everett school children. Coming from a Boston photoplay house, where he held the position of manager, Mr. Brown brought with him both experience and ideas, enabling him to meet the strong competition that besets him on every side, and he is to be complimented for his success in placing pictures upon so high a plane as that maintained at the Broadway Theater in Everett Mass.

THE PICTURE IN MONTCLAIR.

When the wise people in the cultured town of Montclair decided not to permit a moving picture theater in their enlightened community, how little they supposed that they were helping along the very cause which they were supposedly hindering. While taking care to turn the pictures out at the back door, they left the front door open through which the moving pictures have made an auspicious entrance.

In the Presbyterian church and not in an abandoned store, under the guidance of a clergyman rather than a distasteful (to the Montclair people) "coming exhibitor" the first exhibition was given one recent Sunday night. A fire-proof booth was erected and a first-class apparatus installed therein, and all exits indicated by red lights. At the first service held under these proper conditions the church was filled.

The pastor, the Rev. George J. Becker, gave connecting talks to such pictures as The Prodigal Son, Pharaoh and Paul and the Centurion. Every second Sunday night is to be given to this experiment and great interest will await the outcome as results may show six months from this time.

This is not only an experiment in the church use of the moving picture, but is destined to prove the value of the pictures as a permanent addition in an attractive and educational use only, as being distinct from the show. With the pictures thus dedicated to highest purposes, in the hands of non-profit seeking people, in that money-making is not the immediate incentive, the outcome will be very enlightening

Cultured Montclair now looks upon the pictures they despised; they will, no doubt, from this time declare that they fought against the abuse rather than the use thereof, and under the guidance of an educational institution both pictures and people will be put to the test.

NEW IDEA FOR POPULARIZING PLAYERS.

It has remained for the Melies Company to introduce a novel way of popularizing their leading players. The idea is a clever amplification of the present mode of introducing the characters at the beginning of a reel, just before the action commences. It has been the custom, up to now, to flash upon the screen a full-size portrait of the actor in character or in costume, but the scheme of showing the actor first in proper person and immediately afterward in character is something that is entirely new.

The new Melies way is to first show a full-length portrait of the leading player in his everyday clothes, and with his name prominently displayed. This portrait quickly dissolves into another of the same actor in costume for the part about to be played. It is a great idea and one that will be immensely popular with audiences, since it puts them on a more familiar basis with the phantom folks whom they always seem to want to know more about. This artistic innovation is the idea of Mr. Gaston Melies, who applied for a patent on it a month ago. The first picture in which this dissolving effect is to be used will be the regular Melies release of Nov 2, entitled "Right or Wrong," in which Mr. William Clifford will be seen in regular attire, fading gradually into the leading made character. Following Mr. Clifford, Miss Frances Ford will appear as an ordinary mortal and straightway undergo the same metamorphosis into the principal feminine character. On the same reel will be a picture entitled "Mexican As It Is Spoken." In this one the process will be reversed; the playlet will be acted first, after which will be seen a portrait of the leading character as played by Mr Henry Stanley. This portrait will dissolve into one of Mr Stanley in regular conventional garb, closing the picture.

The Sales Company entertainment committee covered themselves with glory by the manner in which the ball was conducted. A few more affairs of this kind and they will be summoned as masters of ceremonies at the next Coronation.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

W. N. SEELEY, owner of the Majestic and Crystal Palace theaters, Dayton, Ohio, called at the World office last week. Mr. Seely also has charge of the government theater in the Soldiers' Home, in Dayton, about 10,000 soldiers being inmates at present.

Mr. Seely originated the idea of getting up the picture "A Martyr to His Cause," in which J. J. McNamara figures, and had it made by the Essanay Company. He is handling the picture throughout the United States. As will be remembered, the film was released October 8.

It is being shown in licensed theaters and the local unions of the American Federation of Labor have charge of the sale of tickets, about three weeks in advance of the opening. The picture is exhibited in one theater in each of the smaller towns visited. In a city like Chicago, several theaters will be used.

The picture was exhibited at the American Theater, Cincinnati, the week of October 8. This house seats 1,500 and 11,000 tickets at 10 cents each, had been sold before the opening. Up to the present date, 37,000 tickets have been sold in Cincinnati.

The next city to have the picture was Indianapolis. There the Casino, managed by Walter Baulby, was chosen, and the picture was shown during the week of October 15. The sale of tickets before the opening was 60,000. Toledo, Dayton, Cleveland, Detroit and Buffalo will follow.

A special committee of the National Board of Censors passed on the film favorably, so Mr. Seely informed me.

The Saxe Bros. Enter St. Joe, Mo.

The Saxe Bros., of Milwaukee, have extended their enterprises to St. Joseph, Mo., where the work of converting the Schlitz cafe building into a moving picture theater was begun last week. The cost of remodeling the structure will be about $20,000. The house will be opened about December 2. The lobby of the theater will front on Edmond Street. The entire end of the building is to be torn out and the facade will be built higher than the present roof line. The lobby proper will be of a general half-dome shape, and at the sides and above will be immense symbolical figures of stucco. Large ornamental globes will surmount the building on the Edmond Street corners, and the entire frontage will be covered with electric lights. The lobby will be forty feet in width, and finished in marble and stucco.

The first floor seating capacity will be 650, and 350 more will be accommodated in the balcony. Loges will extend along the sides of the building at balcony height, as far as the stage. Two stairways will lead to the balcony, and there will be two balcony exits and numerous ground floor exits, independent of the entrance doorways.

The Decorators' Supply Company, of Chicago, have charge of the work.

Chicago Film Brevities.

The Moving Picture League of America has summoned its local representatives in the various cities to be present at a meeting at the Southern Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, on Wednesday, Nov. 1, for the transaction of important matters pertaining to the league. The meeting has been called by President M. A. Neff. William J. Sweeney, owner of the Standard Theater, will represent the Chicago Exhibitors' Association. The Ohio State League will also meet on the same date and at the same place, to attend to their annual election of officers. It is expected the National League will, among other things, consider the constitution of the organization.

Louis Brown, manager of the Pilsen Theater, 1554 Blue Island Avenue, called at the World office last week. He reported that he ran "The Two Orphans" about a week ago to fine business, at 10 cents admission.

Andrew Karzas, proprietor of the Monogram Theater, 3520 South Halsted Street, visited the World office last week. Mr. Karzas uses Independent service furnished by the Standard Film Exchange, and is very well pleased with his business. His house, which seats 500 people, has just been newly decorated.

E. E. Fulton, the well known jobber in moving picture machines and supplies, and also as Lubin's Western representative, has moved from his old quarters, at 208 N. 5th Avenue, in the Northwestern building, to the large and conveniently located quarters formerly held by William H. Swanson & Company, at 154 W. Lake Street.

H. C. Jurgensen, manager of the Columbia Theater, Waterloo, Iowa, made a pleasant call at the World office one day last week. Mr. Jurgensen is a strong supporter of the Moving Picture World, and praises that publication for its reliability and progressiveness. "There can be no doubt, if you want to know all that is going on in the moving picture business, there is but one way to find it out, and that is through the columns of the World. I have been a constant reader for more than two years, and I would feel lost if I had to console myself with any other publication," said Mr. Jurgensen. He says that the exhibitors of Iowa are suffering seriously because the ladies refuse to remove their hats, although these exhibitors are giving them shows that last nearly an hour. He stated that all previous efforts of the exhibitors to get together, in order to have a law passed to compel the ladies to be a little more reasonable, have proved fruitless.

Among the Chicago Shows.

By Chas. A. Young.

I HAVE seen the Kalem Company's "Colleen Bawn" several times since its release, each time in the theater which was the best in its neighborhood, and have been impressed by the class of people who attended the show.

The first time I saw it was the Wednesday following its release, at the Jefferson Theater, on East 55th Street. Mr. Gollos' houses have been mentioned in The World before, so I need not say anything about his successful management, but I do wish to express my appreciation of the very excellent projection of his operator, Mr. Lee A. Forbes, who is putting on the curtain one of the best pictures I have ever seen. He is using but 45 amperes of alternating current on a picture not less than sixteen feet wide, yet he secures a brilliant picture with a very soft, pure, and white light. The machine in use is a Powers No. 6—of course the pictures are fascinatingly steady—with the two-wing shutter, which gives a bright picture with only a slight trace of flicker, which is not at all tiring to the eye. Mr. Gollos has the distinction of having one of the first two Powers Sixes to be brought into Chicago, its serial number being 40, and has recently supplemented it with a new machine of the same model. Operator Forbes is another operator who is in love with the "Number Six," and says it is the best machine ever built. The attendance at the Jefferson for the "Colleen Bawn" was over 5,000, without a matinee. Gollos says it broke all records.

The following Sunday I saw the old Pathe "Passion Play" at this house, and was most impressed by the steadiness of the picture, which is rarely equaled even today by the best American makers. Evidently Pathe mastered the art of perfect perforation before the machine makers made perfect sprockets and intermittent actions, for I have never before seen this old film put on so steadily.

The Madison Theater, on 55th Street, not far from the Jefferson, is also projecting a very good picture. Powers No. 6 is in use here also, but with a three-wing shutter, which cuts too much light and has considerable flicker with the alternating current. I should think the two-wing shutter would improve their picture, which needs little other improvement.

* * *

The Woodlawn Theater, on East 55th Street, is also putting up a good picture. Operator Williams handles his light well, and the picture, projected by an old Viascope, is perfectly steady. Licensed service is used.

The Marion Theater, at 35th and Halsted Streets, showed to something like 1,400 people with the "Colleen Bawn," at an admission of ten cents, which has never before been done in this neighborhood with one picture. This is doing pretty well for a little house that seats but few over 200.

The Colleen Theater, on West 47th Street near Halsted, also showed the "Colleen Bawn" to capacity business. The first show started at one o'clock, and after that it was a continuous grind for the house employees and manager until after eleven; the last show was advertised to begin at 10:30 p. m., and did so to a full house. The picture at the Colleen Theater is fairly steady and clear, a Motiograph machine being used. The house itself is very pretty, and worthy of its name, for it is as dainty as the "Colleen Bawn" herself. It is worthy of note that the patrons of the Colleen Theater have suited their behavior in it to suit the house, as this is a Stockyards district and refined demeanor not to be expected of its residents. More proof that a pretty home for the picture brings out the best in its neighbors and patrons.

The Arena Theater, across the street from the Colleen, seems to have a pretty hard row with Independent service, for they find it necessary to show four reels, two of which were so nearly junk that they ought to have been cut up for leaders. Projection is not utterly bad, and the operator tries to do his best with a very inferior equipment. The light was bright enough, but a wobbly lamp made it impossible to control. It seems foolish for a manager to try to attract a crowd with mere quantity, and show four reels for a nickel, when his competitor is getting more people and showing but two. Up to date operating room equipment (including good film service) and good operating are the essentials of success, and those who try to succeed in any other way are foredoomed to almost certain failure.

I attended Burton Holmes' lecture, "Two Ways Round the World," Sunday afternoon, and must say I was disappointed. His stereopticon slides and projection were beautiful, and in fact I have never seen any work of the kind that was superior, but the motion pictures—well, they were far inferior in every way to the slides. Credit is given to Oscar B. Depue in the program for the motion pictures and projecting, but I distinctly recognized several licensed releases in the program. The pictures of "Growing Flowers" were of the Gaumont school of photography, and could hardly have come from any other laboratory. One colored Pathe film, of a "Water Buffalo Races in Madura" was included, and later I recognized the Gaumont, "A Raging Sea." After this was the Eclipse film of a trip up the Eiffel Tower, which was shown by Lyman Howe last summer. Some of Gaumont's sea and shore studies were also shown, but I had not seen them before, and could not recognize them individually. As for Mr. Depue's own films, I certainly expected better photography and newer prints than those shown. One film had interest more for its historic value than its intrinsic worth, being made ten years ago during the Russo-Japanese war at Port Arthur. It was badly worn and rainy, and it seems to me that Mr. Holmes should by all means have a new print of it. The other films were mostly dark and contrasty, and suffered very much by comparison with the commercial films shown. The motion picture projection was not at all as good as that of the slides. The machine was, I think, an old Edison, with an aperture with square corners, and not by any stretch of fancy could it be called flickerless. I am very much surprised indeed to find that a lecturer of the reputation of Burton Holmes could be content with the projecting standards of four or five years ago. It isn't any commendation for the motion picture trade to those who attend Holmes' lectures, but not the regular picture theaters, to see pictures that hurt the eyes, as they naturally reason that Mr. Holmes must have the best of everything, since he gets a dollar a seat for his lectures.

The Calumet Theater, at 58th Street and Calumet Avenue, is another house which has no nearby competition, but offers a good show. Pictures are well lighted, clear and steady, and well accompanied by the pianist. Manager W. P. Baker certainly has the crowds coming to his little house, and I guess they go away satisfied; at any rate they ought to be.

Saw a sign on a theater the other day that ought to be good for a catch-word for other managers: "Tonight's show will fill your eye." This seems to be an Indiana "Hoosierism," but it is peculiarly appropriate to the picture show, so I'll pass it along for what it is worth.

AN EXHIBITOR'S LIBRARY.

Lecturers and exhibitors looking for lectures and press matter on great feature films will find it to their advantage to order the lectures which the Moving Picture World has printed and published for "Dante's Inferno," Milano Films Production; "The Crusaders or Jerusalem Delivered," World's Best Film Company; and the Pathe "Passion Play." These booklets are indispensable to a proper presentation of the feature films named, and their cost is only one dollar per booklet. "The Passion Play" book is in its second edition, a sure sign that it has been useful to exhibitors. All the booklets have been specially prepared by W. Stephen Bush.

NEW GREAT NORTHERN STAR.

Carl Alstrup, Famous Comedian, Now Appearing in Motion Pictures—"The Actor as Soldier" His First Photoplay.

The Great Northern Film Company announces that it has finally succeeded in securing the services of the famous European comedian, Mr. Carl Alstrup, for picture plays and that his first appearance is in the comedy subject, "The Actor as Soldier," released November 4. Mr. Alstrup's humor is said to be of the contagious kind and it is predicted for him that he will become one of the foremost of photoplayers.

From the following brief description of Mr. Alstrup's first picture there is a hint that all predictions will come true:

Smith's time to become a soldier under conscription has arrived. Smith is an actor, and we see him at a farewell dinner given him by his pals. He makes a bet that on the following Monday morning he will be back with them, exempt from all military service. Off he goes to the barracks, and soon we see him attired in his new garb. He adopts all sorts of tricks in order to win his bet. In his squad he does everything wrong. His rifle always gets on the wrong shoulder; his fingers get jambled in the barrel. On sentry duty, he wraps himself up with all manner of apparel to keep out the cold. Before the commanding officer at mess, he appears as Hamlet, or Napoleon, and is always giving one the impression of a mad actor. Taken before the surgeon, he is examined and his antics procure for him the coveted document informing all and sundry that "Mr. John Smith is unqualified for military service on account of mental disability." Armed with this, he repairs to the restaurant, where his friends have assembled in the hope of winning their bet. But they are doomed to disappointment, for at the stroke of time agreed upon, Smith enters and collects ten to one all round.

The sentiment of the Canadian public is that too much Yankee heroism at present is being exhibited in the animated picture theaters in Canada. As a result, the Overseers' Club of Ottawa has appealed to the recently elected Anti-Reciprocity candidate for Parliament, Mr. A. E. Fripp, to urge the manufacturers to reproduce some pictures of English and Canadian heroism, which will have a direct effect on the patriotism of Canadian children. A few more pictures of foreign interest, such as Edison's "The Battle of Trafalgar," etc., will be of great interest and value to the Dominion of Canada and England.

Observations by our Man About Town

SOME men who essay to manage motion picture places never succeed in getting beyond the sphere of a common barker. Their chief occupation is standing near the box office or the ticket taker and shouting "This way in!" or "This way out!" Why not devote the same energy to making their places so attractive that the people will find their way in without the assistance of such cheap tactics? Get away from the Midway methods and throw a tone all about the place of amusement.

It is a pleasure to visit a picture house under a management that aspires to be dignified, although it may be presumptuous to an extent. Especially is it gratifying to run across a manager of enterprise. I found several during my jaunts about the city who made use of the naval demonstration with excellent results. By advance bookings they secured subjects in keeping with the times and greatly enhanced the box office receipts. One place I visited featured a picture called "Our Navy" and the effect it had upon the audiences rivalled the patriotic ardor displayed on the banks of the Hudson while the naval vessels were in review. The enthusiasm was intense and the patrons left the house in splendid spirit. Timely subjects is the keynote.

* * *

The success of motion pictures is not entirely dependent upon the foresight of the manufacturers of the subjects. The manager who can time his attractions is an equally important factor. If a manager can season his programe he becomes the greatest of chefs to the public taste. Too many are carried away by the so-called clamor for something new. They do not understand the public appetite. It does not really ask for something new, but a change—something seasonable. For instance, one manager might think that subjects based upon the current revolution in China would be a great hit for the next few weeks; another perhaps might pick the scenes and incidents attending the Italy-Turkish trouble in Tripoli a winner; but the pulse-feeling manager will put on stories pertaining to the Thanksgiving season and make good, even if he should be compelled to go back to the old productions for subjects. The human taste is surprisingly regulated by the calendar seasons. Warfare and bloodshed do not appeal to the average amusement seeker with the same force as the story based upon simple life, the pumpkin and the turkey, at a time when the latter are holding sway, and the wideawake manager wants "'Way Down East," or some country-like topic on his program.

But, after all, the motion picture man is a puzzle to the average thinker. It is frequently difficult to believe that he means what he says. A few days ago I happened to drop into a courtroom when a man well acquainted with the business was on the witness stand, and I heard him testify that he never knew or heard of the Motion Picture Patents Co., and never knew of a Licensed film exchange.

Yes, Mr. Anxious Inquirer, the moving picture cameras were in play on the war fleet assemblage on the Hudson, and we expect to see some mighty fine reproductions of incidents attending the grand display. No, they will not be absolutely in detail. That would not do. The vessels behaved themselves admirably, and the cameras were faithful in that respect. As to the rest? Well, you know, boys will be boys.

* * *

"Seeing Washington" was on a program I saw the other night, and one of the spectators remarked it was a pity the moving picture people had not produced such subjects before. They were produced. Perhaps not so elaborately, but just as effectively as at present. About nine years ago, Mr. "Tim" Hurst, the ex-umpire of base-ball, had moving pictures of Washington and New York taken and quite extensively exhibited. Other pictures of the cities were taken prior to that time, but not in what is known as the "tour" style. There are thousands of people who consider some present-day productions as innovations, and it is for that reason I think that many oldtime pictures could be successfully reproduced. I heard a man say the other day that he could think of no more interesting subject than a picture showing Broadway in New York, from the Battery to Columbus Circle. Another thought a picture taken from the front end of a train passing over Brooklyn Bridge would be both interesting and exhilirating. Both subjects are among the oldest of the camera products. The desires expressed give evidence that moving pictures have won over many people who at one time paid no attention to them.

A Chicago Alderman says: "I will introduce an ordinance in the city council establishing a regular board of censors and providing for a charge of $1 for each picture examined. This will defray the expenses and tend to keep out objectionable pictures because of the fee." Glory be to that alderman. Any picture maker whose samples are worth only one dollar ought to be censored.

I understand that a grocer sitting in a London picture theater was notified of a fire at his place of business by an announcement flashed upon the screen. Now, you wideawake nickelodeon managers, get busy! There is a new field for you. I was sitting in a Brooklyn nickelodeon the other night when the doortender walked down the center aisle shouting, "Somebody's baby is crying!" Four or five women seated well toward the picture screen left their seats and started a Marathon to the place where the baby carriages were stored. All but the owner of the crying baby soon returned. I heard several people in the audience remark that some means should be devised to notify the mother wanted and not cause a stampede. What is the matter with having each mother leave her name on the sleeping baby and then have the manager flash a slide: "Mrs. ———'s baby is crying."?

Better still would this system work for the benefit of the young physician who is trying to build up a practice. When he enters the nickelodeon let him leave his card at the box office. The manager can have in stock a slide requiring only the filling in of the name. Suppose it should read like this: "Dr. ——— is wanted." If properly worked, the patrons of the place would soon conclude that Dr. ——— was building up a lucrative practice, and quite naturally seek him in case of necessity.

But such schemes should be worked with caution. I once knew a physician who tipped an usher to call him from the theater at a time when it would attract the most attention. Sometimes the usher forgot his mission and, in his impatience, the doctor would leave the theater without a summons. As a result his reputation suffered to an extent. Several times when the usher approached his seat and touched his shoulder I heard women say, "Isn't it too bad that Dr. ——— cannot be permitted to enjoy an evening's entertainment. He must be doing an awful business." But every time he went out without a summons I heard someone say, "There goes Dr. ——— out for a drink. Why couldn't he wait until the close of the act?"

Smiling Frank Howard, of Boston, was in town this week. He looks well and says he feels so. Mr. Howard still clings to the moving picture, although he no longer runs an exchange. He has an interest in a number of theaters and is making money.

Mr. P. G. Williams, the well known vaudeville manager, stated in a newspaper interview recently that motion pictures have been a great help to vaudeville business. At a hotel a few nights ago another manager took exception to the statement and said it would be more proper to say vaudeville has helped the pictures. He cited one of his theaters where he ran vaudeville and pictures with average receipts of $1,000 a week. Subsequently he ran only pictures and songs and claimed the receipts dropped seventy-five per cent.

London Letter

By E. J. M.

THE sensation of the week has been a scathing attack upon Kalem's "Rory O'More" in a widely circulated weekly journal, "John Bull." The film is referred to in the following terms:

> "Some few days ago we were invited to witness a private exhibition of a cinematograph show at the establishment of Markt & Company. The film illustrated Samuel Lover's historical romance of "Rory O'More," and the different characters and incidents were so true to life that the pictures may be said to represent the climax of sentiment and brutality. We can conceive of no exhibition which will do more harm in fostering ill-feeling at the very moment the hatchet should be buried between this country and the Emerald Isle, and we sincerely hope proprietors of cinematograph shows will have the good taste to exclude it from their lists."

"John Bull" is a paper which boasts a circulation of nearly a million copies per week and its opinions carry considerable weight. However, Markt & Company, who handle A. B., Lubin and Kalem films over here, managed to get a decent bit of cheap advertising for the film by reprinting "John Bull's" comments in the form of a poster, large quantities of which were distributed throughout the country. The poster of course invited the public to see the film before passing any opinion on it.

No mistake about it, Markt & Company are doing grand work on behalf of their American clients, for the enormous amount of gratuitous advertising that they manage to get is astounding. They are hard workers, too, and spend a lot of money in bringing their goods to the notice of exhibitors at every available opportunity. Not only do they keep several men constantly employed in traveling about among the exhibitors—"talking" A. B., Lubin and Kalem—but they also spend a small fortune every week on special printing and postage.

For the last three or four months J. M. Downie, right hand man of B. Nichols, London manager to Markt & Company, has spent most of his time on the continent, where he has been hustling round his firm's agents and keeping them up to the scratch. Mention of Mr. Nichols reminds me that he will pay another visit to the States in the course of the next few weeks. Seeing that he has just broken all records for an American subject in Europe with "Rory O'More," he should be assured of an even more cordial welcome than he usually receives, which is saying a lot.

I hear, also, that H. A. Spoor, European agent of the Essanay Company, will shortly be in your midst again for a few weeks. H. A. S. created a good impression immediately he landed here for the first time two years ago. The fact that he was not too proud to act as his own office boy, and trotted around with his films under his arm, made him many friends and stamped him with the hallmark of a worker. I well remember the first few months he was here. Never once did you meet Spoor without one or two films tucked under his arm. He has splendidly fitted up offices now, and a large staff as well, so there is no need for him to do quite so much porterage work, but his reputation remains, for those first few months of donkey work which he was not ashamed to do has made heaps of friends and he is now reaping his reward. Mr. Spoor is in Berlin at the present time getting his branch in that town in order, but I understand that he will most certainly be among you before Christmas.

There is a possibility of several of the English film people paying their first visit to the States in the near future. Horace Andrews, managing director of Andrews Pictures, Limited, is on the lookout for one or two American agencies, and he will be one of the first to make the trip. Others who are talking of making the trip are E. S. Williams, managing director of the E. S. Williams Bioscope Company, Limited, who is also after agencies, and J. Williamson, managing director of the Williamson Kinematograph Company, Limited, well known as manufacturers of printers, perforators and cameras. Mr. Williamson is one of the "Old Brigade" in the moving picture industry, having commenced making films in 1896. He has traveled pretty well through Europe, but has yet to make his first visit to the states. You will remember, however, that his son, Alan J. Williamson, paid a flying visit to New York and Chicago in the fall of 1909. The latter is now connected with the Spencer Theaterscope Company in Australia, and his brother-in-law, H. A. Crowhurst, is with the Lyman H. Howe Company at Wilkes-Barre.

The first batch of negatives taken by Captain Scott's "South Pole Expedition" arrived here a few days ago and within a few hours the finished prints were projected on the screen in Gaumont's showrooms in the presence of a distinguished company of public men including Admiral Sir Albert Hasting Markham, who commanded the "Alert" in the Arctic expedition of 1875. Taken as a whole the films are of excellent quality; certainly they are miles ahead of those obtained by the Shackleton Expedition two or three years ago. It is unnecessary to enumerate here all the scenes in these South Pole films, but special mention must be made of the parts depicting the approach to the ice barrier and some members of the party climbing a glacier and an iceberg. The scenes mentioned are of much interest.

Sweet are uses of advertisement. An enterprising firm of photographers has sent a special messenger to "Scott's Expedition, somewhere in the Antarctic Circle," with a reel of photographs of Captain Scott's children as a present to the gallant captain. The company in question is one which is reviving the old Kinora reels; if one can judge by their advertisements, which are given out on an extensive scale, the drawing room novelty of a few years ago is again coming into favor.

The Natural Color Kinematograph Company has entered an action against a firm of the name of Biocolour, Limited, for infringement of patent rights. It will be an interesting case, but as the matter is sub judice I must not comment upon it at the present moment, but I will take care to keep you fully posted when the case is heard in the courts.

Edison's "Battle of Trafalgar" created quite a furore over here, many complimentary references to the film being made in the daily papers. Over 150 copies were sold.

Mr. Paul Panzer, Leading Member of the Pathe American Players.

F. D. Allison and Charles A. Taylor, of Pittsburg, Pa., have organized the Pittsburg Film Manufacturing Company, another Independent concern, with offices at 441 Market Street, in the "Smoky City." Both gentlemen are well known in the motion picture business. Mr. Allison has large picture interests in Pittsburg and Mr. Taylor is one of the oldest exchange men in that city. The company will be incorporated for $250,000 and ample financial backing is assured. Excellent studio accommodations have been secured out of the city and a producing force is already at work. A New York office will be established later, but at present all releases will be made from the Pittsburg office.

Projection Department

Bad Practice.—Of late there has come into general use in many of our large cities a practice which is distinctly wrong from any and every point of view. I refer to the attempt to make of the operator an errand boy by requiring him to return the films to the exchange and get the new "show." So universal has this practice become in some cities that the service is required by the manager and accepted by the operator as a matter of course. The manager has come to regard the service as a part and parcel of the operator's duty, and the operator has accepted it, albeit with much grumbling, as such.

Getting and returning the films is no more a part of the operator's duty than is cleaning the office cuspidor. No manager would dream of exacting that service of the operator, yet will cheerfully demand the performance of the errand boy stunt. Indeed, he will feel deeply aggrieved should the operator even presume to utter a protest against it.

Returning the films and getting the new show is not the easy thing it appears to be, as many an operator can inform you. In New York City it may be anywhere from one to twenty miles from the theater, or the operator's home to the exchange. At the exchange it is no unusual thing to be compelled to wait one, two, three and even four hours for the new "show." Perhaps, taking one day with another and one exchange with another, the wait will average two hours. Taking an average of the time getting to and from the exchange might result in one and one-half hours. Therefore we see that in New York City the operator who performs this service is expected to put in three and one-half hours daily for which he receives not one cent of pay. Indeed, we know of cases where the manager has kicked on paying the necessary carfare.

We would like to have Mr. Manager explain by exactly what process of reasoning he arrives at the conclusion that returning and getting the show is any part of the operator's duty. Is it for the reason that you figure that, right or wrong, you are able to compel him to shoulder the burden? If that is your notion, don't you think it a pretty unfair thing to do, remembering the fact that you are not paying the man a salary which could hardly be called princely.

Absolutely the only plausible excuse we have heard advanced by managers for demanding such service of the operator is that he is better able to choose the show than anyone else except himself.

This is not necessarily true, but allowing, for the sake of argument, that it is, why do you not then offer to pay him for doing what is your own work, and no one's else? It is worth at the very least one dollar per day and carfare to perform this service. You would not dream of imposing such work on your ticket seller, or even an usher, without offering added pay. Why then seek to thus impose on the operator? Operators' unions that refuse to allow their members to carry slides and reels to and from exchanges have the entire and hearty sympathy of the editor of this department.

Books.—From many places have come letters asking advice as to the purchase of a set of books, two in number, being put out by the American School of Correspondence, Chicago. It seems that the school offers the two volumes, purporting to be a complete work of instruction in the field of animated projection, together with a certificate entitling the purchaser to consult the experts of the school for a term of one year, on any subject pertaining to the work of projection, etc., for the sum of ten dollars.

In response to a letter of inquiry, a set of the books has been sent the editor of this department for examination and review. The two volumes are substantially bound and together contain about 600 pages, fifty or more of which are full-page scenes from different photoplays, therefore of no particular value. About as many more are consumed in index, review questions, title pages, etc., leaving approximately 500 pages of matter.

After careful examination I am unable to find where the works will prove of material value to the operator in his actual, practical work. On the other hand, at a reasonable price, I would recommend them for purchase as an addition to the library of the manager or operator, since they contain a considerable amount of rather general information in compact form. For instance: we find a good number of different forms of intermittent movements illustrated. This is very interesting, even though not of very much practical value to the operator. The work throughout, whenever it treats of operating room matters, shows the lack of actual practical operating experience. Perhaps I can give some idea of the style of the work by quoting. Under heading, "Operator's Duties," the book says: "The operator is usually held responsible for the delivery to the theater of the film for projection. If in a city where the film exchange is visited, the operator makes the visit, returning the old film and bringing the new to the theater. If in a town distant from the exchange, he is responsible for the packing and shipment of the old reel and the receipt of the new one and its delivery from the express office to the theater. Such deliveries may be daily or once a week. Being thus the messenger to the film exchange to obtain the picture film, he is also made responsible for getting the song slides, and not only the slides but the sheet music for the singer which is supposed to accompany the song but sometimes does not except after a special effort to get it. If title posters are used, the operator is held responsible for their delivery also, as being something substantially a part of the film reel. Being thus in charge of the signs for the theater front, it is good if he can improvise signs with a brush and a sheet of paper when occasion requires, or when the title poster for a particular reel cannot be obtained as usual." Continuing under "Preparing for Projection," the book says: "On going into his iron-bound cage to prepare for the projection of films and lantern slides for the afternoon or evening, the operator should turn the motion head at a good fast rate for the 'feel' of the machinery." This is followed by some very good advice as to what to do to prepare for the day's run. However, the operator will hardly care to pay ten dollars to get the foregoing class of information, even though there be other things of considerable actual value.

The most I can make of the set is as stated in the beginning. As an addition to the operator's library they are good. As an actual help in practical operating room practice, they are lacking. I would consider them as a quite complete general reference work to the business as a whole, but not complete enough or practical enough in any one branch to serve as a work of instruction for practical men. Unless the "consultation" privilege be considered of large value, the price quoted is excessive.

The duty of reviewing them is distinctly distasteful, since I myself have on the market a book of instruction; hence, reviewing another work of similar purpose in a measure lays me open to the charge of bias. However, I consider it as one of the duties of the position I occupy to give the information asked by our correspondents. I think those who purchase the set will agree that what I have said is fair and right.

It seems almost impossible to get men such as head schools and similar institutions to understand that the fact that a man is an electrical engineer by no manner of means qualifies him to give instruction and information in such form as to be of value to the average operator. They cannot seem to grasp the simple fact that only the man who has served time at the crank of a projector is in position to give competent instruction to the practical operator, no matter how fine a technical education he may have in electrics, optics, etc. The operator who has arrived in town at 6 p. m. got his stuff to the church, or whatever place the show is to be given, unpacked, carried his wires across the street, shinned up a pole and hooked on near the transformer secondary of a 2,000 volt primary, set up his machine and put on a good show at 8 o'clock understands practical things. He may be short on theory, but he knows what is wanted and how to get it. To give adequate instruction one must have both practical experience and theory. The writers of the set of books in question apparently lack practical experience, and it shows in the work.

Motor-Generator Sets.—The following article is furnished the Department by the Western Electric Company, who have our thanks for the same. It will be interesting reading to those contemplating the installation of motor generator sets and will also enlighten those interested in understanding the action of the Mercury Arc Rectifier.

"As practically every operator knows, the best D. C. pressure for a projection arc is 51 volts. This voltage at 20 amperes gives 5,000 candlepower. At 25 amperes it supplies 6,500 candlepower. At 30 ampers, 8,500 candlepower. These figures are the results of tests made while using a ⅝ inch cored carbon for the upper and a ½-inch solid carbon for the lower. The negative or lower being set a trifle ahead of the upper and the whole being tilted back at an angle of 30 degrees. These candlepower figures are the same for the above-mentioned voltage regardless of the kind of D. C. supply; i.e., whether motor generator set delivering 50 or 51 volts or the regular D. C. supplied by the lighting company and cut down to 50 to 55 volts by a resistance or a Mercury Arc Rectifier.

With A. C. the usual arc voltage is 35, with an amperage of 40, which only gives approximately 3,500 candlepower. By using a moving picture transformer on A. C. there is a saving of from 75 to 90 per cent. over a rheostat, but while economy in current is thus accomplished, it is at heavy sacrifice of candlepower as compared to D. C. This, of course, is not such an item, except when competition is keen, when the necessity of having the best light becomes very obvious.

When D. C. is furnished and the cost of current is low enough to make the use of rheostats not prohibitive, the value of a motor-generator set becomes simply a question of local management. When, however, the cost of current is in excess of 3 cents per Kw. hour and the daily performance lasts more than four hours, then the use of a motor generator set is a means of economy, the amount saved being proportionate to the voltage of the supply.

An idea of the saving can be gained from the following table. Column A showing the voltage, either A. C. or D. C., supplied by the light company. Column B showing the Kw. hours taken from the feed wires when a motor generator is supplying 50 volts with 25 amperes at the arc. Column C shows the Kw. hours used when 50 volts 25 amperes is secured at the arc by means of resistance:

A	B	C
110	1.90	2.75
220	1.90	5.50
440	1.90	11.00
550	1.90	13.75

When the candlepower question is not important and only A. C. is furnished, the use of a moving picture transformer will effect a greater saving than that effected by a motor generator, as a moving picture transformer will deliver 35 volts and 40 amperes at the arc and save about 85 per cent. as compared to a rheostat, but it must be remembered that A. C. will not give as good light as D. C., as has been shown.

Where A. C. is furnished and the necessity of plenty of candlepower is urgent, two ways are open to the operator, viz: a motor-generator set or a Mercury Arc Rectifier. For the benefit of your readers who may not be familiar with either of these pieces of apparatus, I will describe them.

The motor-generator is, as its name signifies, a motor and generator (dynamo). Your supplied current may be either A. C. or D. C., as the sets are made in both types. The generators are wound for a 50-volt output. The field rheostat regulates the voltage so that when running at full speed any voltage from 20 to 65 may be secured. The size of the set determines the amperage. It is with one of these sets that Mr. Cundy, of Leadville, Colorado, gets this voltage without the use of a resistance. The simplicity of these sets is a very important feature, for every operator has his hands full with the projection, and he need not give any attention to the motor-generator other than the usual daily cleaning and oiling. Another very important feature is the field rheostat. With this he can govern absolutely his voltage and through that his amperage. The Mercury Arc Rectifier is a more economical set, but it can only be used on alternating current. The theory of a Mercury Arc Rectifier is briefly as follows: The A. C. voltage is stepped down by a transformer and then by means of an exhausted tube having a mercury electrode and two graphite electrodes, the transformation from A. C. to D. C. is effected. The graphite electrodes are connected to either side of the line and also through resistance to one side of the load. The Mercury electrode is connected to the other side of the load. When the current is turned on, the mercury vaporizes and a current flows from first one graphite electrode to the Mercury electrode, then when the alternations reverse the current it flows from the other graphite electrode to the mercury electrode. Thus you see it always flows to the mercury electrode even though the supplied current alternates; as a consequence a continuous current is obtained. The efficiency of a rectifier is higher than the motor generator set, being 71% when delivering 55 volts. A few words regarding the cost of operation of a rectifier will be interesting. For instance, with 30 amperes at 55 volts you will get 8,500 c. p. with a consumption from the mains of 2.15 Kw. If 110 volts were used with resistance, 3.3 Kw. would be used. If 220 volts were furnished and used with resistance supplying 30 amperes, 6.6 Kw. would be consumed, while the amount used by a rectifier would remain the same, regardless of the line voltage.

From the above it will be seen that in these days of keen competition, it is almost necessary to use the current that will give the best light and as experience has shown that D. C. gives by far the better light, the use of either a Mercury Arc Rectifier or a motor-generator set is practically the only thing left for a house running over four hours daily."

I would like to have discussion from managers and operators on the matter of exact efficiency results as between the rheostat (on D. C.) and motor-generator sets, voltage 110. For 220 volts there can be no question as to large saving through use of a motor-generator set.

Condenser Lenses.—New York City writes: "Kindly let me know correct formula for finding size of condenser lenses to use under different conditions; also if a Powers Six head can be used with a Powers Five lamphouse."

By size I presume you mean focal length of the lenses. There is no formula that will fit all conditions. I wish there was. Yes. you may use the Powers Six with the No. 5 lamphouse, but it would be much better to get the whole No. 6 outfit with the two-door lamphouse.

In Multiple.—Taunton, Mass., writes: "There is only one thing I do not find in the handbook, viz: how to calculate number of amperes when rheostats are in multiple. One operator claims right way is to add number of ohms that the rheostats are rated for together and divide by four. Another says that is not right. Please tell us the proper method of finding amperage with rheostats in multiple, two alike, or four, all rated differently."

Treat each rheostat as a separate resistance. Subtract 35 from the line voltage if it be A. C., and 45 if it be D. C. Then follow the formula on p. 9 for each rheostat and add all amperage together for total. Suppose you have one, two and one three ohm rheostat; line voltage, 110; current, D. C. $110 - 45 = 65$. Sixty-five divided by two equals $32\frac{1}{2}$, the amperage of the two-ohm rheostat when in series with an arc. $110 - 45 = 65$, and sixty-five divided by three equals $21\frac{2}{3}$, the amperage of your three-ohm rheostat when in series with an arc. $32\frac{1}{2} + 21\frac{2}{3} = 54$ 1-6, the total amperage. You must remember that when rheostats are in multiple they are in effect working entirely independently of each other, the same as are the water pipes, p. 39 of the handbook. Each lets through its entire capacity under the given voltage, the currents being combined on the lamp side.

The Argument.—Leadville, Colo., writes: "The World just received and the article by Norfolk read and digested. First of all I want to say that, with the additional explanation that he gives, I will admit he is right as to his own outfit; but as regards mine he is in exactly the same place as before. I will ask him once more to look at my diagram and notice that I am using A. C. for my motor, and also that it is an induction motor; also that I have absolutely no connection between my motor and generator. My machines, like those of Norfolk's, are on the same shaft, but with this exception and the fact that my generator is shunt wound also, our outfits are entirely different, so that I still maintain that Norfolk has not given us a solution to the problem, although I will concede that he has certainly demonstrated his ability as an electrician. I hope you will give as much space as you can to this letter, as the argument was opened in the department and I should like it finished there. My previous letter, I think, gives my idea, but I am waiting for corrections."

The argument has done good, I am sure, Leadville. That such sets are practical and work well cannot be disputed. My original contention has not, however, been overturned, except in part. It has been upset to the extent that an isolated dynamo of the ordinary type can be used thus by the addition of field control. Yet I am not quite sure that the term "ordinary" exactly applies. I still believe the machine must be built for the purpose. At least the connections have to be special.

A very large question remains however, viz: What is the efficiency of such an outfit? If, as is claimed, it does not exceed 65%, then there would be comparatively small saving in such an installation working on 110-v. D. C. service. We would like this feature of the problem to be discussed by our readers in these columns.

Connecticut.—We wrote the State Police Department of Connecticut calling their attention to the claim made that they would refuse to pass operating room walls of concrete or brick unless the same be asbestos lined. We also called their attention to the absurdity of such a proposition, as either brick or concrete is far superior in every way to the ordinary wall of asbestos used in operating rooms. We are in receipt of the following reply, quoted in part, signed by Arthur L. Story, Assistant Superintendent, State Police Department: "We can say that about all the booths in use in this State are made of asbestos, conforming to the rules and regulations of this department, a copy of which we recently mailed you. We would probably not object to a booth properly constructed and made of concrete, if in our opinion the same is safe, fireproof, and conforms to our rules and regulations."

If the State Police Department of Connecticut can set forth any valid reasons why they should object to walls, properly constructed, of concrete, or of brick, we certainly would be pleased to have them do so. We repeat that either concrete or brick is superior to asbestos from any and every point of view, except the one factor of weight where adequate foun-dation cannot be had. We do not believe the courts would uphold the department in refusing to sanction such walls. This paper wishes to see the motion picture exhibition business get away from the makeshift stage and settle down to stable, permanent things. The asbestos room savors of the makeshift. Concrete or brick walls betoken permanency and they also spell safety if there is ample vent and adequate, properly installed wall shutters. Without these two latter things, no operating room is or can be safe, no matter how it is constructed or of what it is made.

Rectifier.—Pennsylvania (name of town suppressed) asks information as to the mercury arc rectifier. He is referred to p. 206, Oct. 21 issue, and to a letter in this issue for such information as is at hand. We might add that reports show the rectifier to have given excellent satisfaction wherever used.

on parade last Labor Day. They make an excellent showing. The Cleveland union is a live wire. I hope to be able to pay them a visit some of these days.

Information Wanted.—Mason City, Ia., writes: "We are using two American Standard No. 4 machines, each driven by individual motors. Referring to articles on page 108 and 109 of Moving Picture Handbook, wish you to kindly advise us, when placing new bushings on the star and intermittent sprocket shafts, what if any rules are to be followed to have the bushings set correctly and in perfect alignment with the cam shaft. We have been having trouble on both of our machines in that the lower loop would lose to such an extent that after framing two or three times it would be all gone, and stop, the film catching fire in a few instances before the machine could be stopped. The intermittent sprocket seemed to fail to pull the film down over the aperture plate in time with the lower sprocket, although the intermittent sprocket and star wheel seemed to be in perfect alignment with cam shaft; however, at times, the outside roller in door, over intermittent sprocket, seemed to fail to work. Kindly give us such information as you can as to the cause of same and how the trouble can be averted. The picture on the screen seems to run nice, smooth and steady, except for the loss of lower loop and getting out of frame."

The fault lies not in the machine but in its not being properly adjusted. The film is held to the intermittent sprocket by two rollers, one of which shows through on the front of the gate. Just above this roller will be seen a cross bar in the center of which is a screw, with locknut. This screw determines by its position the distance of the rollers from the intermittent sprocket. If too far away, as is probably the case with your machine, the screw should be backed off a little. These rollers should set about twice the thickness of a film from the sprocket. Inside the metal box at bottom of gate are two more rollers which hold the film to the lower sprocket. These, too, should be twice the thickness of a film (about) from the sprocket. Their distance is governed by a screw at top of the box. On this screw are two locknuts, one almost out of sight behind the metal of the box. Loosen both and adjust until rollers are as above.

The intermittent shaft may be lined in several ways, but probably the quickest and simplest is to lay a narrow straightedge, having perfectly parallel sides, across the ledges of the insets holding the shaft bushings, sighting across top edge to lower edges of intermittent sprocket. You could also take a piece of metal the width of the film track and file one end exactly square. Lay it in film track and adjust shaft until teeth on opposite sides of sprocket touch the end of it at the same time. To do this it would, of course, be necessary that the sprocket be square with the film track and when thus it would necessarily be in correct alignment with the camshaft.

Spotlight.—California (name of town suppressed) writes: "I have an extra lamp house and arc (Edison) which I want to make a spot light out of, or, in other words, a lamp for spot light use only. My throw is ninety feet. What size condenser should I use and how far would my arc have to be from the condenser to make a spot large enough to cover one man? Of course, to make the spot light larger I would move the arc nearer to the condenser."

I very much doubt that you will be able to get satisfactory results with an ordinary lamphouse. I don't believe you can get the lamp far enough back. Moreover, I am not sure that you can get the desired result with a 4½-inch lens—diameter, I mean. Spot lights are equipped with a 6-inch lens, you know. You might send and get a lens about 10-inch focal length and try it, but I have my doubts. If any brother has done this trick, let him speak.

Insertions in Handbook.—Milwaukee, Wis., writes: "How would it be to give us in the Moving Picture World a brief mention of the few items with which we can append to your handbook as a miniature revised edition that can be penciled in, though really there is not very much to append. Even for a first edition, I must say you have nothing to blush about. I was in Seattle, Tacoma, Deer Lodge, Butte, and Miles City two weeks ago, and everywhere the projection was good. In one place in Tacoma, and one place in Seattle, the projection was very fine indeed; still they do not do any better than Milwaukee, which, as I have said, has the best in the country. There are a number of new picture houses springing up in the community and we wonder if they will all make it go."

I'm afraid I cannot do that, Milwaukee. I already have about all one ordinary man can attend to. For a first book, the contents of which had to literally be evolved, with very little to refer to in the way of printed information, I am not ashamed of the work. There are ideas galore published in the department from week to week which you can pencil in if you wish.

Believes in Pictures.—From San Francisco comes a letter signed Wm. E. Dugan, "a preacher who believes in pictures." Mr. Dugan orders a handbook and says: "I read The World regularly and enjoy it, particularly the Projection Department and Comments on Films. I am using motion pictures in our church work and do my own operating. Use an Edison machine. Have reduced my troubles to two, viz: it is difficult to get sufficient good Biblical and educational films. I use comedies also for entertainments, but it is the fact that very many otherwise good subjects are spoiled by the introduction of drinking scenes. I am troubled with condenser breakage. Can hardly run one entertainment without breaking a lens. They always break in cooling. Have tried every suggestion made in the department. Use 45 amperes, 110 volts, A. C. Cannot get satisfactory light with much less."

Brother Dugan is one preacher who does not allow senseless prejudice to cloud his common sense. Because there have been and still are bad films is no reason why the whole motion picture industry should be condemned, as some preachers seem to imagine. There are a great many bad preachers—some few of them have been very bad indeed—but we don't condemn all preachers on that account, do we? The Kleine Optical Company, Chicago, Ill., issues a very complete catalogue of Biblical and educational films. Possibly it might be of service, but subjects listed in that catalogue are exceedingly scarce and hard to get. It is about the only suggestion of value I can make in that connection, except that you might write to the General Film Co., 200 5th Ave., New York. They intend to establish an educational department, I am told. You say the lenses always break in cooling; presumably after the entertainment. If this is correct, make a box large enough to cover the entire lamphouse and put it on as soon as the show is done. This will, or should, stop the breakage, as it will make the cooling off process very slow. Be sure your vent screen in top of lamphouse is clean.

Chicago, Ill., writes: "Have noted the discussion that has been taking place in the Department concerning operating projection arc without resistance and have been much interested therein. The thing is entirely practical, but is, in my opinion, not of much value where D. C. is concerned. With A. C., it is another story, since we there accomplish two valuable things at one operation, viz: transform A. C. to D. C. and save something through elimination of resistance. It would also be of much value with D. C. but for one thing. It may be stated as a fact that a motor-generator set, except it be a very high priced one, cannot be expected to exceed an efficiency of 65 %. We therefore lose 35 % in the machine motor-generator itself. With the ordinary rheostat we waste about 60 %. We therefore effect a saving of approximately 15 per cent. by use of a motor-generator set costing more than $200—probably considerably more. Now suppose our arc light bill to be fifty dollars per month (which would be excessive for a large percentage of houses, though some exceed that figure), how long would it take to pay for the outfit through the saving effected? Fifteen per cent. of $50 is $6.50. The saving would, therefore be only about $75 per year. By the time the outfit paid for itself, it would be worn out, or very nearly so. With A. C., however, such a set is most excellent. We save the fifteen per cent. and get D. C., instead of A. C. That is really worth while. These figures are not meant to be anything more than approximately correct."

While you are correct in the main as to the efficiency of motor-generator sets, you are entirely wrong as to the average light bill. Fifty dollars per month might cover the bill of the storeroom show running evenings only and using only one projection machine, but it would probably require $80 to pay the juice bill if the same house runs matinees. The larger house running from 9:30 a. m. to 11 p. m., using two or three machines, would probably pay $100 to $150, according to size and illumination. Since the motor generator would only supply the projection lamps, not all this could be figured but enough would be supplied by the set to bring the ratio of saving considerably higher than you have put it. The Western Electric letter, published elsewhere, is, I believe, about correct. We will welcome discussion on this point.

Has a Jonah.—Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "Have charge of operating room of house playing to daily average of 600, except Saturday, 1,000. Run two reels licensed. Powers Six. Have refused flatly to run a film in less than fifteen minutes, no matter how big the crowd. Have had one broken condenser lens in six months. Take them home and place in oven of cold kitchen range. Leave them there for two weeks or a month. It toughens them. On Saturday my Jonah arrives. Use 110-v., 60-cycle A. C. It is that usually, but so many small shops which use A. C. close Saturday that the voltage climbs and the amperage goes down so that I cannot get enough resistance with Powers Inductor. Light is yellow."

You are mixed in your dates, Harrisburg. If the voltage climbs, the amperage would increase at the arc. That should brighten your light instead of making it yellow. However, the fact that small consumers shut down would not or should not effect voltage. A dynamo produces steady pressure, or should, and amperage according to need, up to its capacity. The yellow light would either indicate low voltage, with consequent low amperage, than the reverse. However, from the information at hand I can only conjecture as to the trouble. The best guess I could make (only a guess though) is that the light company, having a light A. C. load that day, uses a smaller generator, producing a little lower voltage than the regular machine.

Light Trouble.—Clymer, Pa., writes: "Am in trouble and know of no one I had rather come to than you. Am using a Powers Six with Little Giant Current Saver, both new. My light on screen is brown on both sides, with a sort of bluish color in center. Both colors run from top to bottom. Have tried moving lamphouse back and forth, adjusting carbons at different angles and about everything else I can think of. Current is 110 V., A. C. Have the current saver hooked on the 55 line. Throw is 52 feet; picture 12 feet. Tried one 6½ and one 7½ and two 7½-condenser lenses, but it made no difference. Use Electra ⅝ cored top and bottom. Had fine light with old machine which was Powers 5 with grid rheostat. Carbons burn ragged crater. Use same carbons and condensers I did before."

I think from what you have said there can be small doubt but that the trouble lies in the Little Giant. Of this, however, I am not certain. The case, as you put it, is very puzzling. I am referring it to the makers of the Little Giant. The fault is not in the projection machine.

OPERATORS' LAW FINALLY KNOCKED OUT.

A decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has been handed down in the appeal of the Commissioner of the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity from the Supreme Court decision upholding the decision of the lower court to the effect that the law requiring applicants for moving picture machine operator's licenses to be citizens of the United States and to serve a six months' apprenticeship is unconstitutional.

Inquiry at the office of Commissioner Thompson elicited the information that this decision is final and that the board of examiners are receiving applications for licenses and examining candidates without reference to citizenship or previous apprenticeship. The only stipulation is that the candidate be 21 years of age.

LEVI'S SPOT-LIGHT SLIDE PATENT ALLOWED.

The Levi Company, of New York, has been notified by its patent solicitors that the U. S. Patent Office has allowed letters patent for the very clever song-slide spot-light idea which that company is exploiting.

Comments on the Films

"The Tars Ashore" (Lubin), October 25.—Any audience will get much fun out of this film. In truth, it is all fun, and the way the two sailors see the fair would do credit to any two people out for a good time. The pictures of the fair are well worth seeing. A great deal of sport centers around the mascots, a duck and a pig, but the second day the unfortunates are roasted, a rather ignominious fate for two such promising mascots.

"The Lost Freight Car" (Kalem), October 25.—Whether it was so intended or not, here is an illustration of a story that went the rounds years ago, telling how a freight car was lost out of the middle of a train and never missed by the crew. The conductor in this picture loses his place, but later, when searching for the car, he saves the president's special from disaster, and then finds the car. To make his joy complete, his sweetheart's father, the objecting yardmaster, gives his consent. It is a novel, and somewhat sensational film.

"How the Telephone Came to Town" (Edison), October 25.—Here is a hint for workmen who are interrupted in their endeavors to set telephone poles, when determined females jump into the holes and defy the workmen to proceed; the solution is simple. Obtain a live mouse. Drop it in the hole and observe how soon room is made for the pole. As a character study this film is a great success.

"Aunt Hulda, the Matchmaker" (Vitagraph), October 25.—The character of Aunt Hulda in this film is a delightful representation of an old-time Southern mammy. She cleverly succeeds in effecting a reconciliation between the two estranged lovers, and as they sit joyously in the parlor Aunt Hulda sits quite as joyously by her kitchen fire, chuckling over her ruse which brought them together again.

"A Woman's Slave" (Eclipse), October 25.—Perhaps this film may be considered a fair representation of Kipling's famous poem, "The Vampire." The woman is shown as a heartless being, who drives the man to theft to secure jewels for her adornment. He is rescued from her clutches by the abiding love of his mother and the humanity of a jeweler. There is something appalling in the cold selfishness and cruelty of the woman.

"Championship Baseball" (Essanay), October 25.—Fans all over the country who couldn't see the world series of games will thoroughly enjoy the events in the games here pictured. They can obtain a fair idea of the way the game was played. The most thrilling plays are reproduced.

"A Revolution in the Bachelors' Club," October 25.—A farce dealing with a bachelor and a beautiful woman. The result of the mixup is a revolution in the club which surpasses words. It goes to prove that the most vehement woman-haters can be cured.

"The Traitor" (Pathe), October 24.—A dramatic, but very improbable Sicilian picture. The traitor loved his friend's wife and very craftily got him out of the way. He contrived to bring about a quarrel between his friend and a third man, whom afterward he incited to shoot. When his friend lay dead, he led the police to the hiding place of the murderer. They set the hut on fire. The man escapes and takes refuge with his victim's wife, who had sworn to marry the man who would take vengeance on her husband's murderer. Yet she hides him from the police. The reason for this will hardly be understood by American spectators. The passionate friend now comes with the police, discovers the man hiding behind the bed on which the corpse is laid out. The murderer is led away. The passionate man, being alone with the wife, attempts to kiss her. She repulses him and he is using force when the corpse arises on its bed a well man and chokes the other man insensible.

"Nomadic Tribes of El Kantara, Algeria" (Pathe), October 24.—This is a beautifully tinted travelog, showing the Gorge of El Kantara with its fine roads and steam railway. It also shows some very interesting views of nomadic tribes which live in the vicinity. We are shown primitive methods of churning milk, grinding corn, etc. It is very interesting.

"A Gypsy Bride" (Melies), October 26.—A conventional story of a father who disowned his son for marrying a Gypsy. Later, his son's illness softens the old man's heart. A feature of the film worth noting is the fact that the young American trounces the impertinent Gypsy who wanted the girl to marry him, but the Gypsy does not attempt murder or anything else desperate. He merely takes himself away and the young man takes his bride away from the camp.

"Lost in the Jungle" (Selig), October 26.—Here is a real thriller. The obdurate Boer father orders his daughter to marry a neighboring young man. She falls in love with a young Englishman, returns Hans' necklace and is ordered away by her father. Lost in the jungle she is beset by a leopard, but succeeds in beating him off with a large knife, even though lascerated. Then comes Toddles, her pet elephant, and takes her back home, where her stern father relents and the wedding bells chime merrily. The jungle scenery is remarkably well suggested, and there is a fascination about the film difficult to describe, but quite apparent when it is seen. The photographs are not so good as Selig's last jungle picture, but it is clear that the producer has benefited by practice. The thrill when the leopard attacks the girl could not have been heightened; he has reached the acme of art in such a scene.

"A Rural Conqueror" (Lubin), October 26.—A society comedy in rural surroundings, which the acting of Miss Lawrence and Mr. Johnson keeps alive and very funny. The situation is rich when it reaches its best, and the spectators fairly roared. There was one big man among 'em who bellowed. Johnson plays a rural character, Reuben, very much in love with Marjorie, which part is taken by Miss Lawrence. They are not farmer people, but country people of means. Marjorie doesn't see very much that's romantic in simple Reuben; he tires her, so she makes fun for herself by avoiding him. She invites a girl friend to visit her, then her cousin Grace comes. Both these girls have sweethearts and both get lonesome, so the two men are also invited. The resultant pairing off leave Marjorie out in the cold again. She tries, without success, to break up the lovemaking and, as for Reuben, so much of it around him makes him crazy. He would like to try it with Marjorie, who comforts him with apples, till he jumps the hedge to get away. He now puts on "royal raiment" and gets her to go for a ride in a rural "chariot." In the middle of a stream, he unharnesses the horse and Marjorie is left in the chariot till she consents to marry him. It is very funny because of Mr. Johnson and of Miss Lawrence. The comedy is surely a success.

"Too Many Engagements" (Essanay), October 26.—A lively comedy in a fashionable restaurant. Two adjoining small private dining rooms are shown and in each Bob Crandall, stock market plunger, is trying to entertain a girl without letting either know of the other. The train of circumstances that brought about the situation is amusing and so is the result. The spectators laughed and seemed to enjoy it. Bob had just made "a big haul" on the market and he invited Grace to help him celebrate. Grace had another more pressing engagement and had to refuse, so he got Rose. Grace found that her relative was not so sick after all and telegraphed at the last minute that she would be at the hotel to meet him. He didn't succeed in keeping the two from getting wise, but he made a verp sporty attempt. It cost him several big tips to the hotel employees and he deserved better success. It is fresh and played mostly by new players. It's a pleasing comedy.

"The Long Road" (Biograph), October 26.This picture is a life portrayal more because its significance is true of human hearts, than because the outward incidents that are utilized are probable. Some of them are not probable, yet in the picture they are made convincing. In all of its scenes the artistic faculty of a true "maker," in the Carlylian sense, is plain. The picture from first to last is full of beauty. There is, indeed, so much in it, and its subordinate parts, often extremely beautiful in themselves, are so strongly kept auxiliary to the action that one feels, after he has seen the drama, that it would be pleasant to view the scenes again, slowly and disconnectedly, as works of art, for the sake of the detail. For instance, there is a scene in a convent. Two or three sisters are in the foreground talking; one is holding a baby's layette. The situation depicted is poignant and demands one's whole attention. Not until this situation is completely unfolded does the spectator's eye notice that, in the background, there is a spiritual-faced sister at an embroidery frame, making of her work a ceremony. He notices it only as the scene is slipping away to give place to the next.

Perfection on the formal plan is not of primary importance and those who attain to it are apt to get nothing else. Both "The Winter's Tale" and "Robinson Crusoe" are very faulty when judged by formal perfection. This picture is faulty, but it is valuable for its humanity. The first scene shows a little quarrel of two lovers. Pride in both widens the breach till the man marries another, and the girl enters a convent of the Sisters of Mercy and takes up good works as a vocation. The man suffers financial reverses, hasn't the character to bear up against them, goes the downward course till he is shot, by accident, in a saloon on the city's lower East Side. This is the weakest part of the story; it is in fact, conventional, or at least, seems so. The object of the scenario in picturing him thus was to furnish scenes that would bring the nun in her lowly ministrations directly in contact with the man and his family, particularly at the time of the man's death, for the sake of showing its effect upon her, of showing her heart. One feels that it was the easiest way to do it, and that perhaps a better, truer way might have been found, though one must admit that it was possible as pictured, and it was the surest way, perhaps.

The great beauty of the picture lies in what the producer has been able to make his players show. He had very excellent material to work with. Especially fine is the scene in the church during the wedding ceremony. The center of interest is the girl and the way her character reacts in the situation. The young lady who takes this part very skilfully portrays a conflict of emotions bordering on hysteria. In previous scenes she has amply prepared us for just this. The effect is heightened by the girl's mother, who sits beside her, thoroughly understanding, apprehensive, on guard. It is mighty fine. If all the pictures had been as true as this it would have stood as a work of art unashamed beside our very best. As it is, it keeps a pretty high average all through.

"Grandfather's Violin" (C. G. P. C.), October 30.—Grandfather had been a countryside fiddler. His son-in-law was a rough, greedy peasant and he hid his savings from him in the body of his old violin. After his death his daughter's husband in a drunken rage drives his wife and son away. The boy attempts to earn a living for both with his grandfather's violin. This gets broken and the savings are found. It is well acted and makes a very acceptable picture; not very original, but pleasing.

"A Burlesque Bull Fight" (C. G. P. C.), October 30.—The second part of this split reel is a play bull fight in which a hornless sheep is the bull and children are the actors as well as the player spectators. It is lively and amusing. There is no brutality about it at all. The sheep isn't plagued and he does some lively butting.

"Captain Barnacle, Diplomat" (Vitagraph), October 30.—Capt. Barnacle, wise from experience, is in a position to be the guide and philosopher to others through the tangles of courtship. Captain B. tries to help his friend Dan, who is too much of a goody-goody to suit the girl of his choice. He gets him drinking a cool stein of beer and Capt. Ruggles brings the girl past; it doesn't quite capture the lady, so they get him mixed up in a street scrap, but even that doesn't win her. Then Captain Ruggles, her father, forbids the marriage. That does the trick. Captain Barnacle and his friend are the same fine old salts and made more than one good laugh. But the rumpling scenes are a bit too heavy. Mr. Costello is better at other parts, as a rule, I recall a [illegible] Mr. Johnson to keep such a situation alive. The audience laughed, but only at one or other of the seamen.

"For Her Brother's Sake" (Kalem), October 30.—This story, told so often as it has been in outline, and in which a brother is helped by his married sister who makes her husband jealous, needs to be told in very fresh and interesting surroundings to make it truly worth while. In this case, the brother and sister are entombed alive by a cave-in of a mine in which she was hiding him. Her taking him there in this case was very unconvincing, however. As for acting in the picture, it is fair all through. The sheriff perhaps is the most interesting individual. Those who like a typical, conventional Western that is not very lively will like this.

"The Kid from the Klondyke" (Edison), October 28.—This is a character comedy and not a formal Western. There is no scenery in it; it is a hotel lobby, parlor car, automobile and city picture, and relates the comic experiences of a breezy young man who had made a big roll of greenbacks and a bank account of startling size. He fell in love with a pretty hotel stenographer who was possessed of originality and humor. How he fell in love, scraped acquaintance, proposed and was sent to Chicago to ask Papa is told freshly and is very amusing, as are his adventures on the Pullman. A "sharp" traveler learned of his roll and tried to get it. This sharper rapped, in telegraph alphabet, a message on a glass to the girls who were his accomplices. The letters jumped up on the wall and spelled out, "He has a big roll; it's easy"; but the kid understood. The way Papa was compelled to give consent to the wedding is not new, but serves to end the comedy. The fun comes almost wholly from the Kid, who does very well. The stenographer was well chosen and does creditably. It is a good, amusing comedy.

"Regeneration" (Vitagraph), October 28.—These regeneration pictures are of inestimable value when they picture life truthfully enough to convince. Their purpose is to show the human qualities in man as triumphing over the bestial. But they, above all other kinds of pictures, must be sound, must ring true. Very few of them move us so deeply that we remember them or find them useful; they seldom have the clear, true note. In this picture, two people are turned from evil ways and take up humanity again through fear of being stumbling blocks to a little child. This child, left by the death of its mother without protection, fell into the hands of a fast woman, mistress of the child's father, who had deserted its mother, his wife, years before. The finding of the child, with its concomitant circumstances, kept the woman from drowning herself. The state of the woman's mind when she had brought the child to her home is not clear. The imagination is left to grope its own way into the situation. Perhaps her soul had been startled into wakefulness by its emotional reaction from the suicide idea which she had entertained. She reforms at once so that she can be worthy of keeping the child. Cigarettes and whiskey go by the board, while the child is still sleeping. One can't help contrasting this with a French picture of about a year ago called "Sans Familie," I think, in which a little French lad, adopted by a rough American miner, slowly, step by step, works a great change in the big-hearted man's manners and ways of life. This picture provided means by which the father recognizes his child. He takes it away from the woman, and he, too, reforming, leads a better life. The child eventually makes the man marry the woman, which is a habit and custom with such pictures. Now, everyone knows that regeneration is a hard and painful change, and no picture that ignores its difficulties can in any vivid way realize our human lives to us. A new player, Miss Gardner, takes the woman's part and gives bright promise of fine work. Miss Lewis, who already has won laurels, plays the deserted wife.

"The Peril of the Plains" (Kalem), October 27.—The story told in this picture is thrilling. Indians descend upon two children and make them captives. Another band burns the cabin of their parents, but the people escape. The father and mother throw the Indians off the trail by diving under water and breathing through reeds. The children get inside a large basket and start it rolling down a hill. These two episodes are sufficient to make the picture, but there is an Indian fight and a repulse to come yet. The title of the picture is amply justified.

"A Painter's Idyl" (Selig), October 27.—The idea back of this film is excellent. The Yosemite Valley is shown ever before the artist as he works on his picture. The growth of the picture on the easel before him and its reproduction of the valley is beautifully done. There is a love story, with the intervention of a city girl, but eventually the two young people discover their great love for each other. Probably all goes well afterward.

"An Island Comedy" (Edison), October 27.—This story of an estrangement between two lovers has its happy ending on a pleasant island. The trouble came through a young man growing confident over his position with the girl. He strikes a bargain with the young woman's brother and the young woman is left alone upon an island. The young man lands on the same island; the boy gets away with both boats and finally the young man produces a tempting luncheon. The sight of the luncheon is too much, for it is long after breakfast. The girl surrenders and speaks to him. Then there is an end to difficulty. The previous estrangement is forgotten and Cupid has opportunity to perform wonders in healing wounded hearts.

"Kitty and the Cowboys" (Vitagraph), October 27.—This film is not the best comedy of the week, but there is always plenty of humor in the rough though good-natured horseplay of the cowboys in it, and it faithfully reproduces a number of entertaining schemes. The way the butt of all their jokes, Fatty, succeeds in getting even is amusing. He dresses as a woman, having previously announced that his sister would arrive on a certain date. The supposed woman deceived each one of them and turns the trick very neatly. But they end up by ducking the joker in the watering trough nearby. The audience laughed and seemed to enjoy it.

"Pals" (Essanay), October 27.—Whether the intention was to deliver a sermon on jealousy or not, that is what the producers did in this film. It represents a young man becoming jealous of his friend because he sees him and his fiancée often together. There is a fight, following which the wonderful dream presents to the jealous man his true situation. Eventually, however, the friends make up and agree not to be jealous of each other longer.

"Mother Is Strong on Hypnotism" (Pathe), October 27.—A new version of the time honored and somewhat worn mother-in-law joke. The aforesaid lady studies hypnotism and practises it in compelling the poor abused husband to do her bidding. She gets in wrong after a time, however. Until she does, the stunts which the unfortunate man performs under her direction make everyone laugh. The comedy is broad, but lively and there is no lack of vigorous laughter.

"Logging and Milling in Sweden" (Pathe), October 27.—A scenic film which faithfully reproduces these important operations in that Northern country. The work is well done and there is much interest in it. It is a good film.

"Funeral in Annam" (Pathe), October 27.—On the same reel with the above is another short scenic which is interesting. The audience can see what a funeral is in that faraway and altogether strange country. As a travelog, it is a success.

"Fridolin" (Gaumont), October 28.—The story of a page to the Countess of Savern, who, though he was unjustly accused of infidelity by Robert, the Count's huntsman, was proved true, and the plotter himself fell into the trap he had laid for the page. The settings in this picture are attractive. The story is taken from Schiller's famous ballad. The audience shows very strong sympathy for the page and is disposed to applaud the fate of the cruel huntsman.

"The Principality of Monaco" (Gaumont), October 28.—This picture is of much interest since it illustrates accurately the famous gaming place of whom everyone has heard, but few have seen. The tropical foliage is especially well reproduced. Indeed, the film, though short, is one of the best travelogs of the past two or three weeks.

"Saved by the Flag" (Pathe), October 28.—A conventional love story with the scene laid in Mexico and a chase as its chief feature. A young American wins the affections of a girl from her Mexican lover, who is a general in the army. Later, on a false charge, he sends a number of soldiers to arrest the American. He and his bride mount a carriage and ride furiously for the frontier, which they reach just in time to escape the soldiers. Seizing the American flag, they wrap themselves in it in a very spectacular way and defy the Mexican authorities to take them. There is a good deal of go in this chase.

"Love's Victory" (Lubin), October 28.—This picture brought round after round of applause. Such a wedding is sufficiently unusual to hold the attention of any audience indefinitely. The father objected to the match and refused to allow his daughter to marry the man. There was a "framed up" plot to make her think the young man was untrue. The real interest begins when the young people meet during the absence of the father, discover what has been done and, seizing a handcar, go flying down the track while the others pursue in an auto. Seeing a minister, they stop long enough to take him on board and the wedding is solemnized while the handcar is distancing the automobile. There is novelty enough in this picture to make it popular. More than that, it is a new situation and for that reason it pleases.

"In Frontier Days" (Pathe), October 26.—No one can question the excitement which this picture causes. The Indians bear down upon a party of emigrants making their way over the plains in wagons. And a wild dash for safety begins. There is such riding as is seldom seen, even in a film. Then comes a lively fight, with a thrilling rescue which results in driving the besieging Indians away. The details are carefully worked out and the film is satisfactory in every way. In one theater where this picture was seen the enthusiasm of the audience burst all bounds.

"Outwitting Papa" (Essanay), October 31.—There is much fun in this farce-comedy and the audience had several good laughs; but the situation itself isn't very amusing—it is too forced. It is intended, of course, to be extravagant; and depends for its fun on the humanity that the players contrive to put in their acting. Ethel's papa objected to Tom, but told him that, if he could elope with Ethel before two weeks were up, he could have her and welcome. He then put prison bars on Ethel's window. Tom gets the help of a dentist and gives papa laughing gas enough to keep him quiet until after he and Ethel have had the knot tied by the dominie. The audience enjoyed it, but it is not likely to be long remembered.

"Madge of the Mountains" (Vitagraph), October 31.—The preliminary statement in this picture is not so interesting as it ought to be; it isn't convincing enough. The situation is this: Madge, daughter of a Tennessee moonshiner, asked permission to nurse young Brownlee, who had come to the mountains in search of adventure, and had been shot while taking part with a sheriff's posse in an attack on her father's distillery. Her father had just been killed. By the time the elder Brownlee arrived the two had fallen in love. He attempts to keep the two lovers apart, but is not able and in the end, after Madge has come to the East to find why the young man has not kept his promise to come back to her, he gives in. Miss Gardner's characterization keeps the picture interesting. The elder Brownlee is a fine picture of a type of aristocratic gentleman. The picture is acceptable, but can hardly be very popular.

"Captain Brand's Wife" (Selig), October 31.—Prettily posed scenes in artistically chosen settings give a pleasing atmosphere to the early parts of this picture that adds to its interest. It is an Indian and chase picture, with a capture and rescue by a scouting party of U. S. cavalrymen; but is so well planned and conducted that the interest is kept alive all through by small incidences, realistic and unexpected. In this it reminds one of a strong Selig, "Apache Kid," released last summer. It is exciting. The love story is well acted. It will be a popular picture.

"Little Ingin" (Selig), October 30.—The Selig Company, some weeks ago, released a picture telling a tragic story of a little Indian lad whom a white man had adopted. This picture gives the comic possibilities in the same situation. The whole Indian family, brave, squaw, and older son, comes on a visit to "little Ingin" and the people who had taken him to their home. Of course, they were not accustomed to front-door bells, table etiquette, nor to sleeping in a bed. Neither was "big Injun" accustomed to seeing the decanter on the sideboard and not making free use of it. Before the family gets rid of "little Ingin" and his very inconvenient relatives, there are "doings," sometimes a bit forced, but nearly always funny. The audience certainly laughed and seemed to enjoy the picture.

"Somebody's Mother" (Lubin), October 30.—She was "somebody's mother" to the little ragged newsie and he did what he could to protect her from the gang of young ruffians who were tormenting her. The spectators had seen her in her better times and knew that she had come by slow degrees, and through no fault of her own, to live in "Tatterrag Alley." Even from her garret in this unspeakable district, she is soon ejected. But at this point, her son returns from the Klondike, a rich man. The newsboy is the means through which her son is able to locate her. The story has a pleasing sentiment, its slum scenes are intensely interesting. Aside from the old lady and the little ragged newsboy, however, there is nothing new or above commonplace in the characterization. The player who takes this old lady's part is a very good actress. She alone, with the help of the boy in his interesting make up, saves the picture, and makes it worth while.

"Pathe's Weekly—44" (October 31).—The breadth and interest of the "Weekly" are well known to millions. It is to be expected that some weeks, because of specially important events, it will be much more eagerly scanned than at other times. But it always maintains its interest, whatever the week. The Pathe camera men have shown themselves good reporters and that they have a quick sense of what is news.

"The Reform Candidate" (Edison), October 31.—Politics as a good subject for filming has been neglected by American film makers. This is hard to understand in view of the constant cry of scenario editors to give them something new and modern. In a democratic republic like ours the political life is always rich in interest and it surely is not without its comedies and dramas. The subject of the film then was well chosen. There is no originality in the plot, which has been worn into shreds by the muck-raking division of the magazine writers, not to speak of the playwrights for the legitimate stage. Nor can much be said in praise of the way the plot is developed. Palpably impossible situations and incidents abound in the play. Even a child in arms must be tempted to laugh at the idea of the candidate for Mayor of a large city meeting the president of a large corporation in the back room of a saloon and receiving from him a thousand shares of stock as a bribe. The woman reporter abstracting the shares from the inside pocket of the candidate is another bit of clumsiness. The editor too was more of a caricature than a type of real man. Barring these defects the play has merit; the mob scenes were well worked up, the acting was above the average, the artists portraying Edith, the woman reporter, and Curtis Greer deserving special mention. The young man, who posed as the reform candidate was evidently embarrassed by his part and tried to compromise with it by endeavoring to look pretty.

"The Widower" (Gaumont), October 31.—The plot of the story is meager rather than simple and this detracts something from an otherwise praiseworthy effort. The best part of the picture is the number of fine outdoor settings, in the selection of which this company seems to be singularly fortunate. The old mill and the scenes on the water are extremely pretty, the acting of the parents and the children of the widower is good, the parts of the widower and his proposed fiancée are not so well taken. Small blame, however, attaches to the actor, for the parts had no possibilities even for an artist of the greatest talent. One always likes to see pretty scenery and good photography, but they should always be a means and never an end. Here the story is subordinated to scenic effects and the climax, if climax there is at all, is distinctly disappointing.

"Love in the Hills" (Biograph), October 30.—The characters in this picture are the same in type as those in a recent release of the Biograph Company, "The Revenue Man and the Girl." The backgrounds and scenes also are similar. The players who act the picture are different. On the whole, it is not so successful, being, by its very nature, more suitable for the story teller than the picture maker. This is most noticeable where one of the picture's characters plays on the violin and the effect of his music is shown in the heroine's charge of attitude toward a city man who is visiting the hills. She didn't love him, but under the music's spell, she thought she did. We don't hear any music when the shiftless genius of the hills scrapes on his old fiddle. We suspect that it's pretty dismal sound; but in the next scene we see the girl listening and then we see her fall into the arms of the city man. It doesn't seem very effecting. The two plan to run away together and this speedily brings the story to its climax—the discrediting of the city fop and the girl's recognition of the worthy qualities is a sturdy young mountaineer, whom, without knowing it, she had really loved from the first even while she had repulsed and made fun of him. This, the player's work had shown rather skillfully. The manly mountaineer's part is also very well done as is, in fact, each of the parts. The picture has a good deal of humor, for the fiddler too loved the girl and he thought to win her with pumpkins. That is a very commendable addition, quite true of rural life. The picture will stand, because of the good things that are in it.

Independent.

"The Noble Red Man" (Bison), October 24.—A tragic love story set in an Indian village. It is full of local color and, for human truth and naturalness in presentation, equals the best Bison pictures. It shows the village chief giving his daughter to a valorous brave whom she didn't love. Her protests and those of a third warrior, her accepted lover, are of no avail. There is another girl who loves the valorous brave, and, later, because he repulses her advances, she stabs him. The warrior who was jealous is accused. He thinks that his sweetheart has done the deed, and so accuses himself. He is being burned at the stake when the real culprit in remorse admits the guilt and is cast out of the tribe. The lovers are then reunited. It is told effectively and with considerable dramatic beauty. One "leader" telling that the culprit was about to confess wasn't needed and took something from expectancy. It is a fine picture.

"Toto and the Dummy" (Itala), October 28.—Toto, the impecunious artist, had a mechanical dummy for a drapery holder. He was moving again. His creditors were at the door peeping in. They saw him cutting up a corpse and turned in the fire alarm. Flood and disaster followed. It is fairly lively.

"The Rearing of Pheasants" (Itala), October 28.—An instructive industrial film showing how pheasants are cared for, from the chicks to marketable birds. There are some very pretty pictures on the film and the audience seemed to be much interested in it.

"The Early Life of David Copperfield" (Thanhouser), October 17.—Such a picture as this depends largely on characterization, and also on the atmosphere that is given by costumes and settings. In both, the Thanhouser Company has been very successful and is worthy of high praise. The story is well acted and made clear—how could it help being interesting? It is a masterpiece. Perhaps Aunt Betsy is most praiseworthily pictured, but all of the parts are well done.

"Little Em'ly and David Copperfield" (Thanhouser), October 24.—Second in the series of Dickens' great novel. This, of course, is a seaside picture. It has the good qualities of the first film. It is a sadder story and was harder to act convincingly. It is, however, very successful and effective. Some of its scenes are very highly commendable. Little Em'ly is charming, and the other characters are very well portrayed.

"The Loves of David Copperfield" (Thanhouser), October 31.—This is the third in the David Copperfield series. A very great deal of matter is crowded into this part. It doesn't grip quite so powerfully as the first two parts, but that isn't saying that it is weak. It is very interesting and good.

Taken as a whole, the three reels are very much worth while. The novel has been done before. No comparison is needed. Spectators may prefer this character as portrayed in one and that character as portrayed in the other. But most will be very much pleased and delighted with these other motion pictures of our best novel.

"Their Burglar" (Thanhouser), November 3.—Their burglar came to steal, but accepted a note from the bride-to-be, who mistook him for the butler. He is chased by the police and has to deliver the note to escape. The note said, "If you still love me, come and get me." When the hero arrives, the girl is ready and the two elope, after making the burglar a present of the wedding presents he had come to steal. She was to have married a count, but he was left in the lurch. There are some good jokes in it. The story is not very strong; it doesn't convince.

"Big Noise Hank" (Nestor), November 1.—The situation in this picture is due to the character of two men. Hank Rouser (played by Mr. Sprague) is a cowboy terror, and Julius Jones, a timid city man (played by Mr. Waldron), owes him money. The fun begins when "Big Noise Hank" determines to collect it. He camps out in the Jones sitting room. Jones, ostensibly gone on a long journey, is locked in the bedroom. Jones' man tries to get him things to eat and drink, but can get nothing past Hank's eagle eye. Meanwhile, Hank is having a fine time, when complications bring in the police. There are a good many laughs in it and it has life. It pleased the audience—at least made them laugh.

"Mutt and Jeff and the Lady Stenographer" (Nestor), November 4.—Our two friends get jobs with an insurance company. Mutt is given canvassing; Jeff has a private office. Mutt has many vicissitudes; Jaff makes a date with the stenographer and takes her to a nickel theater. She gets mad at that and lets Mutt cut Jeff out; but her rather tough father is following. Poor Mutt gets a knockout with a sandbag.

"The Suitcase Mystery" (Nestor), November 4.—On the same reel with "Mutt and Jeff" and also helped by subtitles. It gives an interesting but very slight account of a misunderstanding. Two thugs overheard a woman complaining to the police that a short man had snatched her suitcase. The two meet a short man carrying a suit case and rob him of it. It contains rag dolls and a couple of old Teddy bears. It is so slight that one wonders why it is pictured.

"A Few Minutes with Steeplejack Lindholm" (Imp), October 30.—The title of the picture describes it. Mr. Lindholm's job was painting a flag-staff on the roof of a tall building near the Battery, New York City. He is also shown doing other jobs in ticklish places.

"His Dress Shirt" (Imp), October 30.—A pretty home-life, quarrel-comedy over the young husband's dress shirt which his pretty wife forgot to send to the laundry. The acting of the principals gives it much charm. It's a little life portrayal, quite fresh and very acceptable.

"King, the Detective" (Imp), November 2.—A very strong detective story, well-designed and full of interest from first to end. The players all deserve commendation, but the guilty chaffeur was especially well "put over." The picture begins with a love story. The daughter of the murdered man had contracted a clandestine marriage, and her husband was seen climbing into her house the night the man's chauffeur killed him. The great detective very cleverly saves this young husband from suspicion. It is a good picture, well worth seeing.

"Following Cousin's Footsteps" (Solax), November 1.—Bashful Georgie from the farm knew that Cousin Frank was reputed to be a great "lady killer," and in his simple heart he wanted to be one too. Cousin Frank had Georgie come on a visit to the city and there he got much valuable experience. The way Georgie proved to be a better man than his cousin is, in the picture's atmosphere, quite convincing, although at first, as a student of city ways, he furnished a good deal of amusement not only to his cousin but to everybody, with whom we may count the spectators. It is a theatrical piece, but has good comedy spirit, and the producer, by careful treatment, has perhaps got all the value possible out of the situation. Georgie is played by a good actor, but there is no one in the cast whose work is not very commendable. All the players are also pleasant people—in plain words, the girls are pretty and there is quite a bevy of 'em. It is likely to be generally popular, for it's a very amusing comedy.

"The Stronger Man" (American), October 30.—It takes a producer who knows his business to put over such pictures of Western life as the "Flying A" has been releasing of late. They nearly all have had good scenarios behind them and have presented pictures of life freshly. Also they have illustrated ideas more or less universal and true to human life regardless of the setting. This story is not so strong as the better "American" pictures. It has an idea and one worth while, but it is one often pictured. Merely telling, as it does, that the stronger man is not always the one who can get "the drop" first nor even the one whose physical endurance is greater, it hardly rises above an acceptable commonplace. In this picture it is the girl, the bandit's sweetheart, who is the judge between the sheriff and her lover. She finds the former a man and denounces the latter.

"The Water War" (American), November 2.—Cattlemen are naturally conservative. They once were free-footed over nearly all the West. The coming of civilization with its farms and fences, its irrigation waterworks and canals hampered them and was often the cause of bitterness. In this very melodramatic picture, the owner of a nearby ranch fought desperately to keep a party of engineers from completing a big dam. The ranchman's daughter fell in love with the young chief engineer. That was necessary, of course, as was the villainous jealousy of one of the cowboys. The ranch outfit killed one of the engineering party and this precipitated the war. In a hot skirmish across a lot of big iron pipes, the ranch owner and the engineer are badly wounded. This puts an end to the strife, the ranchman's daughter even permitting the engineer to be brought to the house for care and nursing. He recovers and, at length, the big dam is finished. Very interesting pictures of it are shown as the engineer takes the girl about it. The villain attempts to dynamite it, but is caught. While the engineer is grappling with him, the girl throws the dope sticks overboard. The engineer then throws the villain down the embankment. It is a thrilling and fairly artistic picture, though the American Company has turned out much more human work. The photographs are only fair; some are poor.

"Apples and Destiny" (Powers), October 31.—An apple-pie comedy in which the "fruit of Eden" caused the downfall of Sis's beau. The beau called while Sis was making apple pies. Pa found two tramps in the orchard and they wouldn't get out. Pa went for his gun. The tramps, meanwhile, had departed, and the beau had taken their place in order to fill out the last pie. The rest doesn't need to be told. It is lively.

"The Book Agent" (Powers), October 31.—Shows the tricks of a nifty book agent. The story started as a squib in the newspapers and has been done before in motion pictures. A telegram to the police at the next station on the railroad would have been sufficient to bring the money back to the green grocer whom this book agent cheated. There is a certain amount of amusement in the picture.

"Pride of the West" (Powers), November 4.—A softly toned, very pretty scene opens this picture. The sheriff's daughter was pretty; she wasn't bothered with camera consciousness, and she was a good shot. The story is conventional; one can see through it from the start. It is a speedy picture, however, and will be acceptable to many audiences.

"Bill and the Bear" (Lux), November 3.—The pet black bear is the interesting feature of the picture. His rescue, or apparent rescue, of men from the water is very remarkable. That those men were wanted by the police is of no importance. The two comic policemen are also amusing. It makes good light entertainment.

"Tommy's Camera" (Lux), November 3.—Tommy's fond parents were so proud of Tommy's school record that they gave him a camera. He snapped it on the cook and butler having a glass of wine together; on Papa and Mamma having a little tiff, and on Sis and her beau on a bench in the garden. The members of the family gathered to see the result. Each took up a picture and thought he or she had "something on" someone else, but later there was trouble. There is amusement in it.

"Foolshead's Holidays" (Itala), November 4.—Recounts the many disasters of Foolshead, the student, when his clandestine wife determined to go with him on his vacation home. It is not slow. It is not so good as some of this series.

"A Father's Heart" (Eclair), October 30.—The bachelor lamplighter adopts a little foundling girl whom he picks up and who had just been abandoned by its mother. This baby grows up into an attractive child of about ten years. The mother tries to get her back, but the man won't give her up. The man and woman decide to wed as a solution of the difficulty. It should not have been hard to make the picture convincing. There is, however, a large gap in the continuity of the action, between the mother's desertion of her child and her coming to claim it again, and this makes the mother's acting seem to overdraw the situation almost painfully. The theme has been used a number of times before and several times more effectively. It can hardly be a very popular picture, yet it is acceptable.

"The Cattlemen's War" (Bison), October 31.—Two ranchmen, owners of adjacent properties, quarreled over an unbranded calf that both claimed. The dispute started with the cowboys of the respective herds and the hot-headed owners took up the quarrel in earnest. One or two lively revolver encounters ensue. Much smoke rises up, but happily there are no casualties. The son of one of the ranchmen and the daughter of the other were engaged to be married before the war began. The sheriff, in vain, attempts to smooth matters over. The young lover buys a cow and presents it to the father of his sweetheart. Both fathers then are brought to see how little a matter they were quarreling about. The picture is not very dramatic and the photographs are so poor that less is got out of the situation than might have been possible. There is plenty of shooting and smoke in the picture, however.

"A Young Squaw's Bravery" (Bison), November 3.—In this picture, a Sioux maiden very bravely and very craftily rescues her lover who had been captured by the Cheyennes. It is exciting, though there is no one part of it that seems very fresh. The arrangement is new and it is well acted. The part of the Sioux maiden is taken by a new player, Anna Little, who does very well. The photography is not up to Bison standard. There is clear focus near the camera, but in the background there is only light and black shadow.

"Judas" (Ambrosio), November 1.—A psychological study of passion rather than a religious story is pictured on this film, although the Master, with the Apostles, is shown in some of the most important moments of His life. In exquisitely beautiful pictures, we see Him first preaching on a hillside, then at the triumphal entry into Jerusalem, then in the Garden of Gethsemane at the time of the Passion and, a little later, at the time of his arrest. We are also given a heart-rending picture of the Saviour in the distance, carrying the heavy cross up Golgotha. The story is an entirely hypothetical explanation of the reason for the treachery of the false apostle. There is a woman in the picture, Priscilla, who had fallen in love with Jesus and had been repulsed. Judas conceived a passion for her. For vengeance, she works on Judas, by a promise of her love, until he is ready to betray Jesus. The woman sees the progress of the Saviour with the cross up Golgotha and, overcome with repentance, climbs to the top and falls at the foot of the cross. We see three crosses, but only the feet are visible. The last scene shows Judas' hands tying the rope. We don't see him hang himself, but we see the rope tighten. The picture is very artistically done; almost all the scenes are full of poetry and very beautiful, especially that in which the Mount of Olives is shown; the pictorial balancing of this scene is perfect. The player who takes the part of the Saviour doesn't appear to be acting; his work is restrained, simple and reverent. He is never seen close to the camera; there is nothing whatever in his part that should offend. Judas and the woman are the only important figures that appear "close up." A great actor and actress were needed in these parts, but, as they are, they are very acceptable.

"A Mixup in Suit Cases" (Reliance), November 1.—A comedy of Summer time, with Arthur Johnson in the leading role. With very poor photography, its worst fault is that the threads of the story are not kept quite distinct and a little confusion results. But it is very lively and as the chief purpose of a farce-comedy is to make smiles and laughter, it is likely to be a success.

"The Actor as a Soldier" (Great Northern), November 4.—It was the actor's idea to manage it so that he could get out of military service. You can't make soldiers of some men. The actor played the crazy man; he overdrew it a bit. One could hardly have fooled the medical board into thinking him mad and have them let him go. However, it is a laughable picture and makes a good farce.

"Field Day at Fort Riley" (Champion), October 30.—Fort Riley is a large government post in Kansas. This interesting and instructive picture shows artillery drills, firing the field guns, also an infantry sham battle in extended order and also field sports, races, hammer throwing, jumping. It's a very good film.

"The Cowboy's Pies" (Champion), November 1.—A very pleasant comedy of Western life, but in no sense a typical "Western." It is a truly human story as fresh and delightful as the pies the two girls made for their neighbors, the cowboys. It is not only amusing, but entirely good natured and the audience seemed to take much pleasure in it. It is ably managed and is throughout a very commendable picture.

"The Tale of a Cat" (Rex), November 2.—Little motherless Robert, a delightfully human lad, son of a rich father, made friends with a stray cat. It had the homeliest face possible. The housekeeper gave the cat away, despite Robert's protests. The washwoman took it home to her little blind girl. From her, it ran away. She could hear it, but she could not see it, so it lead her on, till she came to Robert's home. The story tells how Robert's father brought the little girl in and how he employed her mother as housekeeper and the two children were friends. A leader gives a very good moral. The qualities of the picture are very pleasing. Little Helen Anderson is the blind girl and the naturalness of the two children and the good photography of the poetic backgrounds make a very acceptable and worthy picture.

Publication has just been completed in a number of the larger daily papers of the country of a series of articles upon the various phases of the motion picture business written by the Frederick J. Haskin newspaper syndicate, of Washington, D. C. The series consisted of twelve stories, which were compiled by Mr. Louis Brownlow, staff writer for the Haskin Syndicate. Mr. Brownlow spent a week in New York gathering data for the series and the result was very satisfactory, being altogether the most comprehensive story of the pictures that has ever been printed in the secular press and singularly free from error or mis-statement.

The fact that this series was printed in forty newspapers of the first class in such cities as Baltimore, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, New Orleans, Philadelphia, Cleveland, San Francisco and Rochester, not to mention Shanghai, China, would indicate that there is a strong demand for information relating to pictures and gives some idea of the field covered by the stories in question.

Mr. Haskin is entitled to the thanks of the picture fraternity.

ECLAIR PRESENTS MME. BERNHARDT IN PICTURES.

Time and again it has been suggested that the last word in motion picture enterprise would be to induce Mme Sarah Bernhardt to pose for the motion picture camera. While it has been noticed that the Divine Sarah appeared before the camera, it has not been generally announced that the Eclair Company was the fortunate company to secure her services. That, however, is the fact about the matter and that fortunate company now announces that it will soon release the picture in which Mme. Bernhardt appears, which will be "Camille."

It is also announced by the same company that Mme. Rejane has been secured for a motion picture revival of Sardou's comedy, "Madam Sans Gene."

In both pictures the stars are supported by a distinguished cast.

"A HEROINE OF THE REVOLUTION" (Solax).

A pretty story and a probable one, finely selected outdoor settings, fair and capable actresses and a most faithful portrayal of colonial life constitute the merits of this reel. A spirited young American girl, whose lover is one of the country's defenders, is the central and most charming figure of the tale.

She witnesses the capture of an American mounted messenger by British troops. The messenger had been sent by Washington, who had learned of the approach of a strong corps of the enemy, the presence of which he wants to be made known to one of his generals, whose soldiers are in the path of the enemy's line of march. Facing great dangers, the girl, a perfect and fearless rider and graceful withal, dashes away on her horse which she had left at a neighboring farm. Her movements are noticed by a British cavalryman, who sets off in hot pursuit. The race is long and arduous, likewise exciting. When the girl's strength is about to give way, with her pursuer close upon her heels, she comes in sight of the very American regiment she had come to warn. Her mission is fulfilled; she has saved the American detachment. The last scene shows the lovers united at the end of the war.

Scene from "A Heroine of the Revolution" (Solax).

The picture is worthy of special praise by reason of the painstaking care employed to give a true reproduction of the costumes, the uniforms and the furniture of revolutionary times.

TWO CHAMPION PICTURES.

A view of the second of the Champion Company's series of Fort Riley pictures, released Oct. 30, entitled "Field Day Sports at Fort Riley," proved that subject one of consuming interest to the Moving Picture World representative. The picture gives in addition to the sports some further views of the maneuvers which occur at Uncle Sam's big military farm. There are field batteries in action, companies and battalions in skirmish drill and soldiers on the march back to camp after a day's hike over the prairie. The sports are concluded with a lively boxing match in which two huskies give an exhibition of considerable skill with the mits. Altogether it is a picture that is worth while.

We desire to call attention, particularly, to a coming Champion comedy to be released under the title, "The Cowboys' Pies." Aside from being a good photograph, this picture is one of the best comedy subjects of any made by independent manufacturers. The story is good and it has been pictured in a most satisfying manner. Being a cowboy story, there is some riding, but that is only incidental; it's the comedy features that count. Briefly: Two girls go to their uncle's ranch for their vacation. The nearest neighbors live five miles away. The girls mount horses and go for a ride, when they come to a ranch house. A bunch of boisterous cowpunchers have finished their breakfast and ridden off to the range just before, leaving a note on the table for the ranch cook, advising him to make some pie. The girls discover the note and proceed to make pie. A lot of fun follows and in the end the girls get caught, each losing her heart to a cowboy. There is not a dull moment in the picture.

FARMING WITH DYNAMITE.

Prominent among the exhibits at the State Fairs this year has been a black tent in which the DuPont Powder Company conducted an exhibit which attracted much attention from the farmers. The principal feature of this exhibit was, of course, motion pictures, although there were also shattered tree stumps and boulders and the implements used in their demolition. The pictures, which were made for the powder company by the Industrial Moving Picture Co., of Chicago, are remarkable in many ways. First is the risk incurred in their production. It is known from long correspondence with the powder company, that the contract was turned down by several other moving picture concerns as soon as they knew what was expected of them. Yet, in spite of the imminent danger, the pictures are excellent and the views taken at close enough range to clearly show the work of the dynamite. "Farming with Dynamite," as the film is called, shows the effective use of this explosive in tree felling, stump and boulder blasting, tree planting, ditching and deep ploughing. It should prove an excellent advertisement for the DuPont Company and shows to what advantage the motion picture can be used in the industrial field. Holy writ tells of the swords of the ancients being turned into ploughshares in times of peace, but it remained for the most modern methods of education to show us the most modern weapon of destruction being diverted to the useful purpose of tilling the soil.

THE EXHIBITORS' BOOK OF REFERENCE.

Many exhibitors preserve and bind their copes of The Moving Picture World, because as a book of steady reference it is simply invaluable. There is nothing to take its place. If your files are incomplete, they are next to useless. As a rule just the copies that are needed are among the missing. If you have the bound volumes not a line can get away from you. Volume 9, July to September, 1911 (3 months), is now ready and will be sent on receipt of $1.50; postage 60 cents extra or express charges collect. An exhibitor without complete files of The Moving Picture World is like a sailor without a compass.

ANNOUNCEMENT No. 14

Talk No. 5 on Exclusive Service

STOP DAY DREAMING

FACE your facts squarely, and plan on the plain logic of those facts.

Mr. Exhibitor, if we asked you to state unreservedly your first need as to service, the first thought to flash into your mind, in our judgment, would be

A NON-CONFLICTING SHOW OF STANDARD QUALITY

We are so firmly convinced of the basic value of this principle that we hazard the opinion that not exceeding 1% of the exhibitors of this country would take issue with us on that point.

After the point of non conflicting service is settled, there remains but one thing in quality service which affects the interest of the exhibitor. Advanced Booking.

Continued success in the show business rests upon these elements. These elements are the facts we would have you face squarely. These are the elements upon which you must build if you are seeking lasting success in the business.

You could not go into any business without a fairly safe promise of success, but as a choice between two propositions, the one surrounded with conditions which insure every necessity in your enterprise, must command your interest and support. Exclusive Service as applied to the picture business, is exactly that. An Insurance. It is a guarantee against those thousand ills so familiar to every Exhibitor. It is the answer to the prayer uttered in that dream of the service ideal.

Exclusive Service means a non-conflicting show of quality.

Exclusive Service means Advance Booking.

With these elements guaranteed, you hold a franchise to success. The Compelling influence of these factors, the very essence of the National's proposition has caused it to become the centre of interest in the Picture World. That the National by virtue of the merits of the proposition has become the centre of interest in the Picture World no man can deny. To Excluive Service is it indebted for its position of prominence and leadership.

We are moving slowly forward, granting Exchange Franchises in territory as rapidly as the detail of our enterprise permits. With Exclusive Service we dare not put territory in the hands of any but those financially strong, for every National Exchange must carry the programme from the first day it begins business. Our obligation to Exhibitor makes this policy imperative. It is this feature which protects the Exhibitor. Correspondingly protection to Exhibitor means success for the Exchange. In the Film Business 'tis an axiom that it is no trick to get business, but a great one to hold it. National Exchanges procure and hold business because we endow them with all the elements of successful operation.

"MY BROTHER, AGOSTINO"—(Lubin).

Decidedly unique in the substance and structure of its plot is a photoplay soon to be released by the Lubin Company under the title of "My Brother, Agostino."

Its uniqueness lies particularly in the astonishing fact that one woman falls madly in love with another. The way in which this situation is brought about is entirely logical and has happened more than once in real life.

Tomasino was a young Italian. He was a waiter in a popular Italian restaurant and his earnings supported as happy a little home as can be imagined. Then Tomasino fell ill. For a while he struggled against ill health for the sake of his family, but he became worse and finally could struggle no longer. He had to take to his bed. Poor little Rosiana, his wife, didn't know what to do, but she wasn't a woman to give up. She had a stout little heart and an active mind and between them they solved the problem.

One day little Rosiana dressed herself in her husband's clothes, and, all trembling with excitement, called at his place of employment. "I am Agostino's brother," she said. "I will do his work until he is well again." "If you are half as good a waiter as Agostino," said the manager, "you will be satisfactory." So Rosiana did her husband's work and every week she brought home his pay, supporting the little home, buying medicine and instilling hope into the heart of Agostino.

Scene from "My Brother Agostino" (Lubin).

Enter now Rosa, a beautiful dancer. Rosa had left her husband, who was a lazy good-for-nothing fellow. She saw the supposed brother of Agostino. What a handsome man she thought him! Rosa was mistress of all the arts of coquetry. She became acquainted with the supposed young man. Before long she was violently in love. Of course, Rosiana could not tell her the truth. That would have meant losing her position and then what would become of her sick husband?

One day Rosa's husband saw her and the supposed young man. Jealousy, fierce, violent, raving jealousy up in his Sicilian bosom. He determined to kill them both. But there was no murder. A series of startling surprises occur from this point onward and the tangled situation is as cleverly unravelled as it was fabricated.

A really unusual story very cleverly and absorbingly presented.

"A GYPSY'S LOVE"—(Shamrock).

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

During my stay in St. Louis I visited the plant of the St. Louis Moving Picture Company, on 25th and Montgomery Streets, and spent a pleasant afternoon with G. P. Hamilton, general manager; O. E. Goebel, president, and Horace E. Vinton, editor of scenarios and dramatic producer. I learned from Mr. Hamilton that eleven negatives had been completed at that time, and that the first positive print made by the company was in readiness to be viewed in the projection room. This I found was a full reel with the title "A Gypsy's Love."

The story of this drama is away from the beaten track and it is connectedly told in the pictures. Mr. Hamilton informed me that he was indebted to Miss Dot Farley, the leading lady of his stock company, for the scenario and that attractive young lady is to be commended for having furnished an interesting film subject and for her artistic acting in the title role.

The settings, which are chiefly out of doors, have been admirably selected. One of the largest gypsy camps in the world is shown, advantage being taken of the presence of the great Zingari aggregation in the vicinity of St. Louis, at the time the picture was being made. Here one sees real gypsies, both men and women, with their peculiarities of aspect, dress and manner, and there are views of them in camp and on march.

The photography throughout is excellent, possessing the soft clearness that is pleasing to the eye, while the pictures are steady and show good definition. There are several nice touches of art in the filming of the story. One that will appeal to everyone by its pathos as seen at the close. The gypsy has returned the lost child to her parents. She has loved her as a mother would. Now she is alone and desolate. Heartbroken, she seeks solace from Nature. We catch a last glimpse of her in the fields, where the winds whisper consolation and the flowers smile in brotherhood, and we feel that the dark clouds are being lifted.

The story opens with a spirited encounter between Jack Langley and a burly ruffian who has insulted the gypsy girl, in which Jack's immaculate white flannel suit gets badly soiled with mud. The gypsy is charmed by Jack's handsome face and manner, while he pays the homage customarily extended a pretty girl. They meet several times and she falls in love. Jack acts honorably and makes no advances.

One day when the girl is passing a church a wedding party marches out to the carriages in waiting. She almost faints when she sees that Jack is the groom.

Years pass and Jack is the proud father of a little daughter. The latter wanders away one day, while the nurse sleeps, and is discovered by a band of gypsies. Our gypsy girl is one of them, and she takes care of the child, not knowing its relationship to Jack. Some years afterwards she reads a newspaper article and learns the truth. There is a mental struggle, during which love for the child prevents her from restoring it to the parents.

Fourteen years pass and the child has grown to maidenhood. The gypsy has cared for her education and upbringing with all the love and solicitude of a mother. Now conscience rules that the bereaved parents be presented to their long lost daughter. Restoration is made and the gypsy is blessed by the overjoyed father and mother.

SPECIAL CEMENT FOR CELLULOID FILMS.

The One Drop Oil Company's Bull Dog film cement is now made in two styles, adapted respectively for use with non-inflammable and celluloid films. The first, for the N-I film, is well and favorably known. The second, for celluloid film, is comparatively a new product, and has some distinctive features which commend it to the exchanges. It is a very satisfactory article on celluloid film, cementing it firmly, and without the warping which occurs when the old N-I cement is used. Its greatest distinctive feature is that it will not stick the film for which it is not intended, and if applied to a non-inflammable film does not hold at all. This affords a ready means of determining the character of a film, whether ordinary or non-inflammable, particularly useful in the inspection rooms of the exchanges. Of course, when non-inflammable films are encountered, the other cement must be used. Samples of both products will be furnished by the One Drop Oil Company to any interested exchange on request.

DE WITT C. WHEELER IN A KALEM PICTURE.

In reviewing the Kalem picture, "The Engineer's Daughter," in a recent issue, one of the interesting features of the picture was overlooked. We have been since informed that the character of the engineer, which was so well portrayed, was taken by DeWitt C. Wheeler, the well-known song-slide maker. Wheeler is to be congratulated, for his was the best bit of acting in the picture and we utterly failed to recognize him in his make-up. Mr. Dobson, one of the camera experts of the Kalem Company, claims the authorship of the scenario.

TAFT TOPICAL BY ESSANAY COMPANY.

Exposition Ground-Breaking at San Francisco Is Background of Excellent Views of Chief Executive.

What are probably among the best motion views of President Taft yet taken are promised in the Essanay Company's coming topical film, "President Taft at San Francisco, Breaking Ground for the Panama Pacific International Exposition." The film includes many other notables, among whom is Mme. Lillian Nordica, the world-famous singer. There are also excellent views of San Francisco, touching many points of interest and showing the remarkable progress in the rebuilding of the Western metropolis since the earthquake.

In the preliminary scenes of the Taft picture are shown views of the rebuilt Market Street, the ferry building at the foot of Market, views along the beach and at the Cliff House.

Lillian Nordica Singing National Anthem.

This old landmark, which was burned several years ago, has been rebuilt, the new building differing little from the outlines of the old. A complete panorama of the city of San Francisco is shown from Lone Mountain. Lone Mountain is marked by a gigantic cross which marks the spot where Gaspare de Portola discovered the site of the present San Francisco, in the year 1769. Interesting views in Chinatown are also shown.

The Taft part of the film first shows a review of the troops, followed by city, state and national officials escorting President Taft and his suite to the reviewing stand, where the president reviewed several regiments of troops. Views of the enormous crowd in the stadium and of Taft speaking, follow.

The ground-breaking ceremony will cause some mirth. It is easily cognizable that it has been some years since the president handled a shovel, but he gets away with it effectively, if not in very fine style. The spade is not an ordinary one. It is of solid silver and bears the legend:

Used by
WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT,
President of the United States,
Oct. 14th, 1911,
In Turning the First Spadeful of Earth for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition
To be Held in SAN FRANCISCO,
1915.

The Essanay photographers were courteously granted a most advantageous position in making this part of the ceremony and excellent close-up views of the president were obtained. Thinking, perhaps, of the millions who will see him in the motion pictures the president waves his hand several times to the camera and smiles broadly.

After raising the banner, the flag of the exposition, the president steps to the background and Madame Lillian Nordica, whose sweet voice has thrilled thousands, closed the ceremonies by singing the national anthem, "My Country, 'Tis of Thee."

The spadeful of earth turned by President Taft and also the spade will be preserved to posterity and will be on view at the exposition when it opens in 1915.

The film closes with an exquisite view, tinted in orange and red, of the setting sun through the Golden Gate.

The film runs 1,000 feet and will be released Thursday, Nov. 16th.

THE TISDALE ENTERPRISES.

The rapidly increasing demand for feature film productions throughout the country has given birth to the Tisdale Feature Attraction Syndicate, of Chicago, a Feature Attraction booking establishment, the business of which will be to provide various moving picture theaters throughout the country with an exclusive service of the best feature films. The Tisdale company is rapidly developing its circuit and has co-operated with several of the best manufacturers of feature films in preparation for the coming season.

F. M. Tisdale, manager of the Tisdale enterprises, and well known throughout the country as showman and theater advertising expert, is the president of the company. F. R. Martin, formerly assistant representative in Chicago of the Moving Picture World, has been appointed general manager. The company has established offices in suite 401-2-3, Chemical Building, 117 N. Dearborn Street, and already the business shows signs of great activity.

REWARD OF $25 OFFERED.

On the night of Monday, Oct. 30, a Powers No. 5 machine, serial number 5181, was stolen from the Mirror Theater, 1634 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y. The proprietors of the Mirror offer a reward of $25 for information that will lead to the arrest of the culprit and the return of the machine.

IT all depends on how much time you devote to booking your film. Even if you handle it carelessly and only use it as a "side line" it will pay you ten times as much in dividends as you can possibly derive from the ordinary investment. It is a sure winner. There isn't the least element of speculation about it. Exhibitors everywhere are eager to book the greatest moving picture ever made. Churches are anxious to have it. So are schools, colleges, clubs, societies, etc., etc. Letters are piling in upon us every day, asking, begging, demanding bookings on "The Crusaders or Jerusalem Delivered.

"CAIN AND ABEL" (Vitagraph).

The makers of this film undertook a great responsibility in endeavoring to portray such an extraordinary incident which marred the earliest days of the world's history.

The first tragedy which cursed humanity presents so many unknown phases of thought that it was incumbent upon the producers of this scene to draw upon a most wise and discriminating imagination. In doing this it is pleasant to record that violence has not outraged the subject, while differences of opinion may repeatedly arise, it must be remembered that where detail of description is lacking the most reasonable presumption of "what might have been" is allowable.

The consecutive order of the Biblical account has been preserved and a desire to faithfully follow the original is evident. The character of Abel is presented with suitable simplicity, but it is a question if that of Cain is not a little over-wrought; an excess of acting tends to exaggerate the manner of even the guilty one in a tragedy of this kind. The angel of the flaming sword is good thought, and no profane handling of so delicate a personality is shown. In its place as a Biblical picture Cain and and Abel is capable of easy descriptive accompaniment, as it runs parallel with the original account, and is not spoiled by superfluous addition or conspicuous shortcomings. The angels demand of Cain for the whereabouts of his brother, whose dead body throws off its stone covering when told "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." It is, perhaps, the best seen. It is wise that no attempt was made to interpret the "branding" of Cain; to finish the story with him facing the future under the curse is sufficient. The film possesses an even tenor and as such is acceptable, especially when the primitive conditions are taken into account.

BERNSTEIN RESIGNS FROM YANKEE.

Isadore Bernstein, the well-known and energetic young film personality, has severed his connection with the Yankee Film Company, after one year of affiliation with that concern. Friends of Mr. Bernstein are wondering what next he will do. Of course he will do something, because it is as impossible for him to remain idle as it is for a duck to keep his feet from getting wet. Mr. Bernstein, at his residence, 859 Huntspoint Avenue, New York City, stated to a World representative that before he does anything, he is going to take a well-earned rest. He will spend a week or two in the mountains, and while there will consider which is the better of two offers that have been made for his valuable services.

Mr. Bernstein is one of a number of pioneer moving picture men, who know the business from every angle. In the early days, he sat at the high table at 116 Nassau Street. Since that time he has been engaged in various branches of the trade. For a long time he was manager of the Improved Film Exchange and the Paramount Film Exchange, both of New York City. Later he went on the road, selling films to exchanges, and in that was singularly successful on account of his genial personality and wide acquaintance in the trade. A year ago he entered the Yankee Company as publicity man. At the time of tendering his resignation we find him in the higher position of General Manager. Isadore is a hustler, and we know that wherever he lands he will certainly make good.

"DESPERATE DESMOND ALMOST SUCCEEDS."

First Reel of a New Farce-Comedy Series by the Nestor Film Company.

"Desperate Desmond" not only almost, but entirely, fulfills the expectations of the promoters as a mirth producer. At a private exhibition this week, before a number of critics, exhibitors, and other film manufacturers, the first reel of the Nestor new farce comedy series produced frequent laughter and elicited favorable comment. The hairbreadth escapes of the famous Claude, the desperate schemes of the villain Desmond, and the helplessness of the fair Rosamond, were skillfully portrayed by characters which brought to life the famous cartoons so familiar in the newspapers. If the rest of the series equals the first, it is certain that the "Desperate Desmond" pictures will far outclass in popularity the "Mutt and Jeff" series by the same firm—and that will be going some.

David Horsley is now in California with 40 members of his stock company and operators. Permanent quarters have been leased on Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, in the suburbs of Los Angeles. It is expected that three separate companies will be engaged there during the winter and a permanent studio will be established.

Scenario writers are requested to note that manuscripts for comedy and high-class drama should be sent to the Nestor Film Company, Hollywood, Cal. Wild West subjects are not desired.

THE FILM ACTOR AND THE UNIFORM.

A humorous incident occurred at the making of "From the Bottom of Sea," by the Imp Company, at Newport, R. I., when one of the naval officers, coming along the embankment, met Mr. Le Saint made up for the part of a navy lieutenant. So much did the actor resemble a naval officer that the real naval officer saluted him as he passed by. Mr. Le Saint, not knowing what else to do for the moment, saluted in return. When the naval officer discovered his mistake, and became somewhat of a laughing stock, he bellowed with rage and determined that he would take the matter up with the government at Washington and make strenuous complaint. But brother officers finally managed to convince him that after all he was not saluting the man, but the uniform of the United States Navy, so he let it drop.

A LARGER RELIGIOUS TEST.

Probably the largest effort in the use of moving pictures in religion is that being put forth by the Bishop of the Falkland Islands. It is the Bishop's intention to visit all parts of Great Britain in the interest of his work with the object of raising $500,000; he believes the cinematograph can help him better than any other power. He will show chiefly scenic pictures, both of travel and in relation to his own immediate field of labor. This instance is probably unique in that the highest church dignitary has seen fit to endorse and utilize the picture as a proper auxiliary to religious effort. The good Bishop deserves success for his farsightedness in adopting and appropriating thus early in its history the cinematograph as an aid to Episcopal work.

BRADENBURGH UNDER ARREST.

Information is received from Philadelphia that G. W. Bradenburgh has been arrested upon the charge of violating the provisions of the United States Copyright Act covering motion pictures and that the hearing of the case against him took place on Friday, Nov. 3rd, before U. S. Commissioner W. W. Craig, in the Postoffice building, Philadelphia, Pa. Mr. Ingvald C. Oes, representative of the Great Northern Film Company, is one of the complaining witnesses in this case, together with P. P. Craft, of the Monopol Film Co., which has the American rights for the picture in question, "The Temptations of a Great City."

PICTURES IN TOPEKA CHURCH.

With the announcement that he does not believe in "letting the devil have too many of the good things," Rev. Robert Gordon, of the First Baptist Church, Topeka, Kas., announces that he will use pictures in his church Sunday evenings. The innovation was started off with the Vitagraph Company's Life of Moses as produced under the direction of Rev. Madison C. Peters.

CHAMPION BASE-BALL PLAYERS BECOME PICTURE PLAYERS.

Bender, Coombs, Morgan and Oldring Will Appear in a Thanhouser Comedy.

During the long, cold winter months, when baseball is in cold storage, there will be a small measure of sunshine doled out in the form of baseball film, and those baseball fans who are also moving picture fans will not have to starve for baseball fodder if they will attend closely to the Independent theaters and watch for the appearance of the Thanhouser baseball picture which is to be released on Friday, November 24th, and will, perhaps, be followed by others of a like nature.

The Thanhouser company, with their customary enterprise, have secured the services of four of the Philadelphia American League World Champion baseball stars: Bender, Coombs, Morgan and Oldring. The first three are of the Athletic pitching staff, and Oldring is the well-known outfielder. The picture has been named, "The Baseball Bug," a name which seemed to best suit the diamond stars who appeared in it, and which is well adapted for public advertising. It is a tale of a country clerk whose mind was more occupied with baseball than it was with his work at the store. He played a fair game and was considered the crack player of the village. He had big league longings and aspirations and was quite certain that the big league moguls had overlooked a world-beater in him.

The clerk's wife was very much annoyed by this because it wasted his time and he suffered from the craze financially besides. It happened that "Big Chief" Bender, the Indian pitcher of the Athletics, was a distant cousin of hers. To him she wrote, explaining the situation, and asking him if he could help to cure her husband of the baseball fever. The result was a fake letter, purporting to have been sent by "Connie" Mack, and recognizing the wonderful ability of the country ball-tosser, and saying that it was his intention to send Messrs. Bender, Coombs, Morgan and Oldring to the town to take a few lessons in baseball from the village wonder. The ball players arrived and it took only one lesson for them to give the ball playing clerk such a thorough showing up that they cured him of the fever for keeps.

"THE TEMPTATION OF RODNEY VANE" (Kalem).

The slender thread of a love story, spun out under the above named title of a Kalem picture done by one of the California companies, does not entirely overshadow a very interesting pictorial description of the grape growing industry of Southern California. The picture was taken upon a ranch where 1400 acres are devoted to vineyards which yield something like fourteen tons of fruit to the acre. The picking and grinding of the grapes is shown and government gaugers and inspectors are seen testing the juice to determine its character.

Scene from "The Temptation of Rodney Vane" (Kalem).

Great vats in which the grape juice is stored are seen in the picture. Rodney Vane's temptation consists in whether or not he shall drown his supposed rival for the affections of Millie Waine (Alice Joyce), in one of these vats into which he has accidentally fallen. But he thinks better of the plan and assists in pulling the rival out of danger. Later Vane discovers that he has been mistaken about the rival and makes up with his girl.

While the love story is not badly told and while Miss Joyce is just as sweetly simple and unaffected as ever, we could not suppress the wish that the Kalem Company had given us a more complete story of the California wine-growing industry.

A MOVING PICTURE BATTLE.

Many who will read this have witnessed a battle scene on a moving picture screen, but not many have seen the real action from which the picture has been made. Mr. Harry Raver, General Manager of the Eclair Film Co., extended an invitation to the Moving Picture World, to have a representative on hand for the big battle, which will be a feature scene in "Hands Across the Sea" the first Eclair release of November 21st. The invitation was accepted by the War correspondent of the "World," who, with Mr. Brulatour, Mr. Jourjon and Mr. Maresi, officials of the Eclair Co., took a position of vantage overlooking the battle field. In front Mr. James Slevin, with two cameramen, was directing and photographing the efforts of some three hundred men, of whom fifty were mounted, to reproduce that memorable battle at Trenton, on Christmas morning, in the year 1776.

If you can picture an equally divided army of three hundred men, dressed and armed as were the warriors of revolutionary days, some with the clothes they wore on their farms, while others wore uniforms of the then American army, and the balance dressed in the bright red coats and white hats such as were worn by the Hessians, all in apparently deadly combat amid the firing of guns and cannon, and the exploding of bombs, real infantry and cavalry charges, with men dropping off the backs of running horses, then you can get a slight idea of the magnitude of this production.

The selection of types and the costuming of the different characters, such as George Washington, General Cornwallis, Major Andre, Mollie Pitcher and "Farmer" Brown, whose team of oxen were pressed into service to haul the heavy cannon over the rough roads, is a masterful undertaking in itself.

After fighting had ceased, and General Cornwallis' sword was accepted by General Washington, in surrender, a priest (Will S. Rising), and two acolytes with the war time nurses (the Misses Dorothy Gibson and Helen Martin), ministered to the wounded and dying.

A later review of the finished picture, which is to be a two-reel release, will be forthcoming in the columns of this paper.

Every true American, or lover of history should insist on seeing, "Hands Across the Sea," to be released Tuesday, November 21st.

PRAISE FOR J. C. DEAGAN.

In conjunction with an article in the Moving Picture World of October 21, headed "A Little Talk on Vaudeville in Picture Theaters," mentioning Mr. J. C. Deagan, of Chicago, manufacturer of musical novelties especially adapted to picture show work, I can't help but feel it my duty as an extensive purchaser of Mr. Deagan's instruments and a user of the same, to boost for him and his wonderful knowledge of the manufacture of perfectly toned bells. While the article mentions only the organ chimes as an attraction, I have found for complete effects on pictures, the Parsifal bells, marimbaphone, xylophone, electric bells (the greatest drawing card of all) unequaled when it comes to putting on perfect effects. I am using all these instruments, as well as Mr. Deagan's cathedral chimes, in addition to violin, cello, traps and effects. I have not regretted the expenditure of several hundred dollars on Deagan instruments, and to any show that wishes to increase its receipts my advice will be fewer drum stunts and more attractive music, like only bells can give, and the crowds will come.

THE NEW KEYSTONE THEATER, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

What is considered as one of the finest pieces of architectural beauty in the theatrical circles, has been erected on Eleventh Street and Lehigh Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa. This is the New Keystone Theater, a high-class animated picture and vaudeville palace, which is under the proprietorship of the well-known Philadelphia picture house magnate, Mr. J. Fred. Zimmerman.

This new theater has been constructed of iron, steel and concrete, and is absolutely fireproof throughout. Its decorations are very gorgeous, the prevailing decorative colors being of light rose, ivory and gold. The proscenium arch, which is supported on massive marble columns, contains a gigantic oil painting, twenty feet deep by eighty feet wide, depicting music and drama. The stage is of vast dimensions and fitted with the very latest mechanical and electrical devices and is so thoroughly equipped that the greatest spectacular productions can be presented at any desired moment.

The designer and architect of this new structure are the same persons that planned the Keith theaters and Mr. Zimmerman's Liberty Theater.

The Iroquois Theatre Fire

at Chicago in 1903 will never be forgotten because of the terrible, needless, inexcusable sacrifice of 596 lives. Same old story of a panic-mad audience piling upon each other in the vain effort to escape through fire-doors that would not open. The Von Duprin Self-Releasing Fire Exit Latch opens fire-doors instantly at the slightest pressure on a solid bar stretching across the door, about waist high. This device has never failed—it cannot fail. Try it and see why. Try it now. A day's delay may cost hundreds of lives. The demonstration will cost you nothing. Catalog?

INQUIRIES

Correspondents are advised that no attention will be paid inquiries which do not give the name and address of the writers. For the purpose of reply, initials or noms de plume may be used.

Inquiry as to the private affairs of photoplayers will not be answered. This includes the question as to whether or not they are married.

No inquiries of a general nature will hereafter be answered by mail and only in special cases when a stamped self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Many correspondents ask the same question and we have initiated this department to save our own time and yet help out our readers when we can.

GENE B. LYNCH.—It is possible to stage such scenes as you suggest, but the studios prefer to make their own production of such stuff as a rule. (2) Keep away from color effects. (3) The demand varies with the studio. Comedy is always in demand. Send your address. You overlooked this.

J. M. M.—Miss Julia M. Taylor was the Thanhouser Juliet in "Romeo and Juliet."

G. H.—Mrs. Mary Maurice, of the Vitagraph, is no relation to Maurice Costello. (2) We do not know what Mr. Leonard is doing at present. (3) The picture showing the motion picture players all in one large dressing room was picture license. Large rooms are provided for the extra people but the acting members are assigned two to six to the room according to its size. Many of the rooms are very tastefully fitted up.

F. T. F.—We cannot, in this space, give full directions for writing photoplay scenarios, but they should be short and concise, giving only the leading action. Write to the Lubin, Vitagraph or Essanay companies for their instruction sheets. They will be sent free if you enclose an envelope stamped and addressed to yourself. If you want more complete information, obtain the series of eight articles on "The Technique of the Photoplay," which ran in The Moving Picture World from July 22 to September 9th, inclusive. They will presently be republished in book form. Better have the stories typewritten, as your handwriting is not sufficiently legible.

MRS. J. T.—We note your lengthy communication. We quite agree with you as to Miss Lawrence's cleverness, but surely you will allow that other players are also clever.

C. H.—We're glad to know that you read this paper with such interest, but how is it that you've missed the repeated explanation of this very point? Here's the way it happened: Mr. Johnson was originally with the Biograph, subsequently he went to the Reliance and from there to the Lubin studio. He is at present with the Lubin company, and with no apparent intention of leaving, but that does not prevent the Reliance company from having negatives made while he was with them, and releasing prints a year after his connection with the company ceased. It is quite possible to see him under all three trade-marks, though the old Biographs are wearing out.

ENTHUSIASTIC INDEPENDENT GIRL.—The Bison has not replied to your question, but the Reliance company advises us that Walter Miller occasionally played leads opposite to Miss Leonard. He is not now with the company and there is no advice as to his engagement elsewhere. When Bison wakes up we'll answer about the little Indian girl.

E. L. C.—The Kalem company advises us that Miss Ruth Roland is still posing with their Los Angeles company.

E. M. B.—Miss Hazel Neason played the Princess in the I. M. P. "The Garden of Fate." She is now a member of the Vitagraph forces.

P. G. E.—Hobart Bosworth had the title role in the Selig "John Oakhurst, Gambler."

R. A. S.—We have no recent information as to Master Pickford, but presume that he will play either with the Majestic or the Vitagraph, since Miss Mary Pickford is with the Majestic and her sister, Lottie, is with the Vitagraph. (2) Jack Standing played the lead in Lubin's "The Easterner's Sacrifice." (3) Miss Eleanor Caines posed for a number of the early Lubin Westerns. She has gone back to the dramatic stage, according to the most recent information at hand. (4) Tom J. Carrigan was Henriette's lover in Selig's "The Two Orphans." (5) He has left.

S. R. K.—Miss Flora Foster was the boy David in the first reel of the Thanhouser David Copperfield series. (2) Francis Busnman and Dorothy Phillips. (3) We do not know. Watch the news columns. (4) We believe not. (5) Answers about Biograph players are barred.

M. T. C.—Mrs. Clarke of the Colleen Bawn cast, is the mother of Jack J. Clarke. (2) Leslie Bassett has been connected with the Reliance company, but his present whereabouts are not known.

H. W. R.—(1) Miss Kathryn Williams played the part. (4) The company headquarters is in Los Angeles, where there is a permanent studio, but with that point as a base they work the entire Western country as the scripts in hand may require. Your other questions have been referred. Watch this column.

B. C.—It is useless to copyright a scenario, although it can be done by following the instructions laid down in these columns by George Rockhill Craw. A more effective redress lies in common law if you have grounds for any action at all.

DEN.—Owen Martin was the Parson in "The Parson and the Bully," made by Nestor. (2) Mabel Normand played Picciola in the Vitagraph picture of that title.

S. C. D.—Frank Crane is no longer with the Thanhouser company, but with the Lubin forces.

N. P. E.—The Edison company maintains no permanent Western company. All companies are operated from the home studio in Bedford Park, New York City, but field companies are sent out from there covering different parts of the country. Scripts should be addressed 2826 Decatur Avenue, New York City, and not to the Orange offices.

R. E. A.—Looks to us as though you had the Vitagraph Capt. Barnacle confounded. Van Dyke Brooke is the former and William Mr. Deagan's fe in the same company's "Forgotten." (3) The question is traps and effe several hundr leaf effect in the Edison "Leaves of a Romance" was any show tha by inserting a cutout between lens and film, while the taken or by using the same in the printing machine. will be fewer d or studio experience is required of all picture players only bells can grannot state experience it is useless to waste your time. rs are available for the camera stage. There is no of.

nce Lawrence and Arthur Johnson had the leads in Ward."

W. H. K.—Scenarios intended for the Pathe company should be addressed to the studio at 1 Congress Street, Jersey City Heights, N. J., and not to the main office.

D. S. T.—May Hotley was the Mother and Elsie Glynn the girl in Lubin's "A Question of Modesty." (2) See reply to R. A. S.

NOVICE.—George Monroe has not played in pictures. John Bunny plays the parts in the Vitagraph productions that you ascribe to him. (2) We cannot place the player through your meagre description. The company has four leading men.

V. P. S.—When films are sent to countries not using our language, the titles and letters are translated into the tongue of the country to which they are sent. Some companies regularly furnish leaders and letters in French, German, Italian, Spanish and Russian. This is a simple matter since the film is not continuous as you seem to think, but made up of the various scenes and inserts cemented together. For foreign use it is easy to substitute the proper leader for the strip in English. (2) Most of the Pathe films now seen are made in America, either in Jersey City or California. All prints are made in the laboratories in Bound Brook, N. J., the French subjects being sent over in negative. (3) Gaumont and Urban-Eclipse films are printed abroad and sent over here complete. (4) The Pathe films are not colored by hand, but by means of stencils. The process is too elaborate to be described in detail here.

T. P. O.—Warren Kerrigan has the lead in the American's "The Ranchman's Nerve." (2) Robert Gaylord was the blacksmith in Vitagraph's "A Republican Marriage." (3) We know more pleasant ways of getting into trouble than asking a lady her age. You do it. (4) A letter to the studio will reach the player.

F. L. A.—You can get film service from $50 a week up. The rental of a house depends upon its size and location. The higher rent may often be an economy. There are a number of patent screens, but we cannot institute comparisons. The same applies to machines. Why not hunt up some exhibitor in your territory—but not too near your planned location—and have a chat with him.

L. B. R.—Jack Standing had the lead in the Lubin "Rescued in Time." (2) George Reehm was the bar-keeper in "The Human Torpedo." The pugilist who looked the part in the same reel has a mighty good ring record. (3) We do not know how many reels will constitute the Edison historical series. The last was Number 6.

A NEW EXCHANGE FOR CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Messrs. Mandelbaum and Newman, of the newly incorporated Feature and Educational Film Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, are in New York for a two weeks' stay, looking over the ground for feature productions.

Mr. E. Mandelbaum, president of the new company, closed a deal with the Eclair Company, to take over the American rights of "Zigomar," a French romance in three reels, which will materially strengthen the stock of Feature subjects already purchased by the Feature and Educational Film Company.

Mr. Mandelbaum was the first exchange man to put in his order for two prints (4 reels) of Eclair's first release, "Hands Across the Sea."

The Screen Problem

Every man who owns a moving picture theater has a Screen Problem which he is anxious to solve. WE HAVE SOLVED THE PROBLEM. The Silver Screen Company has hundreds of screens in use under every conceivable condition, and there is not a single owner to whom we could not refer a prospective buyer. Not one has been disappointed, but on the contrary each has found that our screen has exceeded his expectations.

THE SOLUTION

The Silver Screen - - - $35.00 and up
The Reflex Screen - - - 18,00 and up
The Royal Screen - - - 15.00 and up

Solve your screen problem, because they are founded on the same scientific principles as the projecting machine itself. The difference in price is determined by the grade and cost of material used. They are all producers of the brightest, clearest, and most natural of pictures with the maximum of depth and perspective. Rain and defects in the films are reduced by the brightness of the pictures. They absorb those glaring rays of light which are obnoxious to the eye and reflect rays that please. They permit of lighted theaters. The effect on the eye is the same in all parts of the theater.

Let our salesman demonstrate the superiority of our Screen, and prove to you that we have solved your Screen Problem.

NOT ALL "YELLOW."

In striking contrast to the hysterical, unfounded and now repudiated attack upon the motion picture theaters of Minneapolis by the Minneapolis Tribune, the Moving Picture World is pleased to give space to the following editorial printer in the Ohio State Journal, of Columbus, Ohio:

"Going to Extremes.

"How easy it is for reformers to go to extremes, and how unfortunate is the effect of that extravagance. Picture shows, for instance, we have recently heard denounced without reserve. The whole art of cinematograph production is hurled to perdition because some evil has been promoted by it. By the same process of reasoning, one might denounce the telephone, the automobile, the aeroplane, and all other inventions and devices for human comfort and efficiency. That which helps the good may also help the evil; use may become abuse. It would be the utmost folly to renounce that which is in itself good because it is put to evil uses. The only wisdom is in the rescue of good things from misuse.

"Indiscriminate denunciation of moving pictures is so narrow as to hurt the cause which it is meant to help. Thousands of people who have found good in the films will be resentful and even critical of the general cause of which the denunciation is a part. They will refuse to draw the line against moving pictures as such because a few of them have been of doubtful or even harmful influence for they know that reform is possible. We believe it was Mr. Edison who said that in the next ten years moving pictures would be a valuable adjunct of every schoolroom, and even now they have found their way occasionally into the churches.

"The need is for reformers who are able to draw the line right—with all the good on one side and all the bad on the other, and with none of the good thrown away because it has sometimes been used for evil purposes or to evil effect."

RICHARD R. NEHLS.

Richard R. Nehls, long and favorably known to the motion picture industry, has joined the forces of the American Film Manufacturing Company. He takes the place made vacant by the resignation of A. M. Kennedy.

Mr. Nehls has enjoyed a large and varied experience in the motion picture trade. His first acquaintance with motion pictures dates back some twelve years when the business was still in its infancy. At that time he had charge of the motion picture mail order business of Montgomery, Ward & Co. More recently Mr. Nehls was in the importing department of a large Chicago film company, where his duties as film buyer afforded an extraordinary opportunity to acquire knowledge of the trade.

He is a native Chicagoan, having been born in that city in 1875, and was given every opportunity in the way of an education, receiving his early training from private instructors and afterward spending three years in Concordia College, Milwaukee, Wis. In addition he possesses an excellent training in business management and can qualify as electrical engineer. He was for some years the executive head of a prosperous business of his own.

Friends of Mr. Nehls will be glad to hear of his new connection. His wide knowledge of the business, his large circle of friends, coupled with his natural aggressiveness and keen business insight, promise more and better things for the American.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS.

Contributors to the Moving Picture World are requested to be brief and to the point. An ordinary article or communication should not exceed 500 words. It is suggested that all contributors use the typewriter or take pains to write legibly. We will not be responsible for manuscripts, photographs, etc., and to make sure of their return sufficient postage must be enclosed. We welcome suitable contributions at all times, but ask you not to write unless you have something to say.—Editors, Moving Picture World.

Articles of incorporation of the Princess Theater Circuit Co., of St. Cloud, Minn., capitalized at $25,000, have been filed. This company will operate a circuit of picture houses in Minnesota towns and others in Northwestern cities. The officers of the new company are F. E. Nemic, president; F. A. Nemic, vice-president, and L. P. Haarman, secretary and treasurer.

John C. Hemment, the well known photographer, has returned from Africa where he went with Mr. Paul Rainey on a big game hunting expedition. Mr. Hemment speaks of several hairbreadth escapes and tells of taking a head-on charge of an enraged lion, which he thinks will be one of the most thrilling and dangerous pieces of camera work ever done.

Preparations are under way for organizing the Motion Historic Records Association, which is to have as its object the obtaining and preservation of photographs, moving picture films and phonograph records of anything now in being that is likely to be of historic interest to coming generations. It is the hope of the founders that in time fireproof buildings will be provided for proper storage by the various states and the federal government. For the present arrangements have been made for the housing of records in the New York Public Library.

Letters to the Editor.

THE FLAG QUESTION

Ottawa, Oct 26, 1911.

To the Editor of Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir:—It was with great pleasure that I read "Facts and Comments," Vol. 10, No. 4 of the Moving Picture World.

Never has anything hit me so forcibly, and I believe I am speaking for ninety per cent of Canadian exhibitors, as the [illegible] flag in the Canadian theaters. I am glad to see that some paper is entirely American in its publication that can have courage of its convictions.

Canada is not the only country that the moving picture has grown, and it will not be many years before the Canadian market for moving pictures will be just as large as any other country in the world. The agitation against the American flag being used on the Canadian theaters has been going on for some time, and the manufacturers, not seeing that it would harm, increased their output of American flag pictures. We people in Canada do not expect to see episodes of the Civil War with the British flag predominating. Such a picture would not only be that ridiculous, but we certainly do not like to see the flag that we have fought for, the flag that we take off our hats to and cheer, [illegible] trampled down and the Stars and Stripes run up, making a hero of the American soldier and a blackguard of the British. As I say, the people of Canada do object to having these pictures shown, especially in Canadian theaters.

The manufacturer uses the flag every chance he gets. One picture, without mentioning the make, was where two children were wrecked on a tropical island, which they afterward found was inhabited by savages, who numbered up into the hundred. The bottle with [illegible] was picked up by an American sailor, and, of course, a rescuing party starts out, which consists, if I remember rightly, of an officer and six men. The ridiculous part of the picture was that five of the men carried guns to fight the savages, and the other man carried a great big flag. Whatever they could do against the savages with the flag was more than I was able to fathom. The picture was a fine picture, but that one little spot spoiled it for the Canadian market.

I do not wish to take up any more of your valuable time, only to thank you for the manner in which you have taken up the matter, and I am sure that we Canadian exhibitors are just as anxious to uplift the moving picture business as are our American brothers. In order to do this we will have to have pictures that our people do not condemn. It has become so bad now in Ontario that every picture that has the American flag is turned down. The instance above that I wrote about would mean a good picture lost on account of a little judgment not being used.

Business in my town is exceptionally good, getting better prices and bigger crowds than any season before. The people are clamoring for the good stuff, like "Enoch Arden," "David Copperfield," "Two Orphans," etc.

Throughout your columns we read about different cities and what they are doing, but never much about the country to the North of you so I take this opportunity of inviting your representative to visit the capital, where, I think, I will be able to show him some of the nicest little picture houses and the best projection that he would care to look at. Our motto up here is not "how much" but "how good."

Wishing you and the World success believe me, Yours very truly

KEN E. FINLAY.

TOUCHING ON 3-REEL SPECIALS.

Brooklyn, Oct 24, 1911

Editor the Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir:—Every word of your article "Do Longer Films Make Better Shows?" has been relished by me as a most timely and important contribution to the industry we are interested in.

To be alert to the demands of the public, to praise worthy efforts in our line, and to condemn the bad, is evidently your avowed desire and aim, thus contributing immensely toward the value of the Moving Picture World as most important factor to ALL concerned in the passage of the film.

As to the character of these subjects, [illegible] the story, the acting and scenery, must be of a high order. One can readily foresee disaster should an attempt be made to deal as lightly with the 3-reel subject as do some the one-subject reel, and the General Film Co. would act wisely to endeavor to eliminate the junk, for the reason that it cannot be reckoned a valuable asset to the stock of the exchange, for this stock does not even represent present demands which has the strength of the future and has a busines term, it's dead stock.

Yes, are, I presume, pleased to encourage the release of [illegible] subjects on the same date. As to this, I must again consider the woes of the exchange man who is forced to purchase 2 extra reels in the week besides the regular releases, and, in order to overcome this hardship, must make an extra charge for same, and so offer the feature to anyone on his books. Now, "there's the rub." If I am a [illegible] knowing the full value of the coming feature, and spending time and money in proper advertising, etc., the slow-by exhibitor [illegible] referring to any one in particular, [illegible] a day ahead. I would, therefore, [illegible] engagements to all concerned of the producer should not desist on releasing the 3 reels in one day. Neither the exchange nor the exhibitor would then be hindered. The reels would then be distributed according to the kind of service one has contracted for. For instance, an exhibitor using a 10,-15,-25 day service, would be entitled to the feature at about 15 days after release, while my neighbor, on the other hand, using cheaper service, would not be entitled to same until some later date, hence would then be more value to the higher priced service. I am, yours respectfully,

I. GERMAIN.

A FEW FACTS ABOUT "TWO-IN-ONE" FILM CEMENT

A CEMENT for inflammable or non-inflammable film. While it may be true it does not set quite so quickly as some would like, it is a fact that it won't pull apart in a few days as is the case with some of the cement that is being used. On a straight pull it will not part without tearing the film, whether the patch is a few days, a few weeks or a few months old. Patches made over a year ago have been tested and are impossible to pull apart. It does not buckle or bow the patch, therefore films joined with "2-in-1" film cement passes through the projecting machine without tearing, thus prolonging the life of the films. Exchanges using it constantly, find the work of their inspection departments lightened and their films coming back to them in better shape. Operators running films patched with "2-in-1" film cement are not annoyed by their films pulling apart while running. Costs no more than any other cement, except to make it.

Special Releases of Feature Films

Do your pictures lack finish? Are they wanting in the details? Would you like to get the very finest results in the shortest space of time? To save money and sell more copies? Mr. S. M. Jacobi, an artist and expert, with a long experience in London, Paris and New York as theatrical scenic artist, costume designer, illustrator and press photographer, can help you to realize your ambition to make genuine films d'art. He will advise with your working staff, supply models of studio scenes or costumes, furnish the actual furniture and properties of the right photographic value and correct as to period, place them in proper position on the stage, suggest new lighting effects, and attend to the artistic composition of the picture, generally, both in and outdoors. This becomes particularly valuable for historical or classy plays. For terms, by the film or reel only, address,

LICENSED Film Stories

GAUMONT.

JIMMIE AND HIS COUNTRY UNCLE (Nov. 14).—The uncle, during a visit at Jimmie's home, meets and falls deeply in love with a handsome widow, who is also a guest of Jimmie's parents.

The youngster perceives his uncle's infatuation and realizes that his relative is too rustic in appearance to attract the discerning lady.

Jimmie now takes his uncle into training, and after teaching him how to make himself look attractive, gives him lessons in the best manner of winning a wife.

Needless to say, his methods prove successful when the uncle, prompted by Jimmie, finally proposes to the widow.

THE OUTSKIRTS OF PARIS or A TRIP ON THE MARNE FROM CRETEIL TO SAINT MAUR (Nov. 14).—A delightful series of views taken on the river Marne, between Creteil and Saint Maur, on the outskirts of Paris.

This remarkably picturesque stream is strongly interesting, and the exquisite views, rendered as they are in natural colors, make this one of the most charming scenic films we have yet issued.

THE RECKONING (Nov. 18).—Fortune does not favor old William at cards, and he loses heavily. Unable to pay his debt otherwise, he gives his daughter in marriage to his creditor and she, although loving another, resign herself to her fate.

One day she happens to meet her former admirer who, unconscious of the fact that he is being watched, declares his love once more.

Later the successful suitor hires his unsuspecting rival to go on a long cruise. While out alone upon the sea, they have a final reckoning.

ECLIPSE.

THE HINDU JEWEL MYSTERY (Nov. 15).—The sacred jewel is stolen from the forehead of a Hindu idol by Major Herncastle, a British soldier—is traced to England by the priests, who vow to recover it—comes into the hands of Rachel, the Major's niece, but almost immediately disappears mysteriously—is found only after a long search, in which the priests and able detectives unite.

After having caused many thrilling episodes, it is finally recovered and turned over to the Hindus.

SELIG.

IN THE DAYS OF GOLD (Nov. 13).—The Lopez family is attacked by Indians and are all killed, excepting Juanita and her mother. Juanita hears the shooting, sees the Indians attack her home, and carry off her mother. She decides she would be safer dressed as a boy, so she dons her brother's clothes, and cuts her hair off. Then tries to reach shelter. Dick Harding, a Western cowboy, comes suddenly upon Juanita. She tries to explain to him, but he does not understand Spanish, so she finally makes herself understood by gesticulations. He places her behind him on his horse, and gallops off just as the Indians dash up. After a hard ride, they outdistance the red men and reach the camp. The sheriff, Dick and cowboys pursue the Indians, and come upon them as they are in the act of burning Mother Lopez at the stake. A short fight and the Indians are defeated, but too late, as the mother is already dead. Harding then takes Juanita to his cabin, thinking she is a boy. They become very much attached to each other. Dick turns miner, and one day makes a lucky strike. Later on he learns that Juanita is a girl and realizing that he loves her, induces her to marry him.

THE BOOTLEGGER (Nov. 14).—The government has long had very stringent laws against the selling of spiritous liquors to the Indians. This traffic is known as "bootlegging."

When Sergt. Hunt, of the 8th Cavalry, stationed at old Fort Whipple, in southern Arizona, found a drunken Apache, with a tell-tale flask, he reported at once to Col. Moberlyn, who ordered Capt. Frazier with a detachment, to find the bootlegging miscreant. The captain galloped away to the nearest ranch house, where lived Jim Fancher, his wife, and daughter, and Romero, a half-breed foreman, whom the captain suspected. The troopers took up quarters in the barn on the hay. Romero saw he was suspected. He escaped, mounted his horse, met the Apache band, and made a night attack on the ranch, murdering the troopers as they slept and firing the house, to which the sergeant had escaped.

Jim bethought him of an old subterranean passage, dug to the river bank and by this means made their way to the fort. Romero rode to the colonel to exculpate himself, and tell how he had fought with the whites. When the captain arrived, and confronted him, the bootlegger made a dash for his horse. He was followed by the captain, who held the bridle until assistance came, and the bootlegger was given very short shrift for his crime.

THE NEW SUPERINTENDENT (Nov. 16).—James Morley, superintendent of the Crown Hill oil refinery, is unable to cope with the rough element in the works. Jack Hartway asks for a position, and Mr. Hastings discharges Morley. Hartway is duly installed as the new superintendent, and his first act is to put up a sign that Rooney, the bully, has formerly resented. Rooney tears the sign down, goes to the office to confront Hartway, is knocked down, and is made to nail the sign up again. But Rooney swears revenge, and sends his tool, Old Grogan, to Hartway with a note, telling him to leave town in twenty-four hours. Hartway only laughs at the implied threat, and answers that they can go "as far as they like." They plan to have Old Grogan fire the works.

Hartway has met Hasting's daughter and fallen in love with her. He is spending the evening with her, when he hears that the plant is on fire. Hartway rushes away. He finds Rooney in a saloon, acuses him of the crime, and Rooney tries to escape, but is overtaken by Hartway and given a thrashing. Jack is about to be knocked down by two of Rooney's gang, when Mabel, who has seen the fight, shoots one of them. They get away, but Rooney is arrested and sentenced to prison.

A SPANISH WOOING (Nov. 17).—Don Rafael de Ortega first sees Josefa de Landay Escandon while that young lady is walking in the park with her duenna. One look into her eyes, and he is resolved to marry her, despite the feud of long standing between their families. The duenna meets a friend, and Don Rafael steals the moment to speak to Josefa.

Don Rafael pours out his love in music and song. Josefa throws him a rose. Don Rafael finally resolves to dare all, confronts Don Patricio in his study, with a request for Josefa's hand. Don Patricio rages and storms, and with the arrival of Don Jose, whom Don Patricio has chosen for Josefa, is ordered from the house.

In honor of the engagement of Josefa and Don Jose, Don Patricio gives a masked ball. Don Rafael has crept in masked as a gypsy and makes himself known to Josefa, and she promises to meet him at dawn and leave with him.

So after the ball, Josefa very cautiously sallies forth to meet her lover. Her duenna has missed her and speedily gives the alarm, and Don Patricio, Don Jose and several other gentlemen, start in pursuit.

The two lovers succeed in reaching the church, where a good Padre performs the marriage. And so Don Patricio loses a daughter and Don Jose a bride.

ESSANAY.

HUBBY'S SCHEME (Nov. 14).—The boys want Simp to take a trip with them, but he fears his wife's objections. These, however, are circumvented, when a doctor, who is to be one of the party, pronounces Simp an invalid and argues that he must have a change of climate. Arrived at the resort, Simp has a great time until the clerk gets the letters mixed. Wifey soon scents something wrong, and hurrying to the resort, finds her lesser half having a rollicking good time, when he has written her he has been in bed nearly all the time.

PRESIDENT TAFT AT SAN FRANCISCO (Nov. 16).—The genial Taft smile appears abundantly in this excellent topical picture. The occasion is the ground-breaking for the Panama Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco in 1915, celebrating the opening to commerce of the Panama canal. The picture includes, besides close up views of Taft turning the first shovel of dirt, excellent views of San Francisco, after the earthquake and at the present time, and of state and national notables of importance. Madam Lillian Nordica closes the ceremonies by singing the national anthem.

THE POINT OF VIEW (Nov. 17).—This photoplay shows how happiness and joy are reflected and handed from one to another, beginning with the boss of a big business to the small clerk, the small clerk's wife, the small clerk's wife's cook, and even to the small clerk's wife's cook's beau, Big Bill, the cop. It likewise shows up the other side of life, that of gloom.

EXCESS BAGGAGE (Nov. 17).—Our hero in this photoplay has a mother-in-law. When he orders her out of the house and she refuses to go, he smashes her trunk. After this he goes out and visits a place where they dispense free lunch. He succeeds in drowning his troubles but becoming very sleepy, he falls into a trunk in front of a furniture store and goes to sleep. The trunk is purchased by his wife and sent to her mother's home. What happens to our hero is a caution.

THE CATTLE RUSTLER'S FATHER (Nov. 18).—Jim Pritchard, the worthless son of a Western ranchman, is appealed to by his father to mend his ways. One night Jim returns from the gambling hall in desperate straits. Attempting to steal money from his father's strong box, he is caught by the old man, who again begs him to reform. In spite of all this, Jim plans another crooked enterprise—that of cattle stealing. However, he fails and is tracked to his father's ranch. The outraged old gentleman, having given up all hope of making a man of the worthless moral wreck, turns him over to the sheriff and his posse. Not until then, however, does the boy realize how much the old man has suffered, when bitterly repentant he falls on his knees and begs his father's pardon. Then, with a lighter heart, he turns to pay the penalty of his crimes.

LUBIN.

HIS CHORUS GIRL WIFE (Nov. 13).—Oliver Brompton was the son of a millionaire. At a late supper one evening, Oliver fell deeply in love with Sybil Sanford, a modest and retiring chorus girl. He proposed to her and they were married. When Oliver took his bride home, his father and mother refused to receive her.

Cast off by his wealthy father, the young couple secured rooms and went to housekeeping. Oliver was unable to get work. It happened one day when they were almost at the lowest ebb of their fortunes, that Oliver's father called. Sybil was alone. Oliver's father came right to business. He offered her a large sum of money if she would renounce his son. She promptly refused and Mr. Brompton went home and told his wife what had happened. This raised Sybil in their estimation and Mrs. Brompton asked to be taken to see her.

She noted the cleanliness of the humble apartment and their scant but appetizing meal. The junior Bromptons asked the senior Bromptons to join them, which they did and the family was once more united.

SOME MOTHER-IN-LAW (Nov. 15.)—Willis Daley loved Elizabeth Diamond. Often he told her he would go through fire and water for her sake, or brave death in its most terrifying forms, but he could not stand her mother.

Mrs. Diamond advised Elizabeth to marry him. Mrs. Diamond also sent her portrait to the happy pair. Oh, that picture!

Young Diamond fell for the charms of a lady that he met one day and took her to lunch. She was really charming. Later he discovered that the lovely lady was none other than his dreaded mother-in-law, and that the picture was a joke.

A NEWSBOY'S LUCK (Nov. 16).—Turned out of his home by his drunken father, Joe found shelter in a newsboy's home. One day while selling papers on the street, he saw a moving picture company rehearsing a scene that required a newsboy. Joe was drafted for the job and did his part with such ability that the director asked him to call at the studio.

On Joe's way home he was run over by an automobile and taken to the hospital. It took him six months to recover. During that time his father had died and his mother had secured a position as governess in a wealthy family.

Unable to find his mother at his old home, Joe remembered the kind director and went to the studio, where he was welcomed and given a position.

One day the company secured permission to take pictures on the grounds of a beautiful mansion.

"When First We Met"

AND

"The Tell-Tale Parasol"

One is, strange to say, a new type of moving picture, with a sentimental touch that keeps you gulping while you tell yourself how clever the arrangement is.

The second is a comedy wherein an open parasol opens the fun and a closed parasol closes it. Queer, eh? Yes, and funny, too.

As usual, Saturday is your Powers' Feature Day, and on the Saturday of the same week, the 18th of November, we take care of you with

While they were taking a scene an elderly lady rushed up and clasped Joe in her arms. It was his mother. Thus happily reunited they set up their little home.

A ROMANCE OF THE 60'S (Nov. 18).—Walter Rodgers, a Northerner, was engaged to marry Cora Fletcher, daughter of a Southern colonel. A lawn fete was in full swing at her home when word came of the firing on Fort Sumpter. An exceedingly dramatic scene followed in which the Colonel swore eternal allegiance to the Southern cause, followed enthusiastically by all the guests, with the single exception of Walter, who declared for the North though it cost him his sweetheart. He bade Cora an affectionate farewell and went to serve his country.

Two years later Walter's troop of cavalry took up its quarters at the Fletcher home in spite of the protests of Walter, who tried to have the men quartered somewhere else.

While they were there the Colonel became very offensive in his attentions to the beautiful Cora. Walter was unable to stand it any longer and knocked his captain down, a most serious offense. He was promptly arrested, court-martialed and sentenced to death.

Seeing her lover about to be snatched away from her forever, Cora determined to save him. After a wild night ride, she reached a place where President Lincoln was. Her plea with that man of tenderness and mercy was successful. She secured the pardon and brought it back just in time to save Walter's life.

LUDWIG FROM GERMANY (Nov. 14).—Ludwig Heinz, a young German, bids his father, a musician, and Theresa, his sweetheart, a fond farewell before he departs for America, where he makes a fortune. Owing to his inability to speak English he becomes the target for practical jokers, who play all kinds of tricks on him. In the midst of one of these escapades he meets a fellow countryman, Herman Schmidt, the butcher, who gives him employment in the meat market. All is joy with him until one of the letters he has written to Theresa comes back to him marked, "whereabouts unknown." He is grief-stricken.

Mr. Heinz and Theresa, shortly after Ludwig's departure, left Germany to go in search of him. After a year of hard work Ludwig becomes owner of the meat market. When he is in a despondent mood he plays on his clarionet, the screeching noise of which causes two butcher boys to insert an advertisement in the daily papers to the effect that musical instruments are wanted at the meat market. The result is that Ludwig is overrun with all kinds of people willing to sell their instruments, among whom are Theresa and his father, who are now poverty-stricken. Thus, they are re-united.

THE LIVING PEACH (Nov. 15).—Fresh air being ordered by the family physician, a young man takes his infirm father to the country, where he engages a furnished cottage next door to Judge Porter, who is the owner. It so happens that the young man and the judge's beautiful daughter were schoolmates and their renewed friendship soon developes into love, much to the judge's displeasure. The courtship continues nevertheless, and the lovers are frequently seen under a large peach tree, which grows between the two houses. As the judge prizes the tree very highly, his anger is thoroughly aroused when he catches the young man plucking the fruit and a warm dispute follows. Later, however, the judge relents and writes a note of apology, regretting his outburst of anger, and also stating that the young man is welcome to anything that falls on his side of the fence. These last words are the means of bringing the lovers together, for when the young lady falls on the other side of the fence in an attempt to pluck some peaches, the young man promptly picks her up, claiming her as his own, and proving his claim by the judge's own handwriting. The judge sees the point and gives them his blessing.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION (Silver Bay, Lake George, N. Y., August 1911—Nov. 15).—The demand for trained leaders in the Young Men's Christian Associations has been so great that the Training Schools in Chicago and Springfield have been unable to supply the demand, and Summer Schools have been established in various parts of the country. The one at Silver Bay on Lake George, N. Y., is the subject of this sketch, and this represents a typical day at the Summer School. The first scene shows the men going to breakfast, a scene from the kitchen, then their leaving the chapel exercises, then clases in gymnastics, an exhibition of life-saving by Mr. George H. Corsan, then the sports in the afternoon and the parade of the men.

During the month of August five hundred and ninety-six different men spent from two to four weeks at Silver Bay, equipping themselves for positions as employed officers.

The best instructors are secured to teach methods, principles and technical work. After three years in this Summer School those who are graduated receive diplomas.

The Young Men's Christian Associations have more than five hundred thousand members, seven hundred and thirteen buildings on the North American continent, three thousand employed officers, so that these Summer Schools are absolutely necesary.

THE STORY OF THE INDIAN LEDGE (Nov. 18).—We are first made acquainted with an Indian guide, who is showing some travelers the sights of the river. Arriving opposite an Indian ledge, he tells them a story. It concerns itself with a young brave who loves little White Arrow, the big chief's daughter. We see the progress of their love, midst the wild beauties of the forest and finally their attempt to elope, in which they are foiled by the big chief. The question of punishment for the young brave is answered by a plan of the tribal medicine man. He has a potion of magic quality and proposes to give it to the young brave, putting him into a death-like slumber, and lower him into the devil's pit, a wonderful hole in the solid rock. This, of course, ends the pretty love story of Little White Arrow, and the guide then tells how, after the pale-faced man came to the island, the body of the young brave was discovered and by a learned professor restored to life.

We then follow the initiation of the Indian into modern civilization. We see him find the site of his wigwam, now occupied by a great white modern villa. We see him listen to a phonograph, which he takes to be the voice of the Great Spirit; then he mistakes a swift motor boat for a great white bird and speeds an arrow after it. He is lured into the house, and awed by the glare of the electric light, and fleeing from this he finds a canoe, modern to be sure, but still a canoe, and he paddles away from civilization into the sunset.

We next see him land at the foot of a tremendous ledge and climb the rocks to look across the waters. And then suddenly a mighty monster that fills the sky and water comes into sight around the edge of the rocks, almost at his shoulders. He does not know that it is only one of the great, white steamboats, and is petrified by the sight, and there he stands today, a part of the solid rock.

THE GHOST'S WARNING (Nov. 17).—The tale begins back in the old, old days when lords and ladies lived in romantic old castles and dressed in picture clothes. A maiden comes to the time of life when she must choose between love and high position. Her artist lover is only a carver of wood, so she chooses the prince, who gives her rich jewels and a great name. Of course she is unhappy, and we see the enactment of the final tragedy of her young life, after which her ghost haunts the spot where it took place.

Then we come to matters of today. A descendant of her cruel husband, Count Sombra, has come to America to marry some American dollars. He has met the father of a girl who seems desirable, and comes by invitation to call on her. A little surprise awaits the girl, for the girl has a cousin whom he has met before and who wants to marry him. He lets her know of his intention to marry the heiress, and being a young lady of resource, she decides to upset his plans. She introduces a handsome young artist and gets him a commision to paint the heiress's portrait. The scheme is partly successful; the heiress falls in love; but the millionaire takes his daughter, also the count and cousin for a cruise on his yacht to the Mediterranean, as a cure for the girl's infatuation. It looks as if his cure were likely to succeed, and the heiress forget the artist lover. The latter is sketching at Castle Sombra, when the yacht party lands there. They do not meet, but while the heiress is trying to decide to fulfil her father's wishes and accept the count, the ghost of the girl who made the wrong choice comes to her and warns her to avoid her unhappy state and to marry the man she loves.

KALEM.

WHEN CALIFORNIA WAS WON (Nov. 13).—Commodore Sloat, of the American Navy, demands of the Mexican Governor the surrender of California. The Commodore's Lieutenant, Tom Marston, is impressed with the beauty of the Governor's daughter, Manuelita. The young lady does not seem at all displeased. That night the lieutenant runs a great risk for another sight of Manuelita. Dressed as a Mexican he approaches the house of the fair Mexican girl but shortly after his arrival he is discovered, pursued and captured. To shield Manuelita he dares death by saying "I am a spy." Manuelita, learning of his arrest rows out in a boat to the American man-of-war, where a rescue party is quickly formed. Rapidly gaining the shore a run is made for the settlement. Lieutenant Marston is freed just as he is to be shot as a spy; and the capture of the colony is effected.

THE DESERT WELL (Nov. 15).—Ralph, rejected by Hazel plans a mean act to revenge himself upon Dick, his successful rival. To carry out his unprincipled scheme he pays two outcast Indians to drive off Dick's valuable cattle. The next morning the Indians becoming frightened abandon the cattle. Dick, discovering his loss, calls his cowboys together and they go in search of the herd. Suspecting what has really happened they trail the Indians over the hills and eventually effect a capture. While turning their prisoner over to the sheriff the Indians see Ralph in a crowd of bystanders and expose him to the officer of the law. Ralph makes a quick get-away, but is followed by the sheriff. Taking to the desert, the officer only a short way behind him, Ralph rides for dear life. His horse becoming exhausted he is forced to abandon him and proceed on foot. The sheriff, thoroughly familiar with the country, makes a short cut for a well in the desert, knowing that Ralph must eventualy make for the same spot. At this point almost a tragedy takes place. The sheriff, however, secures his prisoner and marches him back to town over the hot and blistering sands.

THE FISHERMAID OF BALLYDAVID (Nov. 17).—Kathleen, the daughter of an honest Irish Fisherman, meets Henry, the son of a New York broker, who is on a tour through the Emerald Isle. Kathleen's father, returning from the beach sees the two lovers embrace. On Kathleen's return home her father upbraids her and tells her she must have nothing more to do with the stranger, that he is far above her in worldly possessions and that there acquaintance can come to no good end. Believing her father is unjust in his judgment she becomes angry and decides to go to America and search out her Yankee sweetheart. We see her on the rear deck of the steamer as she takes a last view of her old home. Her courage is strong, however, and she contents herself with her own surroundings, believing she is going to the man who will love and protect her. Arriving in New York she starts on her search, which proves fruitless. As night approaches she becomes exhausted and sits down on the steps of a house, where she quickly falls asleep and is found by a good-natured policeman, who takes her to his own home and places her in the care of his tender-hearted wife.

The next morning Henry Rhodes, while at the breakfast table, reads in his newspaper the story of Kathleen, the little Irish girl, who has come in search of her American lover. Hastily leaving the table he goes to the house of the policeman and asks to see Kathleen. On her appearance he explains to her that their past association in Ireland was merely a Summer flirtation. This nearly crushes the heart of the trusting Irish maid. Henry forces a roll of bills in the hands of the policeman and tells him to pay her passage back to Ireland. We next see the chastened girl wending her way up the one street of the little Irish village to her father's home. Entering the door with her head bowed in sorrow for her hasty flight, she is welcomed by her good old father and mother.

BIOGRAPH.

DOOLEY'S SCHEME (Nov. 13).—Officer Dooley falls in love with a pretty little housemaid, only to find that Mike Doyle, the plumber, has won her consent to marriage. Dooley swears they shall never become man and wife, and so schemes to prevent it. On the day of the wedding, Dooley meets Doyle and has him locked up on a fake charge. The bride is very much upset at Doyle's non-arrival, and through pique, accepts Dooley. The marriage is about to take place, when Doyle rushes up, he having been released by an influential friend, denounces Dooley, and orders the ceremony to proceed, with him, Doyle, as the bridegroom.

WON THROUGH A MEDIUM (Nov. 13).—Nellie, whose heart is given to Harry, plans to get rid of Clarence, her mamma's choice as a son-in-law, by frightening him from the house during the course of a spiritualistic seance, presided over by her aunt Jane, who is a medium. Harry is hidden in the room, and by his answers to the queries of the party, Clarence is scared out of his wits (if he ever had any), so that at the finish he rushes panic-stricken from the house.

THROUGH DARKENED VALES (Nov. 16).—Grace rejects poor, honest-hearted Dave, in favor of Howard, the flashy village beau. Dave resolves to show Grace there is something in him, by working hard and raising himself above the ordinary standard. At a house party, Grace is the victim of a chafing-dish explosion, which leaves her blind, with hopes of a cure in an operation, which, of course, requires money. For this she appeals to Howard, but he cruelly refuses. In fact he has no patience with her in her misfortune. She now realizes how shallow Howard's character is. Dave.

by hard work and frugal living, has saved quite a little money, which he intends as the foundation of a future, should Grace reconsider, but fate intervenes, and his close application to work has stricken him blind, hence his life's savings seem destined to be given to restore his sight. While in the outer office of the celebrated oculist, he hears Grace's voice, and for the first time learns of her misfortune. From bits of conversation overheard, he realizes Grace's helplessness, so calling the specialist in, he gives him the money he intended for his own operation, for Grace's, enjoining secrecy as to whom it came from. This sacrifice makes life for him a long, dark road. Grace later finds out the truth.

THE BIRTH OF A FLOWER (Nov. 14).—This remarkable picture opens with a scene in a greenhouse, where a florist is potting a small chrysanthemum. How it is done is shown very plainly, and anyone who loves flowers, will greatly benefit by the few scenes which act as an introduction to the actual theme of the picture. The scene following, showing the plant stretching its stalks and leaves to the sunshine, and the swelling of the buds of the flowers, the opening of the petals at the center of the bud, and the elongation of the petals of the flower after it has opened. Showing in two minutes on the screen, ten days in nature, produces a picture never to be forgotten.

THE DAUGHTER OF THE CLOWN (Nov. 17).—In the Music Hall, the clown and his daughter are both playing. The daughter, a popular girl, has been invited out after the show by an admirer, and the father, learning of this, follows her. As she is about to enter the motor car, to be driven to the rendezvous, she is struck by another automobile and killed. This so works upon the old clown that he goes into retirement. Six months later, he sees a country girl, who bears a remarkable resemblance to his daughter. So remarkable indeed, that he insists upon her coming to his house, where she dresses in the dead girl's theatrical costume. With a rush, all the old memories return to the clown and he goes through his old pantomime for the last time, dying in the arms of the girl who brought finally a little sunshine in his life.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY—Reel No. 45—1911 (Nov. 6).—London, England.—The English naval dirigible breaks in the middle as it is leaving the hangar on its way to its new tests.

Vienna, Austria.—The "fool riots" in the capital city end with depredations and the looting of stores.

Toulon, France.—The bodies of the unfortunate sailors who were killed on board the warship "Gloire" by an exploding gun are buried with impressive ceremony.

Venice, Italy.—The Italian troops are received before their departure for Tripoli, showing also the Italian warship "Pisa," which hunted, found and sank one of the Turkish torpedo boats.

Macon, Ga.—Eugene, Ely, one of the most skillful aviators of America, who was killed in a sensational "dip" in a flight in his biplane.

New York, N. Y.—The Glidden Tourists get a fine start on their run from New York to Jacksonville.

Baltimore, Md.—Cardinal Gibbons, the only American Cardinal, celebrates his Diamond Jubilee.

Oakland, Cal.—President Taft with his escort and the Knight Templars keep Oakland in a state of enjoyable excitement.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The statue of Richard Wagner, the famous composer, is unveiled before a vast assemblage.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Pacific Fleet is now in San Francisco Bay.

Liverpool, England.—The Duke of Connaught, the newly-appointed Governor-General of Canada, leaves for Quebec on board the "Empress of Ireland" with the Duchess.

In addition to these there are many other subjects.

A BROTHER IN ARMS (Nov. 15).—When the troops were ordered to Mexico, Hilton and Frazer are ordered to the border. Hilton promises Mrs. Frazer that he will bring her husband back safely to her, no matter what condition arises. After their arrival at the border Hilton and Frazer have trouble with the Mexican Indians, who are trying to cross into the United States. Hilton is wounded and Frazer is carried into Mexico by the Indians. Of course, orders have been issued that under no circumstances shall troops cross the border, and in consequence, Hilton, with a few comrades, go as private citizens to Frazer's rescue. How they rescue him, using jobite, the new government explosive; how they cross a yawning chasm by modern military method, and how they explode a land mine, thus cutting off all pursuit, are features which make this film of unusual interest.

A WESTERN POSTMISTRESS (Nov. 16).—A young girl postmistress, of a rough little Western town, receives notification that the Express Company is forwarding her a large sum of money. She sends a note to her sweetheart to accompany her to the station to get the money. This note, entrusted to the care of an Indian girl, falls into the hands of some desperadoes, who determine to have the money. The other adventures which follow, in which the girl, with consummate strategy, throws her horse into a narrow little pass, and hiding behind him, holds off her pursuers until help comes, makes a mighty interesting and somewhat unusual tale of western life.

THE REPORTER (Nov. 18).—Tom Penworth, a reporter in the Gotham Gazette, is in love with the daughter of William Wayne. She, however, prefers another, and tells Penworth so at a party given to her father by the Elm Club, of which he is a president. At this party, Mr. Wayne is presented with a watch fob, which later proves his undoing. The same night, after the guests are gone, Wayne shows himself in his true character, that of a burglar, and attempts to rob a house. Startled by a noise in the house, he makes a hasty retreat, but drops his watch fob. This is found by Penworth, who decides to say nothing about it. The next morning, Wayne, thinking that all is lost, because of his watch fob, commits suicide, and Penworth, happening to be the first man on the scene, is accused by his rival of murder. How this interesting situation works out, should be left for the film to tell.

VITAGRAPH.

SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN (Nov. 13).—A stern, but religious father, accedes to his married daughter's plea, "in His Name," to keep her and her two little children from the verge of starvation, brought about by the death of her husband, by giving them shelter, but with a stipulation that she has no right to ask that his love be lavished on the fruit of a marriage so distasteful to him.

The little ones are treated with the characteristic coldness peculiar to one who preaches but who does not practice. When the children in their play disturb him he is very harsh and commands them to read passages and quotations from the Bible.

On Sunday he takes his daughter and grandchildren to church. After the services he makes them attend Sunday School. All the children receive a card bearing scriptural quotations. His grandchildren receive a card bearing the inscription "'Suffer Little Children to Come Unto Me, for of Such Are the Kingdom of Heaven." They run quickly to him and show the card. He is touched. That night when they are asleep he steals quietly to their room, blesses them with an awakened love, and clasps them both in his arms with a benediction of tears.

THE GIRL AND THE SHERIFF (Nov. 14).—A young girl of the mountains is resting in the quiet of her cabin, is suddenly confronted by a young mountaineer, who excitedly announces that he has been shot and is being pursued by the Sheriff of the county. She hastily dresses his wound. While thus engaged, the young people fall in love with each other. The Sheriff is seen approaching. She induces the young man to hide in the closet. The Sheriff enters and she brings out the grog flask and with seeming hospitality, gives him a well-filled glass of the liquor, which soon goes to his head. He asks her to get out her banjo and entertain him with a few tunes. She goes to the closet for the instrument. She previously has borrowed the Sheriff's revolver to crack some hickory nuts and when he is not looking withdraws the cartridges from it.

While she is diverting the officer, he becomes very familiar and attempts to make free with her. Her sweetheart bursts forth from the closet and commands him to keep his hands off the girl. The Sheriff levels his revolver at the young mountaineer but soon discovers that it is not loaded and he is at the mercy of the younger man. The girl tells her lover to escape as quickly as possible. He asks her to go with him. She consents and together they make a hasty exit from the cabin, leaving the infuriated Sheriff helpless and alone, while they make the best of their opportunity and place a safe distance between him and the possibility of capture.

THEIR CHARMING MAMMA (Nov. 15).—Mr. Brown does not hesitate in telling Mrs. Collins that she is a charming widow. The young widow has two daughters, Nell and Bess, who induce their charming mamma to hold a reception with the privilege of inviting a number of their friends.

On the night of the party all the young men, including John and Harold, the respective sweethearts of Nell and Bess, are captivated by the charming widow to whom they pay court. Mr. Brown grows very uneasy and disconcerted when he finds it is a difficult matter to reach his adored one. But, however, with the help of Nell and Bess, he manages to disperse the encircling bulwark of young men, and proposes to her. Getting her consent, they quietly slip away and are soon married.

Upon their return they find everybody strolling in the garden and again the widow, now Mrs. Brown, is besieged by the young men. But they are soon scattered upon being told by Mr. Brown that the charming lady is now his wife.

In the evening Nell and Bess show their engagement rings and the rest announce their engagements. Congratulations follow and everybody is convinced that the reception is a grand success, due to "Charming Mamma."

THE LITTLE SPY (Nov. 17).—The Civil War is in progress. General Foshay is in charge of the Confederate forces. His wife and family are anxiously awaiting news from him, when their home is surrounded by a company of Union soldiers, who force the family to entertain them. The choicest of the larder is brought forth for their enjoyment. They partake plentifully of liquid refreshments, and feeling in fine fettle, discuss matters pertaining to a contemplated attack on General Foshay and his regiment.

Little Jack Foshay, the general's son, has been awaiting his opportunity, and unperceived, crawls underneath the table around which the Federal Officers are sitting. He overhears all that is said and escapes from the room without being seen. Making his way hurriedly across the lawn, he is on his way to his father's camp, when he is detected by the officers, and at once they become suspicious. They notify their soldiers and soon they are in pursuit of "The Little Spy," who, after making his way through devious and rugged paths, and jumping into a boat on the shore of an intervening river, he rows hurriedly across, just in advance of his pursuers. He reaches his father's headquarters faint and wounded, but in time to give warning of the Union plan and give the boys in grey time to prepare to oppose the Federal attack.

VITAGRAPH MONTHLY OF CURRENT EVENTS (Nov. 18).—In this number you will have, within a thousand feet of film, the greatest events of the month. An excellent view of the Austin flood is recorded, wherein so many lives were lost, pointing out just how and where the terrific ravages of the unfettered waters took place.

A comprehensive view of Admiral Schley's funeral at Washington, D. C., showing all the attending celebrities, the naval and military attaches and corps who made up the long cortege which escorted the body of the Admiral to the Arlington Cemetery.

A picture of a special interest is the marvelous achievement of transporting world's largest girder, weighing 150,000 pounds, from the Pennsylvania R. R. wharves by the Meade Transfer Company, to the world's biggest sky-scraper, the Woolworth Building.

The mobilization of the United States warships and the manoeuvres and doings of the fleet in New York Harbor.

Particular attention is called to the Boy Scouts in their drills and exhibitions, and the athletic games at Columbus Park, in the midst of the crowded tenement district of New York City, under the supervision of the Playground Association of Public Parks.

Now we have a peep at the Golden West: a harvesting scene on one of the largest wheat fields in existence, with a great number of giant reapers mowing down the "staff of life," preparatory to shipping it to market.

Speaking of the "staff of life," we are reminded of another article of food to which the thoughts of every American mind turns at this season of the year—Turkey. "Old King Gobbler," in all his glory, in the midst of his tribe, surrounded by a

COMPENSARC

This Machine cuts 2/3 from your Light Bills

Mr. Manager

If you are on a 110 or 220 volt circuit and you are using a rheostat to reduce the voltage to 35 at the arc in your lamp, you are paying for 2/3 more "juice" than you are actually using. Can you afford to waste all this energy supplied from the line, over and above what you really need?

The Fort Wayne Compensarc saves all this waste by reducing the voltage without losing any: makes a clearer, whiter, steadier light, and eliminates all danger of fires caused by overheated rheostats.

We have a little 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat" that we want to send you. It will tell you plainly how you can make a big saving and a better light. Send us your name and address.

ALL RECORDS SMASHED TO SMITHEREENS

At the present writing (Tuesday Oct. 31st) the offices of the Laemmle Film Service are doing a business far beyond all comparison with any previous record. I haven't seen such a sudden landslide toward Independence in any month for a year. About six weeks ago there was a slight lull in the gaining of recruits but as soon as exhibitors began to note the glorious improvement in the quality of Independent films, they began to come into the Independent fold in droves and flocks.

Digest This:

Last week in my Chicago office I gave three different demonstrations of Independent films (all brands) to three crowds of exhibitors who were NOT using Independent films. They were simply thunder struck! They admitted openly they had no idea the Independent manufacturers were turning out any such features as I showed them. Not a man in the lot had a single word of criticism to utter. It was an absolute cinch to win some of these exhibitors then and there—and I'll bet I'll land the rest of them within a month. If you haven't seen any Independent films lately, wake up. Go somewhere and look them over. Note their stories, acting, photography, stage settings. See what a crackerjack program I can arrange for you. You owe it to yourself to find out what has caused this upheaval, this sudden and swift landslide of new converts to the Laemmle Film Service. MELIES.

THE MISER MINER (Nov. 16.)—An old miser [illegible] wealth by foreclosing mortgages on the unfortunate and by oppressing the poor in rents. He leads a lonely life, for all [illegible]. At length he feels the end coming and [illegible]. The only one to respond is Lola, a young and pretty Western girl. She makes the old man's last days comfortable, and before he dies he tells her the secret hiding place of all his gold, that she should tell his nephew and heir when the latter heard of the death.

Lola's brother, Jesse, a ne'er-do-well, gets wind of the hiding place, and plans to steal the treasure. Meanwhile the heir has arrived and there springs up great friendship between him and Lola. She, of course, tells him of the treasure, and they plan to get it together. But Lola suspects her brother, and dressing up in man's clothes and donning a mask, she follows him. Having secured the gold he turns about only to meet the supposed bandit who orders his hands up and to go where he directs. The plucky little girl turns the affair into a joke by forcing Jesse to carry the treasure to Ray, the heir's very door. Then she quickly changes clothes and enters the room.

Ray, of course, thanks Jesse for the favor, and Lola secretly shows Jesse the mask and trousers, whereupon he is amazed to learn that his own sister foiled him. He is for losing his temper, but all ends well when Ray takes Lola to wife and gives Jesse a good job.

AN OIL COUNTRY ROMANCE (Nov. 23).—Mr. Newhouse and his daughter, Doris, visit the oil wells of which Mr. Newhouse is proprietor. The father inspects the works while Doris remains in the carriage to read. Her attention is drawn to one of the workmen who is neater than the rest and who is evidently very much elated over something before him. Doris becomes interested and approaches the man. Tom, for such is his name, is very much flattered and proudly describes a new device he has just invented. But Doris fails to understand, as he draws a sketch for her.

The foreman arrives and pays much attention to Doris, which she evidently dislikes. She leaves with her father. Tom shows the invention to the foreman, who says it does not amount to much, but who secretly knows it is wonderful. He sends Tom away on some errand, and copies the sketch.

The foreman applies for a patent and tells Mr. Newhouse of his invention. The latter is pleased and helps the foreman along. The foreman meanwhile discharges Tom, who on his way from the wells meets Doris and her father in their automobile which has broken down. Doris at once recognizes him as the workman who showed her the invention and tells her father of the incident.

All go back to the wells, where the foreman is faced with the truth. After a great struggle he is forced from the place and Tom comes into his own. And all this time Doris looks upon Tom with favor. She is the last to congratulate him, but not the least, for her hand lingers and her eyes speak volumes.

A RACE FOR A BRIDE (Nov. 7).—Two cowpunchers are in love with a girl. Jack is favored, and Len, stirred by jealousy, shows his hatred of his rival. The two men nearly come to blows. The government agent holds a race, open to all, the winner to secure the well-paying position of pony express rider. The girl promises to marry Jack if he wins the race, and Len does all he can to prevent this. The course is twelve miles, circular, over rough country. It is not a "chase," but a real race, with a score of cowboys thundering over the ground at breakneck speed, urging their mounts forward by whip and spur. Jack wins the race and a bride.

WENONA'S BROKEN PROMISE (Nov. 10).—The Indian agent comes to the village and takes a fancy to Lone Wolf, son of the chief. He finally persuades the chief to send Lone Wolf to college. The youth is seen bidding goodbye to his sweetheart, Wenona, in a picturesque nook, and the girl promises to be faithful and to marry him on his return in four years. After a year, however, she yields to the wooing of Big Bear and becomes his bride. The chief casts them out of the tribe and they go far away in the forest. When Lone Wolf comes back and learns the truth he is furious and seeks them out. Peeking into the tepee he sees the happiness of the couple over their little pappoose, and his heart is touched. Departing silently, he leaves them in peace. He goes back to his tribe, bids them all goodbye, and becomes a lonely wanderer.

RELIANCE.

MARRIAGE (Nov. 8).—A young doctor marries an extravagant society girl. His profession interferes with her pleasures, he being called away as they are leaving for a reception, and another time, having to leave a gay dinner, etc. Diphtheria breaks out in the poor districts and he volunteers his services. His wife strenuously objects, as she fears he will bring the disease home. He stands firm in his duty, but his child becomes infected and dies. The mother is very bitter and becomes wildly extravagant, finally ruining him. She then goes back to her mother. The old-fashioned mother takes her to task, and succeeds in showing her that her place is by her husband's side, and that she has been a very unsuccessful wife. Repentant, she decides to make up for the past and goes to his bare little office, arriving in his absence. A poor, distracted woman comes in seeking the doctor for her sick child. The doctor's wife sees a chance to redeem herself and leaves a note for the doctor to call at once at the home of the poor woman. She goes there herself, cleans up the squalid place, buys necessary things, etc. The doctor gets the message and hurries to the sick child, whose life he saves. Over its bedside the estranged husband and wife are reunited, and start life anew with perfect understanding to light the way.

THE TRACK WALKER (Nov. 11).—Willis, a track walker, is the accepted lover of Helen. Smith, a disappointed suitor, plans to make Willis lose his job for neglect of duty. With a couple of toughs, he attacks Willis, who is securely bound. While the toughs guard him in the woods, Smith, with the key stolen from Willis, throws the switch to derail the passenger train, and casts the key away. The guards by this time realize the seriousness of the affair, and hurriedly depart. Willis wriggles over to a cigarette they dropped, and manages to burn the cords binding his wrists. He quickly frees himself as the train is coming. Fearful of his inability to stop it, he tears off his shirt, cuts his arm and soaks the shirt with blood, making a red flag. As the train approaches, he faints from loss of blood. Smith, in the meantime, has discovered Willis' escape, and coming up, sees the heroic deed. Remorse strikes him and he attempts to throw the switch, but cannot unlock it. By a desperate run he reaches the side of the unconscious Willis, picks up the improvised flag, and, frantically waving it, stops the train. When Willis is revived, he takes in the situation and claims he does not know who threw the switch. As the train speeds on its way Smith makes a humble apology, and is forgiven by Willis.

AMBROSIO.

DOLLY'S DOLL (Nov. 8).—A workman is deserted by his wife. Regretting her act, she is drawn by intense longing to the door of her husband's home. Her baby daughter, playing with her doll at the window, lets it fall. Going down to recover it, she finds her mother, and, holding the woman by the hand, insists on taking her in. At first the husband is bitterly resentful, but yielding to the child's pleadings, he forgives his wife.

TWEEDLEDUM'S MOTOR CAR (Nov. 8).—A short comedy in which Tweedledum engages in an exciting race with the police, who pursue him for failure to display his license number. The result is a series of comical, exciting incidents.

CHAMPION.

THE REDEMPTION OF A COWARD (Nov. 13).—John Maynard kisses his sweetheart good-bye and goes bravely to war. John is a Confederate and [illegible] sweetheart is of the same faith, and before his departure she makes a beautiful flag—the stars and bars. John places it in his bosom and swears fealty to it. But alas! the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak, and one sad day John flees like a coward in the face of the foe. His comrades, being forced to retreat, start in hot pursuit after the fleeing man.

The home of John's sweetheart has been invaded by Yankee soldiers, who rough-house it in that dastardly fashion peculiar to soldiers. Everything is knocked topsy-turvy and Mary herself grossly insulted. Just here, John, the coward, comes on the scene, for he has sought the home of his sweetheart as a refuge in his hour of distress.

The deserter suddenly becomes a raging lion. John lays about him right and left, dealing death at every blow; but he himself is laid low—shot through the brain, and his Mary throws herself on his body, heart-broken.

John's comrades, in search of him, arrive on the scene and make short work of what the fallen hero had left of the enemy, and seeing how he had redeemed his honor, they cover his body with the folds of the flag they find on his breast—the flag she gave him. With respectful and sympathetic mien, they uncover and swear never to reveal the one blot on his escutcheon, for they rightly judged that his last great act was truly a deed of redemption.

THE PASSING OF SAL (Nov. 15).—Sal is a character as imperious and wild as her Western upbringing could make her. She loves Jim Brantwood with a strength that is wholly reciprocated. But Sal is also whimsical as well as imperious; two bad traits, and the upshot of one of her moods is that she turns Jim down good and proper. Jim is at once troubled, but gladdens later on. With Jim out of the way, Bill Grant, who hankered after Sal, tried to win her good graces, while Jim turned to a girl who was more worthy of him, Lucy Phillips.

Sal learns from Bill that Jim is going to take Lucy to a ball, that she had long since made arrangements to attend herself, dressed in a gorgeous gown which Jim had presented to her before his "throw-down." Beside herself with jealous rage, she tears the dress from her shoulders. After this, the news that Jim is going to marry Lucy tears her very heart out. Her fury is now intense, and she borrows Bill's knife to deal death to Jim, telling Bill she has a purpose and will return to him when it is accomplished.

High up were the cliffs that lay between Sal and the object of her dire vengeance. Deep, impassable gorges intervened, but she was not to be deterred. So we see going hand over hand along the sides of rocky crags, revengeful Sal.

But now her goal is reached, and it is only a question of a few moments until her knife would reach Jim's body. He little knows the impending danger and is oblivious of all but his beautiful Lucy. However, a higher power intervened, for so it seemed and stayed the hand of Sal, by reaching her heart. They called it "Heart Disease," but Bill thought differently when he found she didn't come back. He had divined her plan of revenge and her purpose in borrowing his knife.

But if none else seemed to care, Bill did, and he wasn't ashamed to drop a tear o'er the passing of Sal.

AMERICAN.

THE MEXICAN (Nov. 9).—Joe Curvey, a Mexican, finds a baby girl in a basket on his ranch. He adopts her. Eighteen years later a bitter race animosity against the Mexicans prompts Charlie Mason, leader of a gang of cowboys to assault Curvey when he calls at the local store for supplies. Thinking that they would not molest Dolores, his adopted daughter, he sends her on his next errand. A female makes no difference, and the toughs bombard the Mexican's hut. Dolores manages to escape, but quickly returns with Clarence Stowell, and his fellows, who immediately disperse the invaders.

Dolores and Clarence fall in love. The Mexican, rankling under the many injustices, calls his friends together, and there is a lively battle between rangers, cowpunchers and Mexicans. The Mexican and his daughter are captured, but are soon released by the timely appearance of Clarence Stowell.

THE EASTERN COWBOY (Nov. 13).—Jack Richards and Belle Bruce have been engaged for sometime. One day they have a quarrel which causes Belle to run away. In the meantime Jack has written her a note, saying that he is going West, which she finds upon her return to the spot where they parted.

Arrived in the West Jack is fortunate enough to secure work on the ranch of Frank Morlin. The ranch owner's daughters, Kate and Jean, are much pleased with the newcomer and both try to win his love.

Belle misses Jack more than ever, and when she receives a letter from her cousins in the West, decides to accept and try to forget her grief in the new environment.

Fate has it that Jack's employer is no other than Belle's cousin, and the strange manner in which the lovers are again brought together is indeed interesting.

THE WAY OF THE WEST (Nov. 16).—Hi Newton meets his old school friend Zeb Barker, after many years. Zeb learns that Hi has a daughter and he has a son, so what more natural than that they should decide to further cement their friendship by the marriage of their children. Theoretically O. K. but—

Newton introduces his daughter to Zeb, who mistakes the ranch cook for the young Miss in question. Newton explains the mistake, and, after meeting his charming daughter, Barker returns to his ranch fully determined to bring about a marriage.

Enter here, Young America. Young Barker entertains some strong opinions on the subject but, after his father has submitted a picture for his inspection, his antagonism lessens and he determines to investigate for himself. So he bids goodbye to his home and is seen soon after applying at the Newton ranch for work. He is given a chance. So is Cupid. Horseback rides and a charming panorama of mountain scenery bring about something more than platonic affection. Young Barker declares himself, is accepted, and then explains a clever plan to teach the two old men a lesson. After being thoroughly repulsed by Newton, young Barker hires a "bad man" to call at the Newton ranch and introduce himself as Young Barker. There is some corking good comedy here. Naturally, Newton is seriously alarmed at the possibility of his daughter marrying such a beast, and, naturally also, he is immediately reconciled to young Barker, who arrives in time to throw the villain into the road.

NESTOR.

A TRUE WESTERNER (Nov. 8).—At last Bob Bonner had saved enough money to buy a little home out West, which Uncle Bill had selected for their mother. So, with his younger brother, Jack, he set out to look the place over, and in due time arrived at their small Western station. Here, seeing no conveyance in sight, the young men decided to walk.

They had gotten scarcely half way to the ranch when, fortunately, they sat down to rest in the shade, where they overheard the plans of two hold-up men, planning to waylay a ranchman and his foreman at that spot. Getting their new guns in readiness, the boys crept stealthily after the hold-up men, surprising them as much as they did the ranchman. But, although the bandits managed to get away, they were forced to leave Uncle Bill's (for it proved to be he) nice bag of gold behind.

Acting upon his Uncle's advice, Bob decided to look around before buying, so it was a couple of months later ere he wrote to Mrs. Bonner that he considered the first place the best, and for her to come on at once. In the meanwhile, however, Jack had fallen into bad company at the gambling house, and had already "borrowed," unknown to his brother, half of the money for their little home, so that when Bob advised him that their mother would arrive the next day Jack slipped the rest of the money from his brother's wallet and hastened to the gambling house, determined to win what he had lost. But this went like the first and the young man staggered blindly from the room, not noticing that Uncle Bill had been observing their play—indeed, observing it so closely that he promptly accused Jack's partner of cheating and insisted upon the money being given him.

From there he hurried home to find Jack, who, almost frantic from the loss of his brother's money, was in the act of opening the ranch safe. Suddenly, the young man paused—from the next room came the strains of his mother's evening hymn. Shamed and remorseful, Jack replaced the money in the safe and rose to confess all to his mother. Then Uncle Bill stepped forward, returned the money from the gambling house and loaned the boy the balance, and Jack met his mother a thoroughly repentant and wiser young man.

DESPERATE DESMOND ALMOST SUCCEEDS (Nov. 11).—Desperate Desmond wants beautiful Rosamond and wants her at any cost. He's desperately in love with her, which fact causes him to do desperate deeds. At the psychological moment, he abducts her with the aid of two minions.

Claude Eclaire, Rosamond's hero and sweetheart, manages to train the villain, and, after some thrilling adventures, saves the girl and with her bravely plunges into the sea to escape Desmond and his myrmidons.

The desperate fellow, however, pauses just long enough to curse the luck and then starts in pursuit with Gomgotz and another wild man from Borneo. Despite the brave efforts of both Claude and Rosamond, the hunters gain ground, or rather, water, for the scene is laid over the briny wavelets. The fugitives soon repair to a semi-submerged, friendly house. There, from the chimney top, they hold the fort. Unable to make any headway, Desperate Desmond conceives and executes a diabolical plan. He puts a bomb in a box, lights the fuse and sends it by the water route on its errand of destruction.

Luck does not relish being cursed, and smiles upon the lovers. The faucet is open and the sink running over. The box with its smoking burden tries to navigate under the sink, but the falling water holds it there and renders the bomb harmless. Claude captures the bomb, relights it and, thus armed, turns the tables on his pursuers. With his beloved Rosamond he leaves the enemy stranded and boards the ship to freedom and happiness. Desperate Desmond, defeated and crestfallen, swims back to the ship, but the anchor is as far as he can go—curse the luck!

YANKEE.

INTO THE LIGHT (Nov. 13).—Cupid has played many mischievous pranks and has sent his darts into many strange beings, but the strangest prank of all was when he sent his love dart into Bud Tucker, the burglar and all around bad man. Bud never knew the tender passion until he met Anne, the Salvation Lassie. While seeking to escape from the police he enters her room and she, recognizing him as the man who had returned her prayer book and one for whom she held out great hopes as a convert, decides to protect him from the law's clutches. She orders him to jump into bed and when the police call she tells them that he is her sick brother. Through her influence he, in time, reforms and obtains a position as butler in the home of Anne's friends. Surrounded by good influence, trusted and respected, his cup of joy is full to overflowing. With the tenacity that characterizes him as a successful bad man, he adheres to his new principles in life and when his death occurs he is deeply mourned by his new friends.

THE TWO ROOMS (Nov. 17).—The life of a settlement worker means a series of self sacrifices which none but the bravest in spirit dare undertake. When the Rev. Horace Thompson signified his intentions of entering this neglected field of spiritual work his friends were greatly surprised, but all persuasion could not turn him from his path.

Renting a room in a typical tenement he began his charitable work with "love to all and malice towards none." He became acquainted with his next room neighbor, a young matron in poor circumstances whose husband was in jail, through her little girl who, with childish candor, made friends with the handsome young minister and made his room her playroom during the absence of her mother. The minister learns that his neighbor is to be evicted for non-payment of rent. Eager to assist, but fearing to offend her, he hits upon a novel method. He volunteers to care for the child during the mother's absence and when the little one falls asleep he hides a sum of money in her clothes, which the mother later finds, and, appreciating the deed, accepts the help.

An eventful day arrives when her husband, who has escaped from jail, comes and demands help. He brutally attacks her and leaves her unconscious. The little girl runs next door for assistance and the minister is in time to meet the escaping convict, but, being unarmed, is unable to stop him, so turns his attention to the unconscious woman and the frightened child.

The ex-convict is shot by the police in trying to make good his escape, and when the minister learns the identity of the man, he takes the mother and child to the home of his mother while he returns to his settlement work with the picture of the woman and babe ever before him. Love cannot remain silent forever and although reluctant to confess his love for his former neighbor, he shows it by every action and deed. Brave under all circumstances, he is compelled to rely upon his mother when it comes to declaring his love, but all ends happily when she assures the mother of her willingness to become her daughter.

REX.

SAINTS AND SINNERS (Nov. 9).—Mr. Burton leaves his bride of a few weeks to go off on a business trip. In the same boarding house at which Mrs. Burton is stopping are living an adventuress and a "sport," a man-about-town, one of the smooth-tongued gentry ready to make money or marplot, as the case may be. He sets evil designs on the young matron; the adventuress divines his intentions—and the sinner becomes a saint. The adventuress realizes he will have as easy a time in working destruction with the unsophisticated, unwary girl, as Roosevelt killing a grizzly with both hands, and she determines to prevent the murder of a soul. She warns the young woman, but advice seldom justifies itself; the wise need it not, and fools don't take it anyhow. She appeals to the man, but she might as well petition Satan to become a reformer. At last, in despair, she asks them both to come to her room to talk the matter over. They agree. An unseen observer, a serious person, sedate and sober, one of the clan of humans that long to make the world better—and invariably make it worse—informs the landlady that "a man has entered Miss Winthrop's room." The irate landlady, right in her element at the suggestion of scandal, makes a formidable entrance upon the three. Miss Winthrop conceals the other woman behind a curtain, insinuating by her act that she alone is the wrong-doer, sacrificing the dearest possession of woman, her reputation, for a weak sister. They are both told to leave the house. The man departs at once and the next morning the "adventuress"—a "bad" woman—goes out into an evil world, with the sweet consciousnes of having done a real good in it.

The husband returns. He takes the little woman in his arms, and neither knows the misery and heartache to which they both were doomed, and from which they were spared by a "bad woman."

SOLAX.

AN INTERRUPTED ELOPEMENT (Nov. 8).—Ruth Morton's love affair with Tom is much opposed by her parents, so she and Tom decide to elope. Tom puts a ladder up to her window, but hearing a noise he hides. Along comes a young fellow in evening clothes. He is intoxicated, and seeing the ladder, decides to investigate. He manages to crawl up to Ruth's window, and she, thinking it is Tom, throws her arms around his neck. Tom sees the drunk crawling into Ruth's room and rushes up to help her. Drunk puts on Ruth's night clothes and goes to bed, while Ruth and Tom speed away in an auto. They are held up and robbed by tramps, who take the machine. Ruth and Tom get lost and go to a house to inquire. An old maid lives in the house and hearing them at the door, thinks it is burglars. She calls the police, who take Ruth and Tom to the station house. Soon after a policeman brings in the tramps, arrested for speeding. Tom gets back his money and marriage license and he and Ruth are married. As the ceremony is finished, in rushes on officer with the drunk, followed by Ruth's parents. An explanation follows and all ends merrily.

GRANDMOTHER LOVE Nov. 10).—Willie, a cute but mischievous boy of eight, comes home with the seat of his pants torn out and his pockets full of green apples. His parents look him over sternly and papa applies the slipper, to grandma's sorrow. Mamma says Willie must go to bed without any supper. At the supper table Granny tucks away some of the good things and takes them to Willie's room, where clouds change to sunshine.

In the meantime, father is taken with a violent attack of remorse and decides to take his little boy something to eat. Mother is also unable to sleep with her darling child hungry, so she also decides to take him some goodies. Mother and father meet on the stairs, both with their hands full of good things for little Willie. They go to Willie's room, where a general happy explanation follows, with granma having the goods on papa and mamma.

BILL TAKEN FOR A GHOST (Nov. 10).—Bill goes bathing in the river Dee. With the usual light-heartedness, he wraps himself in his bath towel and his umbrella, a white one, and wanders down the stream in search of pure enjoyment. Shortly after he comes to the dismantled Chateau of Spookeybrook, where he plays the part of the Ghost of Benjamin Binks for the benefit of some globe trotters who are exploring the ruins. Upon beholding this apparition, they trot off as fast as their legs can carry them. But it's only little Willie after all, and of course, all's well that ends well.

THE DIVERSIONS OF A NURSEMAID Nov. 10). The smart young man and the sweet young miss desert their charges and go in search of nourishment at an adjoining café. The exchange of their charges leads to results of the most humerous order. Just fancy what a fright you would have if you sent your baby out in charge of the maid and by the time she brought it back it had grown into a man old enough to be your great grandfather.

GREAT NORTHERN.

A WOMAN'S WIT (Nov. 11).—Mrs. Brandel has just received a new hat and also a large bill from her milliner. She goes into her husband's room, where he is at work, and after showing the hat, gives him the bill, and prevails upon him to read it. The amount is very uncomfortable in size, and hubby, tired of paying these everlasting bills, at once refuses to settle up. Mrs. Brandel, finding her arguments are of no avail, now simulates a fainting fit, but her husband is not to be caught napping, so, picking up a glass of water, he throws it over her. This has the desired effect, and she departs in a rage. Mr. Brandel sends for the doctor to ask his advice concerning this continual extravagance of his wife. The doctor, however, first sees Mrs. Brandel, and arranges a plan with her whereby she can fool her husband. Mr. Brandel, acting on his doctor's advice, buys a box of tablets, which his wife is to take, and which will cure her of her extravagance. At home, he tells his wife that she looks unwell, and persuades her to help herself to the tablets. This she does, and with the most surprising results. Gone, apparently, are her desires for costly clothes and hats; she arranges herself in the oldest rags she can find. But even now hubby is not contented, for his wife economizes in everything. A newspaper has to do duty for a tablecloth, and his meals are cut down to the lowest possible cost. But it was the last straw that broke the camel's back, and so it is with hubby. He has arranged to meet his wife at the station on his return from a journey, but on descending from the train he has the greatest shock of his life, for in place of his usual spick and span wife there is a most bedraggled-looking female. The worst has still to come, for while in the street, several of his friends seeing such a woman with him, absolutely refuse to recognize him. At home, he calls in the doctor, who prescribes another description of tablet, which soon brings Mrs. Brandel back to her former self, and after his lesson, hubby pays the bills like a lamb.

THANHOUSER.

THE HIGHER THE FEWER (Nov. 14).—"The Yorkshire Kid" is a clever little bantam weight prizefighter, who is blissfully unaware of his antecedents. All he knows is that when he was very young he had "folks" who came from England, but they all died so long ago he does not even remember them. He is perfectly contented with his lot, and knocks out his man joyfully every time he gets a chance.

Love, however, deals him an uppercut. He meets, while out on the road training, the daughter of a wealthy merchant, whom he worships from afar. He is in the depths of despair, realizing that a prizefighter can never meet a "swell dame who has her own benzine buggy."

Suddenly he is confronted with the news that through the death of an old man in England he is now a belted Earl, instead of a belted prizefighter, with an indepedent fortune on the side.

With wealth and a title, he easily obtains an introduction to the lady he adores. With most girls his title would have been enough to make a conquest easy, but this particular young woman is not at all dazzled by his high position. She is rather inclined to like him, if it were not for the fact that he is decidedly undersized and she thinks him a typical, anaemic little lord.

The secret of his former profession the "Kid" guards jealously. He discovers that he can look the part of an Earl, if he does not give himself away often by opening his mouth. The effect upon others is that they think him a timid little man, unduly silent.

He woos the American girl persistently, but she refuses to take him seriously. Not until he forcibly carries her off in an airship, and knocks out his brawny rival in a fistic encounter, does she even deign to notice him.

When, however, he proves himself a man of action and resource, to say nothing of an exceedingly strong right arm, she decides that the British Peerage is not as puny as it has been painted, and determines to join the ranks of the aristocracy.

A MOTHER'S FAITH (Nov. 17).—The spoiled son of a wealthy man is expelled from college. He regards it as rather a good joke, but his father warns him that he will have but one more chance to make good. The "chance" is in a broker's office, where the young man airily neglects business, and is finally discharged. He rather welcomes it, however, has an enjoyable evening with some college chums, and returns late at night in exuberant spirits.

Angry words are exchanged between father and son, which end in the younger man being ordered out of the house. His mother and sister plead in vain. They might have gained pardon for him had it not been for the drunken bravado displayed by the youth.

The son has no special training nor ambition. He rapidly degenerates into a common tramp. In a city park one day, he picks up a newspaper. One item that strikes his eye tells of the death of his father and he realizes that his way is clear if he wants to return home. He returns with all speed to the residence of his parents. He arrives there, a shabby, drunken outcast.

At the gateway of his home he meets his sister. She is shocked when she sees him, and more shocked when he tells her that he means to return. She leads him around to a window of the house and bids him look inside. There he sees his mother, weeping, and clasping his picture in her hands.

"Mother's prayer by day and by night has been for your return," the girl explains. "She believes that you are somewhere out in the great world, manfully fighting to make a name for yourself; that the faults of your boyhood have taught you a lesson, and that you are a man of whom your family can be proud. Will you spoil her belief by showing yourself for what you are, a dissipated and worthless tramp?"

For the first time the young man realizes to what low condition he has sunk. The scales of selfishness drop from his eyes. He determines to be worthy of the faith of his mother. Then and there he promises to drop his idle ways.

The struggle was a hard one, but he found that it paid. For a day came when he could go to his old home, neatly dressed, clear-eyed, and respected by his associates, and clasp his mother in his arms. And he could hear her say, "I knew that my boy would prove that he was a worthy man, and I am glad he is home again."

THE FALLIN' OUT (Nov. 13).—Andrew Stebbins, an aged farmer, who has grown peevish and irritable, abuses his kind old wife over a trifling incident and being in his dotage decides to try and obtain a divorce. Mrs. Stebbins tries to placate him to no avail and he hitches up his old horse and drives to the village, bent on a legal separation. Alighting at the office of the village lawyer, he enters and states his errand. The disciple of Blackstone has known Farmer Stebbins for years and he tries to dissuade him from the step, telling him he has no cause for separation and that Aunt Betsey is the most indulgent of wives. But the old man is stubborn and to humor him the lawyer prepares the preliminary papers.

Andrew then climbs into his buggy and starts for home with the legal document tucked in his pocket. Becoming drowsy, he falls asleep and the old family horse jogs along at will, stopping to crop the grass from the roadside, and finally halting at the watering trough at the forks of the road.

The occupant of the buggy dreams and in his fancy his boyhood days are recalled. How, as a barefoot boy, he was the sweetheart of Betsey at school; their first quarrel and the final consummation of their love; their walk out of the church yard, married and happy at the bright prospect of life. He sees Betsey with silvered hair ministering to his wants when he is ill—the kind companion. He sees her in his fancy doing the chores while he is sick—always the same sweet, kind, considerate woman, forgiving and indulgent.

Andrew awakes from the sleep and slowly picks up the reins and heads the horse homeward. The dream has impressed him. He sees himself in his true colors and the injustice of his recent action is made all too plain.

Arriving at the farm, he sees the candle gleaming in the window, a beacon light to welcome him home. The candle has been placed there for years whenever he has been driving to town.

He enters the kitchen and finds a steaming supper on the table awaiting him. Betsey is all kindness and he feels remorse. She heaps his plate with food and for the first time in years, he does not complain. The food is cooked to his taste. He Smiles on Betsey and she is happy. After supper she brings him his pipe and he pulls the document out of his pocket and bids her light it by the blaze of the lamp. He lights his pipe with the paper and takes the old lady in his arms, eminently satisfied and contrite. (Copyrighted 1911 by Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America.)

BREAKING THE SEVENTH COMMANDMENT (Nov. 16).—Andrew Standish, although poor, is a satisfied carpenter. He has a wife and daughter, Gladys, whom he loves dearly. The latter has a dog of which she is very fond. They are inseparable companions and the little girl derives much pleasure from her associations with the dog.

John Mortimer, the contractor, who employs Standish, is wealthy and has a daughter whose every wish is gratified. One day she and her father pass the humble residence of Standish and the child sees the dog and immediately induces her father to try and buy it. Gladys is approached but declines to part with the pet. She tells her father of the flattering offer for the dog and he commends her for not wishing to part with it.

Standish is growing old and is discharged from Mortimer's employ. Deprived of his weekly wage the family is almost destitute. To make matters worse Gladys becomes ill and the father has no money to secure medical attention or buy the necessaries of life. He debates with himself for a time and then decides to sell the dog to Mortimer, which he does. Overjoyed he returns home with a physician and some delicacies, but finds the child disconsolate by the absence of the dog, which is not explained to her satisfaction. The girl refuses to take medicine and moans and calls for her pet.

In his desperation Standish steals the dog and brings it home. Gladys is delighted and immediately shows signs of recovering. The theft has been discovered and Mortimer, accompanied by an officer, visits the cottage and the carpenter is charged with the crime, which he does not deny. The dog is on the bed of the sick child and the father contritely confesses the motive that caused him to steal.

At heart Mortimer is a kind man and the pathetic scene causes a revulsion of feeling. He gives the dog to the little girl and reinstates Standish in his old position in the carpenter shop. (Copyrighted 1911 by Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America.)

POWERS.

WHEN FIRST WE MET (Nov. 14).—Old man, do you remember the day you first met the little girl who has now gone through half a century by your side? Just as if it was yesterday—you went out to steal some apples, and that stingy old farmer chased you with the rest of the boys; you ran for dear life, over the orchard wall, across the meadow, pell-mell down the hill, and across the old stubble ground. Then you got a nail in your foot—the rest of the boys out-distanced you, but you limped along, with the apples banging and jangling in your blouse. And just as it seemed that the old skin-flint was going to get you, you took that sharp turn in the road, and came upon little, blue eyed her—standing by the dog-kennel; how quick she was to help you stuff yourself into that kennel, and when your pursuer came along she told him innocently that you had just run by, up that way. That act earned her the biggest, reddest and juiciest apple of all you stole and—say, old man, just dry that tear, now; fifty years have passed since then!

THE TELL-TALE PARASOL (Nov. 14).—Hiram Perkins is not a flirt, but that isn't because he's so fond of his stern old wife. On the contrary, he's exceptionally obliging to those of the fair sex who cross his path, and so it is not surprising when he gives Minerva Smith (quite unmarried, if you please) a lift in his one-horse shay as he meets her on the dusty road. And she discretely keeps her fancily-decorated parasol over their heads all the way to the village. Both enter the general store, and it just so happens that the horse considers this his cue to take a walk unguided; and he does. Hiram's chagrin is intense, to say the least, but instead of starting quietly on the scent, he starts a hullabaloo and gets the whole town out searching for his team. Mrs. Cynthia Perkins hears of it, of course, and arrives on the scene just as the strayed quadruped is being walked back by the finder. But Hiram's joy is changed to dismay, and finally panic, as he sees that Miss Minerva Smith's parasol is still lying on the seat!

P. S.—Mrs. Smith is averse to explanations, and has a fine muscular development.

THE OLD LEADER (Nov. 18).—Pretty tough going when a man gets the hand of Father Time pressing heavily on him. And even though Franz Engel is a genius in music, it's a little hard for him to get along. But his aged, sweet-souled wife is an incentive to him, and he struggles bravely on as the conductor of the orchestra at the opera.

One day he mets with an accident and it interferes seriously with the quality of his work. So much so, in fact, that it led to his discharge. And did he bring his sorrow home, to add to the grey hairs of his loving old life-partner, to cause her anguish and worriment? No, he was of too noble and sacrificing a nature for that so he just went out to seek other work, and finally found it—with a gang on a building construction job. He worked faithfully and every day, during the noon hour, he thrilled his fellow laborers with the sweet notes from his violin. And he might have spent the rest of his days at this work, if it had not been that he was one day "discovered"—yes, twice discovered. For at the same time that his wife discovered what a sacrifice he was making to keep a roof above her head, the great impressario of the Royal Opera sent him word that his opera has been accepted—that his crowning succes is to divorce him from the construction gang, and he is to take his place among the bright constellations of the musical firmament. And thus it happens that we finally read in the newspapers of the riotous enthusiasm that greeted the first performance of his masterpiece at the opera.

OF THE MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTING and SALES CO.

¶ We say this advisedly and truthfully, because we know good films when we see them. We see the product of other manufacturers as well as our own and we are contented.

¶ We know of no Independent Exchange that is not anxious and willing to improve its service to the extent of satisfying its present customers as well as taking over many from our common friend, "the enemy."

¶ We know of no Exhibitor who would willingly overlook the opportunity to increase his patronage.

¶ With these thoughts in mind, we are working very hard and have good reason to believe that the Exhibitors and Independent Exchanges will appreciate our efforts when once they see our product.

NO MERCY ON THE POOR — ONE REASON FOR HIS WEALTH

THE MISER MINER

WHEN the old miner dies he leaves the secret of his hidden treasure with Lola, a pretty Western girl, to deliver to the rightful heir. Lola's brother, a ne'er-do-well, learns it and plans to purloin the gold. Meanwhile there has sprung up a tender feeling between Lola and the heir, an Easterner. How the resourceful girl foils her brother, to his own satisfaction in the end, and wins a husband for herself, is the novel plot of this comedy-drama.

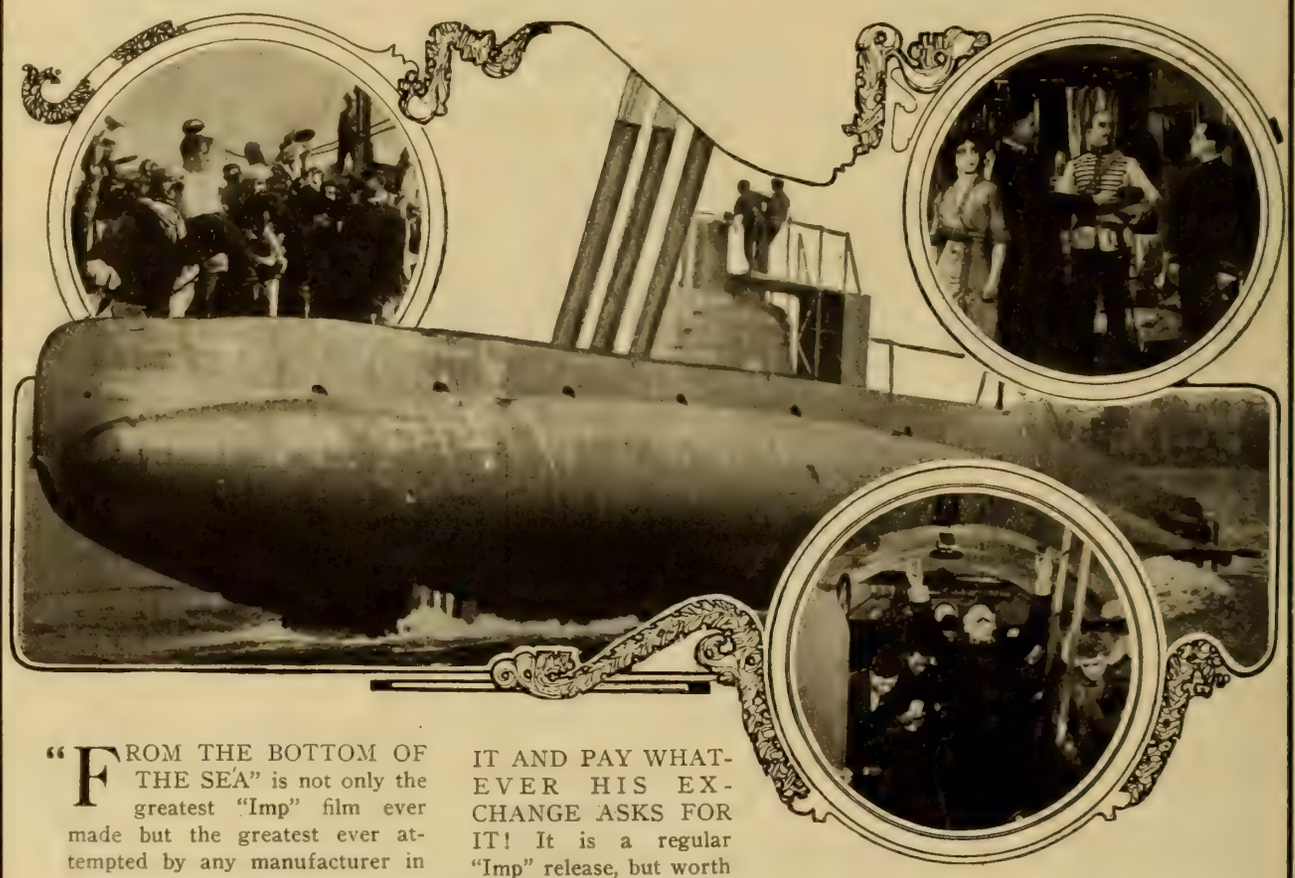
UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT HELPS THE "IMP" PRODUCE A MIGHTY 2,000-FOOT EDUCATIONAL DRAMA.



"FROM THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA" is not only the greatest "Imp" film ever made but the greatest ever attempted by any manufacturer in America. Not merely because it is two thousand feet long, but because of its thrilling plot, its masterly handling and its inestimable educational value. WE ADVISE EVERY EXHIBITOR TO GET IT AND PAY WHATEVER HIS EXCHANGE ASKS FOR IT! It is a regular "Imp" release, but worth infinitely more than many so-called "features." Don't be satisfied with a short booking. Repeat it and jam your house time after time! The plot deals with the treacherous sinking of a United States submarine torpedo boat. A young officer volunteers to save the crew by letting himself be shot through the torpedo tube while the boat is at the bottom of the sea. ALL THIS YOU SEE—and more. There's a love story weaving in and out to add to the heart interest. You see the submarine sink, rise and sink. You see the rescue and all the details just as though you were on the boat. Nothing like it has ever been attempted in moving pictures. GET IT AT ANY COST AND ANY EFFORT! Released Monday, Nov. 20. Two thousand feet long. SPECIAL POSTERS in keeping with the special nature of the film. Mark our word, "From the Bottom of the Sea," opens a new era in moving pictures made in America. You'll agree the instant you see the film. GET BUSY!

The "Imps" Splendid Thanksgiving Release

"Executive Clemency"

(Copyright 1911 by I. M. P. Co.)

King Baggott takes the leading role in our Thanksgiving film to be released Thursday, Nov. 23rd. Not only is it one of the strongest stories we have ever been fortunate enough to secure, but it has a happy ending in keeping with the holiday spirit of the occasion. The remarkable scenes in the prison yard, the exciting escape, the governor's pardon and the Thanksgiving dinner scene at the finale are all indescribably good. We told you Imp quality would be better than ever. AND WE'RE MAKING GOOD!

Watch! Wait! Listen!

More news about "THREE IMPS A WEEK" come in our next announcement. We'll tell you about "A-SPLIT-IMP-EVERY-SATURDAY" and some other things of interest to every moving picture man. Don't forget to send us suggestions for novelty split reels. Tell us what your people want and WE'LL GET IT!

will make your patrons return for another look. It really overthrows the common belief that they never come back—and you'll feel an uncommon relief at the first glance. It's a picture with the prettiest outdoor scenes that Nature or Rand & McNally ever turned out; a story with the voice of New York and the whisper of the country; an epic of the wilderness of mortar and steel, yet close to the hills—and your heart.

PICTURES and IDEAS

PICTURES are vital to your enterprise, good pictures doubly so. As to what or how you would classify the subject matter in order that the pictures measure up to your public's standard of good, may be a debatable proposition. The success of the producer depends upon his ability to gauge this demand; however, the one thing which is beyond debate as related to pictures is the idea or principle of exhibit of good pictures. No man can found a successful business in the average community with a line of pictures duplicating on his competitor.

Exclusive service embodies that idea or principle, and its value is beyond debate.

The National Programme—is exclusive; its pictures are in the main the product of factories which were organized in the pioneer days of the industry. These factories have lived, have grown, have prospered on their ability to measure public demand and in incorporating that demand in the pictures they produced.

We have recognized that good pictures are a necessity, but we have gone further; we have incorporated with good pictures an idea, "Exclusive Service," an idea, which conserves the paramount condition of success.

Success in any amusement enterprise depends upon the novelty of the production offered; novelty cannot be protected except through some form of control. Exclusive service gives this control.

The National programme means the pictures and the ideas which insures your business.

NATIONAL FILM DISTRIBUTING COMPANY

145 West 45th Street, New York City N. Y.

A Personal Letter from Mr. Herbert Miles, General Manager of the Republic Film Co.

November 8, 1911.

Bowing to the will of the majority of the exhibitors of this country, we have decided to change our methods of releasing two-reel feature films on the same day, and the REPUBLIC FILM COMPANY will therefore release one reel of its two-reel features on Saturday and the second reel on Sunday; thus giving the exhibitor an opportunity of featuring a master subject on the two best days of the week.

Eager to show some appreciation of the value of these splendid suggestions coming from the exhibitors of the country, unsolicited, and desiring to show deference to the opinion of the Executive Committee of the Exhibitors, League of America, it is our intention hereafter to let the exhibitor dictate the policy of the REPUBLIC FILM COMPANY in every way possible.

We want every exhibitor to write us suggesting which one of our big two-reel features shall be released first, and we also want you to write an advertisement that will appeal to all exhibitors advertising that particular subject.

Every successful exhibitor knows how to advertise to reach the public. He should also be able to tell us how to advertise so as to reach the exhibitors. You may submit an ad for each of the subjects on terms mentioned below and win more than one prize. The judges will be the New York advertising managers of the Billboard, Telegraph and Moving Picture News. The contest will close for the first prize November 25th, for the second prize, December 9th, and next fifteen, January 1st.

With thanks for the many kind expressions and promises of co-operation, we remain,

Yours for quality,
REPUBLIC FILM CO.

Herbert Miles

To the one sending in the best advertisement we will send $10.00, for the next best advertisement $5.00, and $1.00 each for the next fifteen advertisements. Read Mr. Miles' letter for full particulars.

The best machine is none too good for you if you're going in the moving picture business to stay.

If you're going to give good exhibitions, your machine is going to be busy all the time—a steady grind. You've got to have a machine good enough to withstand the wear and tear of constant work. If you start with a cheap machine, you'll have to buy a good machine later on—and that doubles up your outlay.

Make your purchase an investment for all time by starting with

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

The Best Motion Picture Machine Made

The Edison projects the clearest, steadiest pictures—none of the flicker, so hard on the eyes, that is the chief cause of failure of shows that use cheap machines. The Edison will outlast any other motion picture machine made. It is the simplest, the most accessible, and all parts are interchangeable.

THE PEER OF ALL

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

The table for lamphouse is provided with a substantial swing movement which instantaneously brings the lamp into optical center either with the M. P. Projection or Stereopticon lenses, and the Tilting arrangement giving ample latitude, is governed by the moving of the support through the arc provided at the back of the stand.

The base, at its center, rests on a device by which the machine can be swung to right or left, and the center of gravity of this stand, together with its table support, and in conjunction with the Head and lamphouse, owing to careful calculation provides a machine of perfect rigidity and freedom from all vibration.

THOROUGHLY FIREPROOF MACHINE

SIMPLEX SALES AGENCY,
23 East 14th Street, N. Y.

Denver, Colo., October 6, 1911.

Gentlemen:—We requested the Chief of the Fire Department of Denver to send a representative to this office to inspect the Simplex machine. He complied with our request and the examiner reported to the Chief that the Simplex machine was the ideal device for projecting motion pictures. Fire Chief Owens stated that he would recommend to the City Council that the various picture shows in Denver adopt this machine. We have been advised by the Chief's representatives that he would request the Insurance Company officials to call at this office and pass their opinion on the Simplex as a safety, fireproof machine.

Yours truly,

Facts and Comments

SOME years ago George Bernard Shaw drew this short and sharp and sweeping indictment against the English theater: "The conception of theatrical art as the exploitation of popular superstition and ignorance, as the thrilling of poor bumpkins with ghosts and blood, exciting them with blows and stabs, duping them with tawdry affectations of rank and rhetoric, thriving parasitically on their moral diseases instead of purging their souls and refining their senses. this is the tradition, that the theater finds it so hard to get away from." Such was the tradition, which the moving picture in its early history found it most difficult to get away from. Of course the moving picture of those days, having scarcely started into being, could have no tradition as such, but it inherited the traditions of some of the men, who then crowded into its ranks. The undesirable elements of the show world were largely represented. They neither knew nor cared anything about their responsibilities to the public, and seizing upon the wonderful invention much as vultures strike their prey, they applied to it all their crude, vulgar and offensive methods, too often discrediting the picture with the general public and giving it a reputation, which even the best efforts of the men, who later came into the business, has been unable to destroy entirely.

How profound the change has been from the early days to the present status was shown but recently by the emphatic condemnation by moving picture men in every branch of the industry of the attempt to film a person, made notorious through a murder trial. To the discerning eye of the friend of the moving picture, however, there are numerous other indications of its progress. The quality and the character of subjects now filmed would never lead one to believe, that the industry at one time had to contend for its very life against the traditions and the heritage of the dime museum, the penny arcade and the shooting gallery. Whatever may be said against the tyranny of trade organizations, it must be manifest to us at this distance of time, that the men who saw their inventions threatened as a property by the chaotic conditions of the market and the motley character of exploiters did a wise thing, not only for themselves, but for the industry at large by combining to put the business on a safe and sound basis and guarding its early growth and development. Whether the actuating motives were purely selfish or not, is irrelevant, as far as the results are concerned. Whether the industry has now outlived this guardianship, because of the vast changes in the personnel of the exhibitors and the more settled condition of affairs is another question, which was discussed in these columns but recently at considerable length.

While on this subject we believe it is due to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD to say that it has ever since the beginning of the industry set its face sternly against the enemies of the picture, both from within and from without, and has in no small measure helped to bring about higher ideals, better quality and a proper moral standard. We have always stood for the dignity and the higher destiny of the cinematograph, and if today a healthy tone and an atmosphere of dignity surrounds the moving picture we believe ourselves justly entitled to some share of the credit. The accusation so fairly made by Shaw against the English stage will not lie against the moving picture in this country. It has purged itself successfully of its early baneful enemies within the ranks and has begun its career of positive achievement. The future will furnish proof, that it is an art as well as an industry.

We have received a letter from a lady, a writer of scenarios, protesting against "too much hugging and kissing on the screen." Our correspondent says: . . . "at the end, when the climax comes and the lovers gain the victory, they hug and kiss and squeeze up to each other in a most disgusting manner." There is merit in this protest. Some liberty must be conceded in love-making; the gushing heroine will throw herself on "Jack's" manly bosom or neck and nestle there a wee bit. An occasional kiss or embrace is unobjectionable, but more than this conventional display of love in public is "de trop." As a rule our young people show laudable restraint and discretion in love-making when other persons are around, no matter how nearly related, and the love-making on the screen is of course always public, being witnessed by millions every night. To people, in whom the Anglo-Saxon strain predominates, the man-hunting female, so common in foreign pictures, is an abomination. We still believe as a nation, that woman's consent to wifehood should be accompanied by "sweet, reluctant, amorous delay." Anything that savors of the brazen or the immodest should never for a moment be tolerated in the moving picture film. We believe, that the great majority of producers in this country have paid due respect to the decent conventions of modern society.

A little sense of humor and a small part of that discretion, which thinks before acting or writing, would have saved us the appeal to the Secretary of State at Washington anent the refusal of a Canadian board of censors to permit the display of the stars and stripes in films to be exhibited in Canada. Even if the appeal was made for advertising purposes, it was not well advised. What is the Secretary of State to do? Refer the matter to the International Board of Arbitration and Peace at the Hague and failing to get redress there mobilize the boy scouts and mass them on the Canadian border with secret marching orders? It is a blessed thing we do not stand on the eve of a national campaign with a secretary like the late James G. Blaine, otherwise the thing might become a national issue. The agonized roar of the British lion might be heard in the land, as patriots would take turns in twisting the animal's tail. Let us laugh about it and forget and forgive. Any impartial jury will decide that the "drinks are on the other fellows."

Just a line to give proper credit to William Lord Wright, the author of that delicious bit of photoplay lyrics, entitled "The Scenario Writer," which was published on page 467 of last week's issue of the Moving Picture World. The omission of Mr. Wright's name was purely accidental.

The Added Attraction

Article I.

By W. Stephen Bush.

IT has always been felt, that the moving picture without any added attraction whatever was insufficient as a popular amusement. The picture needed a frame. From the earliest days music was considered indispensable and it was not long before more added attractions were sought, such as singing, lectures, vaudeville and sound effects.

In seeking the added attraction, exhibitors, often unconsciously, were guided by the vague, but very strong instinct, that the human voice, not an artificial reproduction of it, but the human living voice must be enlisted in aid of their entertainment. "Talking pictures" and the cameraphone and the illustrated song owed their fleeting vogue to this instinctive feeling, that the human voice was in some manner necessary to the moving picture entertainment. Today talking pictures are forgotten and the cameraphone is chiefly remembered by those investors and exhibitors, who lost money in the venture. The illustrated song is clearly on the wane and many exhibitors dispense with it altogether, always to the delight of their audiences. The mystery of cheap vaudeville in moving picture theaters is to be explained by this misdirected desire to introduce the human voice, and cheap vaudeville as an added attraction is losing ground every day.

It may therefore be said in all fairness, that the efforts, heretofore made to make the human voice a pleasing and effective part of the moving picture performance, have been attended by failure. Does this mean, that after all the human voice has no place in the entertainment? Not by any manner of means. It means simply this: All the efforts and energies in enlisting the voice as an added attraction have been misconceived and misdirected. In other words: the frame in order to be an added attraction must be suitable to the picture. The added attraction must grow out of the moving picture, must be a natural and logical part of it and must be in harmony with the character of the entertainment. The moving picture must remain the principal thing, nothing must be done to take the attention away from it and everything must be done to center the attention upon it as the main feature. Tried by this test the "talking pictures" and the cameraphone would seem to be proper accompaniments, but there are two fatal objections. It means the piling of illusion upon illusion, shadowy figures talking mysteriously. The entertainment becomes spooky and heavy to the point of absurdity. Moreover, the living talkers behind the screen cannot possibly preserve the illusion absolutely and the least defect not only destroys the illusion, but causes a most unpleasant rebound from pleasure to annoyance. The machine-made voice is a better synchronizer, perhaps, but the first objection of spookiness still remains, and a perfect reproduction of the human voice in a synchronizing machine has yet to be invented. The best mechanical device obtainable will always surer from an inability to reproduce the human voice with the same perfection, with which the photograph reproduces the picture of the human being. I might add, that the cost of a perfected machinery would be enormous. The illustrated song and vaudeville have no natural and logical connection with the picture at all, they divert the attention from the picture instead of adding to its attraction as a picture.

There remains to be considered one more method of introducing the human voice—the lecture, and this we propose to analyze at some length, our object being to aid the exhibitor in developing a means of added profits and added prestige. First of all: How does the lecture stand the test proposed above? It seems to stand the test in every respect. It helps to make the picture, as such, more attractive; it is in entire harmony with the entertainment; it centers the attention upon the picture. It implies the aids of intelligence and education, two factors, which I am bound to believe, must help any entertainment addressing itself to the senses and the thinking powers of an audience. There are many pictures, which fall flat entirely without a lecture and there are many more, possessing either great dramatic power or historical or literary interest, which are a hundred times better understood and therefore better enjoyed with the aid of human speech and intelligence than without such aids. Imagine a man going through the art gallery of the Louvre, in Paris, the most wonderful institution of its kind in the world, without either guide or guide book. He will come back from his sight-seeing, bewildered and tired, knowing that he has seen many marvelous things, but without any sense of real enjoyment.

The explanatory lecture therefore is valuable, but it is by no means the realization of the best possibilities of a lecture on the better and greater kind of pictures. These possibilities are reserved to the drama, be it of the classic or the modern variety. Let us, to illustrate my point practically, walk into a moving picture theater, while the entertainment is in progress. It makes no difference, whether the audience is of the so-called better kind or composed of just plain people, such as constitute the great majority of the patrons of the picture. A drama is being enacted on the screen. The moment the first scene is flashed on the screen every human being there begins to think—in other words, to talk with himself. The mother will seek to explain what she sees to the children, friends or groups of friends will, in subdued tones, comment upon the action of the play to each other and strangers, forgetting themselves for the moment, will communicate the feelings evoked by the play to one another. Now let a man stand beside the screen, one who has studied the picture patiently and thoroughly and has understood and mastered all its points of beauty and power, and let that man's voice and heart run with the picture and what will be the result? Instantly the subdued talking will cease, a profound silence will succeed and the talker, becoming the mouthpiece of every beating human heart in that audience, will be followed with rapt attention and when the picture comes to an end the spectator experiences the sensation of having been at a "real play."

Now such a lecture is both in the highest sense of the word explanatory and dramatic at the same time. The idea, all too prevalent among the majority of exhibitors, that the lecture is a concession, grudgingly made to the "high brow" element and to be confined to so-called educational subjects, is one of the most deplorable errors of the time. Just the contrary is the case. The lecture is a distinctly popular feature, that is to say, it intends to appeal to the ordinary moving picture audience. It is good, plain, wholesome fare, not a delicacy to be reserved for the privileged few. The impression, that the lecture is a dry affair, more often than not above the heads of the ordinary audience at a moving picture entertainment, is a survival of the old stereopticon lecture, which was most of the time a dry affair indeed. It requires comparatively little skill to talk with stereopticon slides, because the speaker controls the slide and can hold it or dismiss it at his own pleasure. It is entirely different with the man, who essays on and with the moving pictures, because here the speaker must subordinate himself to the picture and must make the most of the few seconds or minutes, that are allowed to him in explaining or emphasizing or reciting. If he does not talk in exact conformity with the picture, if he fails to seize the proper moment, if he goes the fraction of a second too slow or too fast the best effect is not produced. Dullness or dryness under the circumstances is therefore impossible. All must be swift, the words must move as fast as the picture. When the thing is well done, the combination of the moving picture and the living voice constitute a novel and very fine entertainment.

In my next article I propose to go into the question of what pictures are most suitable to lectures and to what extent therefore the exhibitor will be able to avail himself of the benefits of such lectures.

Stingy Leaders.

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

IT is one of the accepted rules of photoplay writing that leaders and letters must be cut down to the lowest possible number of words, and as a broad proposition the rule holds good, but there is danger that this economy of words will be overdone into stinginess of phrase.

The photoplay public goes to the theater to see the pictures and it should be given pictures, but it wants pictures that may be understood, pictures that are clearly and carefully explained, and there are times when the lack of a few words of leader leave the spectator uncertain as to the exact meaning of the story. Each word means a foot or a second lost from the film, but it is better to take ten feet from the film that the story may be made clear than to give the spectator ten feet of picture additional and render the entire thousand feet uncertain and obscure. In this fad for trimming out unnecessary words some editors appear to have reached the point where they also eliminate the necessary words as well.

The abrupt, uncertain statement is as irritating as the unexplained incident, and the clipped captions may hurt the play as much as the omitted scenes that sometimes are left out to condense the film into release length.

The result is even more noticeable in the matter of letters. The letter is a useful mans of getting over an explanation and its use is less apt to be resented than the leader, because it appears to be a part of the action. It takes a little more film than the leader, but it is worth while, though not when the letter becomes more abrupt than the ten-word telegram.

To cite a case in point in a film recently released, much of the action found its point in a letter appearing well toward the end of the play. The letter was concise and carefully worded, but sufficiently ample to fully explain and so worded as to clinch the laughs. It ran perhaps 25 feet in the original, but it not only pointed up the other laughs; it brought a fresh laugh of its own.

In the studio the space miser got to work on the letter. He gained ten feet of film, but he lost not only the laugh that was in the letter, but the cumulative effect of the earlier scenes and left the phrases clipped and barren. He saw only the ten feet saved. He did not realize that he had lost more than he had gained.

Thirty or forty feet will be allowed a comedy scene that ends in a single laugh. Fifty feet will be permitted the director for a purely explanatory scene that contains no laughs, but which serves to start the story. The twenty-five foot letter contained both explanation and a laugh. The condensed version neither explained nor entertained. It was merely a disjointed series of sentences without effct that was palpaby a skeletonized film letter.

If a laugh is worth thirty and an explanation fifty, is it not reasonable to argue that a twenty-five foot letter that is both explanation and laugh is really a saving of 55 feet of film and not the waste of ten?

A producer may spend a couple of hours trying to make his script seem real. He may spend money for small details that add to the realism of a setting. His constant aim is to create an atmosphere of reality and then, when the picture comes upon the screen, the atmosphere is lost through the bobtailed leader and shorthand letters. Perhaps the letters are made still more unconvincing because they are printed from script type instead of being actually written or the letters of several persons may appear to be in the same handwriting and lose the last vestige of individuality through lack of variety.

In one recent production a character writes an answer upon a letter just read. Both letter and reply were in the same rounded hand, a hand easily and quickly read, but a penmanship unsexed—neither masculine or femenine. For the moment the atmosphere of reality was lost to gain perhaps five seconds through the supposed legibility of the handwriting.

Such practices are absurd and hurtful. The terse, effective leader is greatly to be desired against the verbose explanation, but when the leader is so exceedingly brief as no longer to be intelligible, then the leader ceases to serve its purpose and becomes worse than useless.

With letters and inserts the situation is worse. It would mean some more work were the letters made to seem real, but the two and three line letters are irritations. When the woman of fashion sits at the dainty desk in her boudoir and dashes off the perfumed note that a moment later is seen upon the screen, it is something of a shock to find that she writes a hand like the office boy, writes the wrong way of a sheet of typewriter paper and expresses herself with a brevity that would disgrace a coded press dispatch.

It would be a little more trouble to find some girl in the printing room who would write on a sheet of note paper of the fashionable sort, and it might be easy to plan a letter that would sound right and yet be brief, but the result would be well worth while.

At least two companies type all of their letters upon a billing machine that does not even look like a typewriter, and this is done even though it is shown on the screen that the letter was written with a pen. This seems to reach the height of absurdity, but it is no more inconsistent than the letters of another company printed from type, or of still another in which everything from note to proclamation is spaced to exactly fill the frame. Why not return to the Elizabethan stage with its printed signs? If reality is desirable, why not have it extend to the letters and why not allow reasonable space for leaders that will not be so abrupt as to make a puzzle picture of the photoplay?

It is time something were done, for these matters grow steadily worse as time passes.

It is no agony to plead guilty to a fault which is the outgrowth of a misapplied truth. In an interesting article which appeared in a New York magazine recently, it was shown how it is possible for a gentleman leaving home in the morning, to become liable to heavy fines, even to a short term of imprisonment, before arriving home again in the evening; only by observing common practices of life with thousands of others doing the same thing. When the microscope of officialism, statistical detail, paid professional research is brought to bear on any person, persons or cause, it is easy to discover gross neglect if not positive wrong, making one remember certain words from a high authority who, under the stress of such conscientious espionage, exclaimed, "O Lord, if thou art extreme to mark all that is done, who shall stand?" We have abroad in the land those who are extreme to "mark all that is done amiss" according to their little hobby. The truant who neglects school for the moving picture is teaching a lesson to his equally delinquent superior, for says one official, "That boy has shown us that the picture is more interesting than the school."

This is a wise official, not in New Jersey, but in Nebraska; "let us put pictures in our schools and we turn truants into scholars." This is a splendid way of pleading guilty. To judge by a cause is wise, to judge and condemn only by an effect is not only unwise but an abuse of officialism which makes reports upon which reforms are sought." Is the boy who steals his mother's sugar a thief? Should he be so catalogued and the list of state criminals be enlarged? If so, put down every boy and girl as criminal, for they are all guilty of some such terrible crime. NO! emphatically, No! The moving pictures are not either increasing delinquency among juveniles or causing crime; they are revealing social conditions, and call loudly for the situation to be handled wisely and well. Every evil suggests an adjustment; every wrong a correction; even as every pain calls for relief and every disease a cure. Please, state-paid officials with the microscopic eye, stop criticising, but use your office to suggest causes and effects needing adjustments, and you will render public service.

Reviews of Notable Films

THE AWAKENING OF JOHN BOND (Edison).

THE Edison Company surely deserves praise, not only from the patrons of the picture play, but from the moving picture trade in general. Almost single handed they have stemmed the tide of hostile newspaper criticism by the production of occasional pictures with a mission. "The Awakening of John Bond" is the second of the kind that has to do with the great problem of tuberculosis in cities. About a year ago, at the behest of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, the Edison Company produced a picture entitled "The Red Cross Seal" and, later, another entitled "The Man Who Learned," dealing with the pure milk question. These two subjects were not made with any expectations of large financial reward, but rather as the Edison contribution to a worthy cause, as well as to do their share in the educational work of moving pictures. These two pictures, together with Gaumont's "Fly Pest," and Pathe's "Boil Your Water," have been doing duty steadily on the same programs for more than a year.

About a year ago this time, the American press in general was assailing the moving picture unsparingly, finding upon the whole little in them that was lasting or wholesome or serving any good purpose. There were many newspapers that conceded the possibilities of the moving picture, but so far no film maker had come forward with anything that could be considered a contribution toward the sum total of human knowledge, until these films with a mission began to appear. These pictures were the entering wedge that pierced the hard shell of conservatism and in less than a year have pried it wide open and forced the recognition of the motion picture by the press, university, state, church and laity as the greatest educational agency since the discovery of the art of printing.

A notable film, therefore, is "The Awakening of John Bond." It is a film with a mission, and a very worthy one. Its principal object is to disseminate information as to what becomes of the money that is received from the sale of Red Cross stamps at holiday time. Incidentally it teaches a lesson to selfish property owners who neglect everything about their tenement properties except the collection of rents. John Bond was such a man. He didn't care the snap of his finger how many unfortunate souls lived and died of dread consumption in his tenements; all he wanted was rent, until one day his selfishness was brought directly home to him and he began to see things in another light. The story is cleverly put together and is exceedingly well acted in the best Edison fashion. The plot has to do with the dealings of John Bond with the O'Brien family, who were tubercular tenants of his. Their unfortunate condition was a matter of indifference to him. One day John Bond took unto himself a bride. On the same day George O'Brien shipped as a common seaman on Bond's yacht, which was used for the honeymoon. On the voyage young O'Brien succumbed to the ravages of tuberculosis. During his last illness Mrs. Bond nursed the young man and contracted the disease herself, and from that time on John Bond was obliged to view the tuberculosis question from quite a different angle than before.

Step by step we observe the awakening of John Bond. The picture becomes intensely dramatic as it proceeds. The big dramatic scene is when Nellie O'Brien calls by request upon Mrs. Bond to receive the trinkets bequeathed by her brother in care of that very good lady. There in his mansion Nellie comes face to face with her heartless landlord. The sight of him is sufficient to send the girl into hysterics, and Mrs. Bond becomes aware of how her husband's money is really made; after which she takes a hand in the matter and assists in his awakening. The work of Mary Fuller as Nellie O'Brien is a masterpiece. At the beginning a perfect portrayal of quiet submission, it changes in a flash to the violent outpouring of a burdened soul. Seldom do we see such splendid examples of dynamics as this one. John Bond was typical and well personified by Bigelow Cooper. George O'Brien was a short but well acted part by Harold M. Shaw. Mrs. Bond was done by Miriam Nesbitt, leaving nothing to be desired.

"ARRAH-NA-POGUE" (Kalem).
(In Three Reels.)

AFTER the remarkable reception that has been given the Kalem Company's "The Colleen Bawn," which has been crowding photoplay theaters in whatever part of the country it has been shown, it is hardly necessary to urge the popularity of these Irish subjects. The record thus far is an enviable one and one of which both the Kalem Company and its players may feel reasonably proud. We introduce, therefore, the latest subject, entitled "Arrah-Na-Pogue," feeling that anything we can say will be surperfluous and that its success is already assured.

"Arrah-Na-Pogue" is another of Dion Boucicault's romantic Irish dramas and one which has had some vogue in its day. It was written at a time when rebellion was rife and British rule was oppressive in Ireland. The period is about the same as for "The Colleen Bawn," and the scenes of the picture were taken in the same locality, as primitive today as they were when the supposed characters were living. Thanks to the careful work of the producer those scenes and characters have been preserved in all their primitive quaintness and simplicity in the pictures.

The drama is in three acts and covers a lapse of time of about thirty hours. In that time much happens and that fact gives action to this picture. The Kalem players have added a prologue to the written version which goes back to the time when Arrah Mellish aided the escape from prison of her foster brother, Beamish McCoul, by passing a message to him with a kiss, for which she was given the name "Arrah-Na-Pogue," or, Arrah of the Kiss. Then the events of the play follow in regular order. Beamish McCoul has returned from exile at the request of his sweetheart, Fanny Power, and is to take her back to France with him. He robs Feeny of the proceeds of the estate and gives some of the money to Arrah as a wedding present, for she is to marry Shaun the Post on the following day.

Feeny happens along and sees the notes in Arrah's possession and at once believes that Shaun helped rob him. He is in love with Arrah, himself, and sees a good chance to get Shaun out of the way and get his money back at the same time. Shaun is arrested and tried for the crime and sentenced to be hung.

Through some mischance Fanny gets the idea that Beamish is untrue and she fails to carry out her part of the plan to marry and leave the country. She does not keep her appointment, but sends a messenger accusing Beamish of unfaithfulness. The same messenger tells Beamish that Shaun has been sentenced to death for robbing Feeny. He decides to go to the secretary of state and give himself up to save Shaun for Arrah.

In the meantime Fanny discovers that there is no ground for her jealousy and she promises to marry Captain O'Grady, her guardian, if he will use his good offices to secure Shaun's release. Later, when she hears what Beamish has done, she hastens to the secretary, also. So it happens that Beamish, O'Grady and Fanny call on the secretary at the same time. This gives an opportunity for a bit of comedy which has been well improved by the Kalem players. In the end the secretary grants the pardon requested and the three post back to save Shaun.

While Shaun's friends have been interceding for him Arrah has also been trying to console him. She gains the parapet of the jail in which he is confined and drops a note to him down the chimney. This and the sound of Arrah's voice, rouses Shaun to action; he breaks his bonds, tears the bars from the jail window and climbs the ivy-covered wall to the roof of the jail. Feeny, who has been seeking Arrah, is there before him and has threatened to kill Shaun if Arrah does not run away with him. He is about to drop a stone on Shaun's head when Arrah grapples with him and succeeds in holding him till Shaun arrives and throws the rascal over the parapet into the lake below. Shaun is afterward discovered by O'Grady and the soldiers, and advised of his pardon and the scene ends happily for everybody, except Feeny, who was drowned.

The cast is as follows:

Arrah-Na-Pogue	Miss Gauntier
Fanny Power	Miss Agnes Mapes
Shaun the Post	Mr. Olcott
Beamish McCoul	Mr. Jack Clark
O'Grady	Mr. Arthur Donaldson
Major Coffin and Secretary of State	Mr. F. P. McGowan
Feeny	Mr. Robert Vignola

The character portrayal of Feeny by Mr. Vignola stands out as the best bit of picture acting in this subject, and the brief appearance of Mr. McGowan as the Secretary of State is as good as anything he has ever done in pictures—it fairly speaks out from the canvas. Though the parts of Shaun and Arrah do not attract quite so much attention to Mr. Olcott and Miss Gauntier, as did their parts in "The Colleen Bawn," they are very pleasing in their portrayal of those characters. Mr. Donaldson's O'Grady is fine, and Miss Mapes is especially worthy of commendation as Fanny Power, which character she has raised to the dignity of a leading part in the picture. Her manner is charming and dignified throughout.

There is not a dull moment in the entire three reels of this subject and there are many situations that are intensely gripping. For sustained action it is the best three-reel subject we have seen up-to-date.

Special Music for "Arrah-Na-Pogue."

Walter C. Simons has been engaged by the Kalem Company to write a complete piano score for "Arrah-Na-Pouge." He will also prepare a four-piece orchestration for the same subject. The arrangement for piano and orchestra will be published by the Kalem Company and sold to exhibitors at a nominal price to cover the bare cost of production. The music will be ready for distribution Nov. 21. Mr. Simons has had long experience as a pianist and composer and has been playing the pictures for several years.

"HIS VACATION" (Nestor).

An enjoyable comedy of the knockabout type has been produced by the Nestor Company under the title "His Vacation." This is no time to quarrel with the Nestor people regarding their titles, but there is an opportunity for them to make a change that would be appreciated. The "His" to whom the vacation is attached is given the name of "Count de Ribboni." The count is introduced as the real thing in a rural community and butts into the middle of things, seriously interfering with the love affair of a young and stalwart blacksmith. Abetted by her mother the young blacksmith's sweetheart starts a lively flirtation with the count, turning a cold shoulder upon her lover. Fortunately for the lover, the count gets in bad with the girl's small brother. Lover and brother form an alliance against the count and the things they do to him provide many hearty laughs.

The climax comes when the count takes the girl out rowing in a boat which has been "fixed" by the young brother. It swamps and the occupants are rescued by the lover, who at once comes into his own, for the girl has no further use for the count. In a concluding scene the count is revealed in his natural role of clerk of the ribbon counter, where he is discovered by the lovers who have come to town on a shopping excursion. The count is so flustered by the recognition that he gets all mixed up in the ribbons and is finally kicked out of the place by an irate manager.

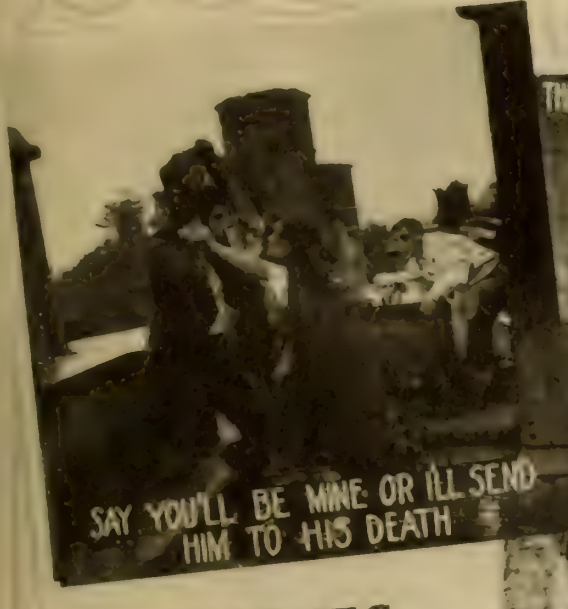
This subject is one that should be welcomed by exchange men and exhibitors, for it is certain to make a hit with the picture fans.

IMP SCENARIO DEPARTMENT MOVES.

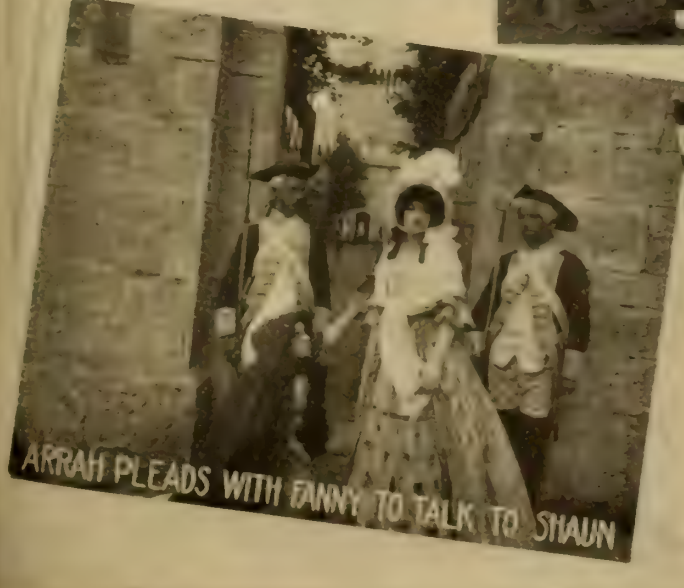
Mr. C. B. Hoadley, editor of the scenario department of the Imp Company, and his staff of assistants, have moved from the studio on West 56th Street to the company's headquarters, 102 West 101st Street, New York City. Persons having business with that department are requested to communicate with Mr. Hoadley at the new address.

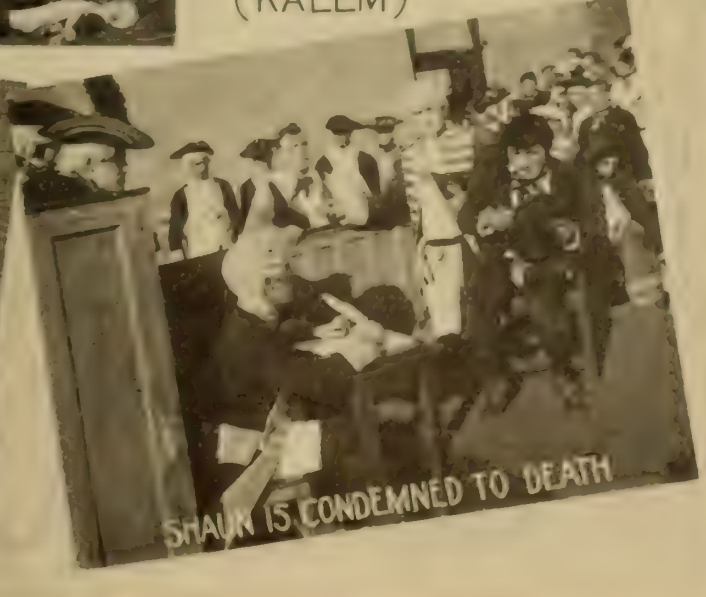
MAJESTIC PLAYERS HEADED FOR CALIFORNIA.

Two companies of picture players under the bright new banner of the Majestic Motion Picture Company are on their way west, bound for the picture man's paradise—California. The companies are in charge of directors Owen Moore and David Miles, and include such well known players as Mary Pickford, Herbert Prior and Mabel Trunnelle.



SCENES FROM ARRAH NA POGUE (KALEM)





The Song and the Singer

By CLARENCE E. SINN

MORE than 15,000 moving picture theaters in this country; nearly all employ one or more singers. Allowing two singers for every three houses would mean something like 22,500 singers "plugging" songs every day in these 15,000 picture houses. How many times a day? We can get an approximate answer to that. In the cities some of the houses run as high as eighteen shows a day. In the outlying districts and in the smaller towns only three shows and sometimes as low as two shows per day is the custom. The average of two and eighteen is ten shows per day. Just to give a good wide safe margin call it nine shows per day. Fifteen thousand theaters giving on an average of nine shows daily means that about 135,000 different audiences are being entertained every day by these 22,500 singers. One hundred and thirty-five thousand totally different crowds of from one to eight hundred people each. (Notice how conservative I am; some houses seat much more.) When we remember the large territory permitting Sunday shows, where extra performances are given —all the way from a single matinee to a "continuous"—you can see that it is no exaggeration to say millions of people are entertained each week at the moving picture theaters. What a power for advertising purposes! That a great many music publishers recognize its value is evident from the fact that most of them employ a staff of singers whose duty consists in part of "plugging" songs in houses of this class. But they only cover the cities and larger towns. These singers form only a fair-sized minority of the 225,000 . The great majority in the 15,000 theaters are working "on their own hook" and often find it difficult to keep up-to-date in their songs. Judging from some communications I have received, the song publishers' advertising does not always cover the small town very thoroughly. Now the singer in this place is confined to the town during the period of her engagement and has little or no opportunity of visiting neighboring cities.

Marjorie O'Brien Singing "Oh, That Musical Dream"—Pub. by Betts & Binner.

The wide-awake element in the town does occasionally visit the neighboring city or town and there hears the new songs which have not yet reached their own town. The point I am trying to make is that the professional singer in the small town who should introduce the latest songs to her public is often among the last to hear them. And it must be remembered that her public is a potential buyer. It might surprise music publishers to know that there are professional singers whom their advertising does not reach. I have received a few letters in the past asking information regarding new songs, and expect to get more such. In fact, it was this which suggested the opening of this department, which will be conducted primarily in the interest of the singer. Correspondence solicited and information cheerfully given. Address "The Song and the Singer," Moving Picture World, 169 W. Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

The little lady whose picture graces the page today is Miss Marjorie O'Brien, who is featuring some of the songs from the catalogue of Betts & Binner, among them being "Oh, That Musical Dream." Miss O'Brien is well known among professional singers, and it goes without saying that she is making good with her present repertoire.

"Oh, That Musical Dream" is the name of a new-born song of which George Little and Jerry Sullivan are the proud and happy parents, and the music firm of Betts & Binner stand as god-fathers and sponsors. This is the first "rag" number ever published by Betts & Binner. Heretofore this conservative firm has made ballads and semi-classical songs the leading feature of its catalog, but they feel that in "Oh, That Musical Dream" they have acquired a piece of property which is really worth while, hence their departure from their regular routine. Mr. Don Meachy, formerly of the New York Telegram, is press agent for Betts & Binner. This gentleman is another recent acquisition to the firm and is a live wire. Through his energetic energy and hustling hustles, the B. & B. songs are being placed in most capable hands. He says "Oh, That Musical Dream" is surely a comer; more—he says it has already "came." "There's nothing to it—the song exploits itself," says he. "Why, it's just crying to go out in the world and let people sing it." I wonder how many folks realize what a lot of other folks it takes to make and market a song. Take "Oh, That Musical Dream" as an illustration. First are the creators, Geo. Little and Jerry Sullivan. Next are the publishers, Betts & Binner. Then the man who exploits the song, Mr. Don Meaney. Next, but a long way from last, are the people who sing the song—the boosters. Any performer who is putting over a good song is "boosting" the song whether he happens to be on the publishers' payroll or not, and a large percentage of them are not. This remark is inserted to allay any misapprehension if a performer should perchance be mentioned as "boosting" a song. The term is used advisedly.

These excellent artists are now handling Betts & Binner songs, including "Oh, That Musical Dream": Miss June Imes, now playing the Orpheum time, Portland, Ore., this week. Miss Ethel MacDonough, formerly "The Divine Myrma," playing the W. V. M. A. time. Miss MacDonough played the American Music Hall last season and was held over for two weeks here. Her act at that time was a diving act, but she has now substituted a straight singing turn and is using "Oh, That Musical Dream" with great success. The Great Lester is another one to be added to the list of Mr. Meaney. Also Sherman Hyman and Van Shaick, the three Chicago entertainers who will play the Majestic Theater shortly as the headline attraction.

With such people as these handling their songs, we can look forward to seeing Betts & Binner among the foremost publishers in a very short time.

Notes from M. Witmark & Sons tell us that "The Premier Quartette," whose excellent voices and perfect harmony are rapidly carrying them to the top wave of popular success, are taking encores with the big song hit, "Baby Rose." They are also singing the new ballad, "Good-Bye, My Love, Good-Bye," by Ernest Ball.

Cohan & Young are scoring on the Orpheum time with "Where the River Shannon Flows" and the new Jewish hit: "Never Mind the Family Tree."

Miss Rita Hamlin, who is a very clever little lady doing boy impersonations, is making a hit with "I want a Regular Pal for a Gal" and "Ragtime Love."

Miss Daisy Collins at the Monogram Theater and States Restaurant this week is using a number of Witmark songs: "Santanitza," "Good-Bye, My Love, Good-Bye," and "In the Garden of My Heart."

Sampson & Reilly, the talented singing couple, are meeting with popular favor on the Orpheum circuit. They are singing "Good-Bye, My Love, Good-Bye."

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

FOLLOWING the suggestions recently made in this department, Mr. L. J. Wittman, of the Star Amusement Company, Hamilton, Ohio, is trying the cut-price ticket for matinee business and early evening performances. The tickets are limited in effect to the current month, must be presented before 6.30 and are not good on Saturday or Sunday. Mr. Wittman, who has established four houses, two of which he sold, promises to advise as to the results obtained through the use of the scheme, and his experience should give weight to his observations.

Mr. Wittman lacks the co-operation of a classy typesetter, apparently, for a four-page folder he sends is not advantageously displayed, though he has supplied good copy where more than the title and underline of the film is used. The folder gives a week's releases, with special space to the Friday and Saturday feature, in this case, "Colleen Bawn," which is well played up.

He uses a daily advertisement of one inch across page, which permits the space being divided into boxes for the different days. This is a handy arrangement, but it might be objected that it does not give a good display to the name of the theater, where an advertisement across two columns and dropping down three and a half inches would permit the name to be thrown up at the top of the space and still permit the use of single and double column boxes. One section of the advertisement shows that he is able to meet the time table difficulty. It reads, "Show starts promptly at 1 P. M. and on the even hour thereafter until 10 P. M." It might be offered that "on the even hour" might mean two, four, six, eight and ten o'clock, instead of the hourly show. "Every hour, on the hour" might be more definite.

Special advertising is done for big releases, a double column advertisement being carried for "Colleen Bawn," and reading notices to back up the advertising, show that Mr. Wittman is alert to his opportunities.

Apparently he likes the "We don't stop for supper" as well as the writer does, for it appears twice in the advertising sent.

Lost Without the World.

Mr. Wittman writes that he is a pioneer exhibitor in Hamilton, as well as the youngest, having started his first house more than four years ago. He adds, "I have been a constant reader of the World all this time and find it invaluable; in fact, I am lost without it, for it is the most reliable of them all."

The Moving Picture World is invaluable to any live exhibitor, for no man can run his house properly unless he keeps posted on the pictures and the only way to keep posted is to read this paper. The intelligent use of the trade paper in any line is a sign of progressiveness, but the motion picture business is peculiarly one demanding of its followers a knowledge of affairs. Mr. Wittman not only reads the World but uses it, which is more important.

Another Advance Booklet.

Another advance booklet, giving the films for two weeks comes from F. J. McWilliams, manager of the Bijou Theater, La Crosse, Wis. The folded card is only 2½ by 4 inches, but well-chosen type faces give good front page display and legible programs. It is on heavy greyish-brown card printed in deep brown ink and presents a really handsome appearance. The back page is given over to the advertisement of a shoe store and while prices are not quoted it is to be presumed that the advertisement brings the price down to a reasonable figure. For advertising such as this, where the card is to be carried for a couple of weeks, it pays to use good stock, that the matter may retain its form until its usefulness is ended. The present card leaves nothing to be desired in this respect. Apparently Mr. McWilliams finds that the features pay, for "Foul Play" and the "Two Orphans" are both scheduled for the same week. The front reads:

Compliments of
The Bijou
F. J. McWilliams
Two weeks
Valuable Information

There is something about the entire booklet that inspires the stranger with respect for the house.

Get a Good Printer.

Managers are more or less at the mercy of the printer, for the best lines may lose half their value if they are not "played up" properly. Most "job" men take an honest pride in their work, but not all, and when a printer's idea is to see how quickly he can get something into type and get onto the next job it's up to the manager to get in action. Action may mean trying another printing office or it may mean a chat with the boss and a demand for better work.

If the manager promises to be a regular customer the printer will supply him with samples of the different type faces on hand and possibly "prove up" the stock ornamentations. With these the exhibitor may be able to supply the intelligence the compositor lacks and indicate the styles of type for the different lines. If you have plenty of space up and down, but not much across the surface, ask for condensed type, or in a reverse case get extended type that is broader than it is long. Fit the type to the space and do not try too many faces. Types like the Cheltenham or De Vinne come in a number of styles and sizes and will give variety to the page without offering the appearance of a crazy quilt. You can have big, black lines, and thin, light ones and all in between, but the page will look harmonious because all of the type is designed along the same lines. If you find something you like stick to it and make it a sort of trade mark.

Be Distinctive.

If you want a lesson in the value of trade marks, look at your films. If you see a liberty bell you don't have to be told that it is a Lubin and a sun rise shrieks at you that it is a Solax before you can see the lettering. Have some distinctive mark and put it on everything you have. Stick it on the front of your box office, put it on your electric sign, paint it in the corners of the screen, put it on your letter heads, in your advertisements, on the collar of your doorkeeper's coat, on the sleeves of your usher's jackets. If it's worth thousands of dollars to the national advertisers to establish their trade mark in the minds of everyone it's as important to you to have a distinctive mark. Have some cuts made and use them in your advertising. Get something that will suggest your house the moment it is seen, but get something original and not likely to be copied; something that is appropriate to the house.

Starting in Right.

The National Theater, Fulton, W. Va., recently opened, and before the opening it was announced that the person making the nearest estimate to the attendance on the opening day would be given a pass good for four months. Passes for three and two months were second and third prizes. The idea probably was suggested by the Montgomery plan outlined some weeks ago, but adapted to local use.

The idea not only attracted attention locally, but was made a press dispatch to other parts of the state, and while this last did not have much direct bearing on the results, the moral effect cannot be otherwise than good.

The scheme offers many good points. Since no entrance fee is charged everybody can make guesses, and therefore a majority of the people are interested in the house before it opens. They will want to be there the opening day to see whether they have guessed high or low, and they will watch for the announcement of the results. It gives the theater a running start at a comparatively small expense.

Ten, or even twenty-five monthly passes would have been better still, in addition to the larger prizes, since the hardest thing is to get the crowd coming to the new place. Where such a scheme is used it might be well to provide a plan whereby the same ticket cannot be used more than once each day. Where the tickets are few a ruled sheet in the box office with the days of the month which are crossed off as each pass is honored will suffice, but the pass should carry the stipulation that it cannot be used more than once daily else it is liable to be made to serve two, or even three persons. The National is starting in right.

Again the Tenth Street.

The Tenth Street Theater, Kansas City, seems to have come to the conclusion that its present front page will do for its program. It is a trifle gaudy, but the name of the house sticks up like a sore thumb and that is the main point. The trademarks now set off the descriptions, but the Eclipse, Gaumont and Pathe trade-marks are missing. The program is still held to advertising and descriptions, though an added eight-page form, with half of the space devoted to reading matter about the pictures, would more than pay for itself and gain the favor of those advertisers already in. The more attractive such a publication is made the easier it is to get ads, and while the Tenth Street program has already come to the dignity of a colored "insert," there is room for still further development in such enterprising hands. Most of the manufacturers will loan or sell cuts of the players; information is to be had for the asking or can be clipped from this paper, and news and comment about the players will be treasured by the fans and make them still more devoted to the photoplay, while the program will more than ever assure the advertiser that it is taken into the home and read.

Good and Bad Press Work.

The Dante "Inferno" pictures are playing in New Orleans and the man who has them in charge proved his enterprise by inducing Dante Lodge, of the Masonic Order, to attend the performance in a body. That's an item of local news that is worth a quarter column of plain puffery. It's good press work, but the Oceana, West Virginia, Tribune, gives two and a half inches to the four mediocre vaudeville acts at the Mirror and winds up with four lines to say that "The three reels of moving pictures are up to the high standard set by the Mirror and include several unusually popular subjects."

The item is written by someone on the staff of the paper and not by the manager, but there is nothing to prevent the manager from asking the editor to at least name the films, since it is probable that people come to see the pictures and at least a minority of them endure the vaudeville for the sake of the pictures.

The Royal, St. Joseph, Mo., puts out this announcement:

> If your laugh-o-meter is sluggish or out of order the bill at the Royal Theater will put it in good shape for the year. "Town Hall Tonight" is another of those rip-roaring Western comedies. The cowboys of Snakeville are fleeced by two bum actors for enough money to make a getaway.
> Hal Chase, the great first baseman, is the feature of the photoplay, "Hal Chase's Home Run." This picture shows some very good views of a game between New York and Cleveland. "Too Many Burglars" and "Mr. Bragg, the Fugitive," two excellent comedy pictures, conclude this program.

The item might be more smoothly phrased, but it leaves the reader with the impression that there is going to be some worth-while comedy at the Royal. It will make business.

Hit Straight Out.

If you're trying to get a man into your theater use the sort of argument that will get him. Here is something from the McKeesport, Pa. Times:

> Those wonderfully realistic and lifelike photoplays that seem to have caught McKeesport amusement seekers by storm at White's new theater will be presented every afternoon and evening this week, except Wednesday, with an entire change of program daily. To sit for almost two hours in such a magnificent playhouse where comfort, convenience and safety are assured witnessing a splendid entertainment of life motion views with musical embellishments at the lowest possible admission price is a bargain that theater going people are quick to take advantage of. How the White Theater management can afford to give such an excellent program of photoplays for five cents is a question that is upon every one's lips. The pictures will remain a feature at the White all season.

This probably makes good reading for the manager, but it is not going to interest the man with a dime and a couple of hours to spare. On the face of it it's a puff, pure and simple. Everyone knows that it's a puff and no one takes it seriously. It won't draw a dollar.

Here's something that is likely to pull. It's from another St. Joseph paper and makes reference to another theater, but it's along the breezy lines of the first:

> The picture is a story of the West and shows the vengeance of Black Snake, an Indian, on the rest of his tribe, by poisoning the drinking water. He is discovered and the braves of the nation chase him. The chase leads over mountains and through valleys and just as the riders are coming over the brow of a hill one of the horses is seen to stumble and fall, carrying his rider with him to the ground, where they both lie throughout the picture.

[illegible]

Probably it was an accident, but that is not the point. Mr. Herrick saw the pictured fall and caught at the idea. He arouses your curiosity and you go down to see what it's all about. This sort of thing can be done only when the film is held for more than a day, but when it can be done it's effective.

Put it up to yourself. Which would catch you quickest—the story of the accident or the press notice about White's?

A New Three-Sheet Frame.

The [illegible] Advertising and Specialty Co. sends a sample of a three-sheet frame to take the A. B. C. posters or other paper of the same size. Coloring and design are quiet and artistic, setting out the colored sheet instead of detracting from its appearance, an important point often overlooked. The lettering above and below announces "Showing today" and "And Many Others." It is inexpensive and a valuable addition to this series.

TECHNIQUE AND THE TALE.

There are some persons who seem fond of arguing against the fully-developed scenario on the grounds that the idea may be as fully conveyed to the director by means of a half sheet of note paper with a brief synopsis of the story, but technique is being more and more required of the photoplaywright and there seems to be no good ground for arguing technique unnecessary.

It is very true that at times a director will throw away a scenario and work entirely from the synopsis, but this is only because the synopsis gives the facts and the scenario doesn't. Most directors prefer the well-developed scenario and find therein helpful suggestions. Only those wholly swallowed in their own conceit despise helpful hints from the author, and when a choice lies between two stories of even merit that which shows the most logical development of the scenario is accepted almost uniformly.

It is only within the last two years that there has existed any literature on the technique of the photoplay, and it is probable that the Vitagraph's advice to authors was the first printed matter on the subject. Until then the only information was to be gained through the study of the play upon the screen and many nice points escaped the novice, close student though he might be.

Today there are a score or more scenario writers with well-grounded technique, and even the beginner is possessed of a better idea of how the picture should be framed than was the experienced man of eighteen months ago. A great deal has been written that is incorrect and misleading; the experience of a single contributor set forth as hard and fast rule, rehashes of the form sheets of the various manufacturers and half-stated facts, but there also exists much that is valuable and the form sheets mentioned above in themselves form a groundwork of technique that enables the novice to turn out presentable work.

Technique alone will not sell a manuscript, but the good idea that is properly and attractively framed stands a far better chance in the studio than the incompetent work of the beginner. The clever editor is not above the assistance of the author in gaining variety of treatment and originality of situation, and it not infrequently happens that the man who never saw a motion picture camera can devise one or two situations that are better than the editor and the producers can originate for that scene. As time passes technique comes into greater demand and within another year the number of expert photoplaywrights should have been multiplied tenfold.

The best school of technique is experience; experience in writing the photoplay and experience in studying plays on the screen. It is something not wholly to be gained in books, for a part of the technical equipment is a sense of dramatic possibilities, that should be inherent, but which may be acquired in some degree, through study of situations on the screen.

When the time shall come that a sufficient number of well-developed scripts may be had it is probable that the author will receive due credit on the screen, but until then there are few authors who are entitled to claim the stories for their own since it is the editor and director who makes them possible for the camera.

The Champion Enterprise.

A Monument to Perseverence and Hard Work—Dintenfass, A Successful Fighter.

There are larger and finer plants for the manufacture of motion pictures than the one owned by the Champion Film Company at Fort Lee, N. J., but there are few more effective, or which represent more hard work and perseverence than that which flies the banner of Champion. At the same time it represents the fighting qualities of the president of the company, Mr. Mark M. Dintenfass, one of the pioneers in the independent movement.

While the buildings shown in the accompanying engravings are not pretentious, it must be remembered that they were built at a time when it was extra hazardous for anyone not working under a license from the Edison Company to own anything tangible. It was built when such structures were called upon to serve not only the purposes of manufacture, but to preserve secrecy and afford defense as well against the prying eyes of a score of detectives and United States marshals looking for violations of the patent laws and when the owner was not certain just how long he would be permitted to continue in business.

It was against these uncertainties that Mr. Dintenfass undertook to lay the foundation of the Champion fortunes, investing no inconsiderable sum in the plant that has grown and prospered under his direction.

Mr. Mark M. Dintenfass, General Manager of the Champion Film Company.

Though unattractive as the building may appear, it houses a very complete equipment for the production of motion pictures and is capable of turning out a surprising quantity of film. The photographic quality of the product is well known and highly commended by picture men, who realize that Mr. Dintenfass has solved the problem of producing good photographic work.

Lack of space is the first thing that impresses the casual visitor at the Champion plant. A representative of the Moving Picture World spent a few pleasant hours in company with Mr. Dintenfass a few days ago, inspecting the Champion facilities and could not but wonder how, in the apparent confusion, such good work could come out of the Champion plant. But, when one has been over the ground, it will be readily seen that the supposed confusion is only orderly profusion and that what is really lacking is more space to spread things out in. In other words, there is a wealth of equipment crowded into the factory building, everything that could possibly be required for picture making is to be found ready at hand and in its place. There are uniforms and accoutrements for a hundred soldiers, as many cowboys, a platoon of police, in the property wardrobe. In the scenic department flat after flat is stacked up ready for use at a moment's notice. In the machine and repair shop the equipment is there and the tools are there—the need will bring them forth.

In the dark rooms may be seen, if you have cat's eyes, printing and perforating devices of the latest design, installed at a cost that runs into big money, but which are absolutely necessary if good photographs and steady pictures are to be made.

Factory and Studio—Champion Film Company.

That Mr. Dintenfass realizes the needs of his plant is shown in the work of development now going on. On the occasion of our visit the steel skeleton of a new glass studio was being erected. This is but a beginning of a series of improvements which will increase the effectiveness of the Champion plant and put it in line with the best of them. Though Mr. Dintenfass is well known to most picture men, we present a likeness of him here. He has been associated with amusement interests for years and has been successful in many such ventures. Personally he is a most likeable man and enjoys good living. One of his diversions is a high-power Kissel-Kar, which he takes particular pleasure in driving himself, with a standing dare to his friends to accompany him in it. Mr. Dintenfass will further enhance his pleasure in life by taking up his future residence on Palisades Avenue, near the Champion plant, in a delightfully located and handsomely appointed home which he has recently purchased.

The World representative wishes to add a few words of appreciation of the courteous treatment accorded by Mr. Dintenfass and to thank him for the enjoyable day spent in his company.

New York Picture Theatre Ordinance Discussed.

INTERESTING MEETING AT HEARING BEFORE THE MAYOR'S SPECIAL COMMISSION, AT CITY HALL, SATURDAY, NOV. 4—TEXT OF NEW ORDINANCE IN FULL.

Some time ago Mayor Gaynor appointed a special commission to prepare an ordinance for the regulation of the motion picture theater. After a careful and extended consideration of the subject a draft of the proposed law was made and an invitation was extended to those interested to be present at a public hearing held by the commission at the City Hall, Borough of Manhattan, Saturday afternoon, November 4. At the appointed hour there gathered in the Mayor's office representatives of a number of civic societies and of the Exhibitors' Association. Chairman Michael Furst, of the commission, called the meeting to order and stated the purpose of the meeting, asking those present to offer any suggestions or criticisms they might have to make to the proposed measure, copies of which had been circulated.

The societies represented were the Woman's Municipal League, the Society for the Prevention of Crime, the Downtown Ethical Society, the Neighborhood Workers, the Peoples' Recreation Company, the Board of Censorship, and the New York Exhibitors' Association.

Mr. Gilbert Montague appeared for the Woman's Municipal League and made a lengthy appeal for an official censorship, a subject which is not covered by the printed draft of the proposed ordinance. In this contention he was supported by Mr. Marcus and Mr. McClintick, of the S. P. C., who alleged that the present method of censoring pictures was inadequate in that it was not compulsory and that the recommendations of the censors were not observed in all cases. It was argued that, unless an official censorship was incorporated in the law the S. P. C. and the Woman's Municipal League would oppose the provision therein permitting children under 16 years of age to attend picture theaters unaccompanied.

Speaking for the Neighborhood Workers, Mr. Bradstreet questioned the provision providing matrons to care for the children, also, the plan for segregating children under the age of 16.

Secretary Asher, speaking for the Exhibitors' Association, said that exhibitors were pretty generally satisfied with the proposed ordinance with the exception that it did not do away with the principal evil with which they had to contend, namely, the uncertainty of administration. He pointed out the difficulties which beset the exhibitor when he tried to conform with the law by reason of having to deal with several different departments, each of which held out for different requirements, and none of which was able to tell the exhibitor what the law required. Mr. Asher's description of his trials with the several departments amused the members of the commission not a little and Chairman Furst asked him to submit his suggestions in writing for further consideration.

Mr. F. H. Richardson, of the Moving Picture World, made a strong appeal for the unification of authority and called attention to the absence from the commission of any one familiar with the requirements of the motion picture exhibition business, which fact was plainly shown in the provisions governing operating rooms, which he said was totally inadequate.

Other speakers were Mr. Charles Letts, an exhibitor; Dr. Laimberger, and John Collier.

The commission adjourned the meeting at 5 o'clock, requesting the several societies to submit their suggestions in writing for further consideration.

The full text of the ordinance as proposed by the commission follows:

CHAPTER 7, TITLE II., ARTICLE II.—A. SECTION 352A MOTION PICTURES AND MOTION PICTURE THEATERS.

SUB-SECTION "A"

Motion pictures shall be deemed a display on a screen or other device whereby pictures are displayed of characters or objects in motion, whether or not accompanied by music, recitative, or song.

SUB-SECTION "B"

A motion picture theater shall be deemed any public hall or room in the City of New York in which motion pictures are exhibited, in which the seating capacity does not exceed six hundred, and in which there is no stage or scenery.

An open air motion picture theater shall be deemed any public place or space in the open air in the City of New York in which motion pictures are exhibited, and in which there is no stage or scenery.

The Mayor shall appoint such inspectors as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this ordinance. They shall be known as "motion picture theater inspectors" and shall be paid such compensation as shall be fixed by the Board of Aldermen on recommendation of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

SUB-SECTION "C"

I.—Section 305, of Article I., Title II., Chapter 7, of the Ordinances of the City of New York is hereby amended by inserting the words "motion picture theaters, open air motion picture theaters after the words "vaudeville shows" and before the words "dancing galleries."

II.—Sections 305, of Article II, Title II, Chapter 7, is hereby amended by the insertion of the words "for each motion picture theater $50" after each open air motion picture theater $50" after the words "For each common show $25 00" and before the words "For each public dancing gallery, $5 00."

SUB-SECTION "D"

The Bureau of Licenses shall have power to regulate and control all motion picture theaters, and by authority of the Mayor, shall grant licenses provided:

I.—Applicants for motion picture theater licenses shall file plans and specifications of the motion picture theater with the Bureau of Buildings of the borough in which the motion picture theater is to be situated and must file a copy of said plans and specifications duly approved by the Superintendent of Buildings with the application for the license, which application shall be made to the Bureau of Licenses on blanks furnished by it for that purpose.

II.—The Fire Department, Bureau of Buildings, Police Department, Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity and Department of Health may and upon request of the Bureau of Licenses shall inspect and examine and shall file in the Bureau of Licenses written reports of all violations of laws, ordinances, rules and regulations, and all matters dangerous to life, limb and health existing at the time of such inspection.

III.—The Bureau of Licenses shall without delay upon the request of an applicant, pass upon the location of the motion picture theater and upon the character of the applicant respecting the license.

IV.—No license shall be issued until the provisions of this ordinance have been complied with, and written reports of the inspectors have been duly filed in the Bureau of Licenses.

SUB-SECTION "E"

I.—Plans—Before the erection, construction or alteration of a building, or part thereof, to be used as a motion picture theater, there must be filed with the Superintendent of Buildings, complete plans and detailed statement as set forth in Section 4 of the Building Code. The plans must show clearly and fully the location and width of all exits, passageways, stairs, fire-escapes, aisles, etc.; arrangement of seats, size of floor beams, walls, supports, etc.; the location and construction of the enclosure for the motion picture light and machinery, and for other similar apparatus; a diagram of the lot or plot showing outlets from all exits and also such other statements, plans or details as may be required by the Superintendent of Buildings.

II.—Prohibition—Motion picture theaters shall not be constructed in hotels, tenement houses, or lodging houses, nor in factories or workshops which are over three stories in height, and in no case shall they be constructed or operated above the ground floor of any building.

III.—Exits and Courts—All such buildings must be provided on the main floor of the theater with at least two separate exits, one of which shall be in the front and the other in the rear, both leading to unobstructed outlets on the street. The aggregate width of such exits shall be at least eighteen feet where the main floor of the theater accommodates three hundred people or less. Where the main floor of the theater accommodates more than three hundred people, there shall be at least three such exits, the aggregate width of which shall be at least twenty-one feet for three hundred to four hundred people; at least twenty-three feet for four hundred to five hundred people; and at least twenty-five feet for five hundred to six hundred people. No exits shall be less than five feet in width, and there shall be a main exit not less than ten feet in width.

In all such buildings to be erected or to be altered so as to be used for a motion picture theater, if unobstructed exit to a street cannot be provided at the rear of such buildings, as herein specified, either an open court or a fireproof passage or corridor must be provided from rear exit to the street front of at least the following width: Four feet in the clear for theaters accommodating one hundred persons or less; for every additional one hundred persons the width to be increased six inches. Such passage must be constructed of fireproof material and must be at least ten feet high in the clear. The walls forming such passage must be at least eight inches thick of brick, and if there be a basement the wall on the auditorium side should either run one foot below the cellar bottom, or may be carried in the cellar on iron columns and girders properly fireproofed according to sections 106 and 107 of the Building Code. Said wall shall be carried up to the under side of roof boards of a one-story building, and to the under side of the flooring of the next story above where such building is more than one story in hight.

The ceiling of said passage, and if there be a basement, the flooring, must be constructed according to section 106 of the Building Code.

If an unobstructed rear exit to a street is provided, said exit must be of the same width required for the court or passage above mentioned. Said passages and exits to the street, as above, must be used for no other purposes except for exit and entrance and must be kept free and clear.

The level of the open court or passage at the front of building shall not be greater than one step above the level of the sidewalk, and the grade shall not be more than one foot in twelve with no compensating steps.

All exit doors must be unlocked when building is open to the public. They must be fireproof and made to open outwardly and so arranged as not to obstruct the exit when opened. All doors leading to fire escapes must be not less than three feet wide in the clear.

IV.—Galleries and Stairs—A gallery may be constructed, but it shall not accommodate more than two hundred people. Entrance to and exit from said gallery shall in no case lead to the main floor of the theater, and the gallery shall be provided with a stair or stairs equipped with hand rails on both sides. The rises of the stairs shall not exceed seven and one-half inches, and the treads excluding nosings shall not be less than ten and one-half inches. An inclined plane may be substituted for stairs, provided the ascent is not more than one foot in six feet. There shall be no circular or winding staircases.

The width of the stairs or inclined plane shall not be less than ten feet in the clear where the gallery accommodates two hundred people, for every fifty people less than two hundred which the gallery accommodates said width may be reduced one foot.

Stairs or inclined planes shall be constructed of fireproof material, and such material and the bearing capacity of such stairs or inclined planes shall be approved by the Bureau of Buildings.

Galleries must also be provided with at least one line of fire escapes leading to an open court, fireproof passage or street without re-entering the same or any other building.

V.—Fire-Escapes—All fire-escapes must have balconies not less than three feet in width in the clear and not less than four feet six inches long, and from said balconies there shall be stairways extending to the ground level with a rise of not over eight and one-half inches and a step of not less than eight and one-half inches, and the width of stairs must not be less than three feet.

VI.—Auditorium and Other Rooms—If the walls of the auditorium contain wood studs, they shall be covered with either expanded metal lath or wire mesh and plastered with three coats of first-class plaster, or may be covered with metal on one-half inch plaster boards. The joints shall be properly filled with mortar.

The ceilings of all such rooms shall be covered with one-half inch plaster boards and plastered or covered with metal.

If there be a basement or cellar, the ceiling under the auditorium floor must be plastered with three coats of first-class plaster on wire mesh or expanded metal lath, or may be covered with metal on one-half inch plaster boards.

In case of fireproof buildings there shall be no restrictions as to the use of the basement or cellar, but in case of non-fireproof buildings the basement or cellar shall be kept free and clear except the space used for the heating apparatus, for machinery connected with the theater, and for coal.

VII.—Construction of Booths—Apparatus for projecting motion pictures shall be enclosed in a booth or enclosure constructed so as to be fireproof in accordance with the specifications of Chapter 756 of the Laws of 1911, provided, however, that no booth or enclosure constructed wholly of iron shall be permitted, and provided that the booth shall be equipped with a vent flue as prescribed in Sub-Section "F," Paragraph III. of this ordinance. Booths shall contain a fireproof box for the storage of films not on the projecting machine. Films shall not be stored in any other place on the premises.

VIII.—Gradients—To overcome any difference of level in and between corridors, lobbies and aisles, gradients of not over one foot in eight feet, or steps having a rise not over eight inches and a width of not less than ten inches must be used.

IX.—Aisles—All aisles in the auditorium and gallery must not be less than two feet six inches wide in the clear at the front row, and must increase in width in the ratio of at least one inch to every four running feet.

X.—Chairs—All chairs in the auditorium except those contained in the boxes, must not be less than thirty-two inches from back to back and must be firmly secured to the floor. No seat in the auditorium shall have more than seven seats intervening between it and an aisle. The space occupied by each person shall be separated from the adjoining space by means of an arm or other suitable device.

XI.—Signs Over Exits—Over every exit there must be painted on the inside in letters not less than eight inches high, the word "EXIT" in legible type, and one red light must be placed inside over each exit.

XII.—Floor Loads—The flooring of that portion of the building devoted to the uses or accommodation of the public must be of sufficient strength to bear safely a live load of ninety pounds per square foot.

XIII.—Toilets—Toilets separate for sexes must be provided.

XIV.—Fire Apparatus—Portable fire apparatus shall be provided of the following kind and number: Ten-quart capacity buckets, painted red, with the word "Fire" in black, the letters four inches high, to the number of six for places seating less than three hundred without a gallery, and two additional if there be a gallery; to the number of ten in places seating over three hundred persons, and four additional if there be a gallery. There shall be two buckets containing dry sand kept in the operating booth; approved fire extinguishers of three-gallon capacity of the regulation Fire Department pattern, of which two shall be on the main floor and two in the gallery, if there be one, and one in the operating booth; four-pound flat head axes, two of which shall be on the main floor and two in the gallery, if there be one.

All motion picture theaters except open-air theaters shall be equipped with direct means of communicating fire alarm to Fire Department headquarters.

SUB-SECTION "F"

I.—Lighting—Every portion of a motion picture theater, including exits, courts and corridors, devoted to the uses of accommodation of the public, shall be so lighted during all exhibitions and until the entire audience has left the premises, that a person with normal eyesight should be able to read the Snellen standard test type 40 at a distance of twenty feet and type 30 at a distance of ten feet; normal eyesight meaning ability to read type 20 at a distance of twenty feet in daylight. Cards showing types 20, 30 and 40 shall be displayed on all four walls, together with a copy of this paragraph of the ordinance.

II.—Heating—When the temperature of the outdoor air is below 60 degrees Fahr. the air in the theater, while an audience is present, shall be maintained at a temperature of not lower than 62 degrees Fahr. or higher than 70 degrees Fahr.

In heating motion picture theaters, no gas stoves, oil stoves or other apparatus throwing the products of combustion into the air of the theater, shall be used.

III.—Ventilation—Motion picture theaters having less than two hundred cubic feet of air space for each person, or motion picture theaters in which the outside window and door area is less than one-eighth of the floor area, shall be provided with artificial means of ventilation which shall supply during the time the audience is present, at least five hundred cubic feet of fresh air per hour for each person.

Motion picture theaters having more than two hundred cubic feet of air space for each person, or which have outside windows and doors, the area of which is equal to at least one-eighth of the floor area, shall be provided with artificial means of ventilation, which shall be in operation when the outside temperature requires the windows to be kept closed, and which shall supply during the time the audience is present, at least five hundred cubic feet of fresh air per hour for each person. When the artificial ventilation is not in operation, ventilation by means of open doors and windows shall be sufficient to provide each person with five hundred cubic feet of fresh air per hour.

Motion picture theaters having more than one thousand cubic feet of air space for each person and having outside windows and doors, the area of which is equal to at least one-eighth of the total floor area, shall not be required to have artificial means of ventilation, provided the air is thoroughly changed by freely opening doors and windows immediately before the admission of the audience, and at least every four hours thereafter.

No part of the fresh air supply required by any of the above paragraphs of this section shall be taken from any source containing vitiated air.

The area of outside doors and windows shall mean the area capable of being freely opened to the outside air for ventilation purposes.

When fresh air is supplied by means of ventilating openings, at least one inlet shall be situated at one end of the room, and at least one outlet at the other end of the room. Where exhaust or inlet fans are necessary, at least one of such fans shall be placed in an outlet opening. The inlet openings and their surroundings shall be kept free from two feet of the floor, and the outlet opening or openings in the ceiling or within two feet of the ceiling. The inlet openings and their surroundings shall be kept free from dust so that the incoming air shall not convey dust or stir up dust as it enters.

During the time the audience is present, the air in the theater shall be kept continuously in motion by means of fans to the number of at least one to every one hundred and fifty persons. Such fans shall be placed in positions remote from the inlet and outlet openings. No person shall be exposed to any direct draft from any air inlet.

The booth in which the picture machine is operated shall be provided with an opening in its roof or upper part of its side wall, leading to the outdoor air. When the booth is in use, there shall be a constant current of air passing outward through said opening or vent flue, at the rate of not less than thirty cubic feet per minute.

The specifications of the above paragraph shall apply to portable booths and booths in open air theaters.

SUB-SECTION "G"

Motion picture theaters must be kept clean and free from dust.

The floors where covered with wood, tiles, stone, concrete, linoleum, or other washable material, shall be mopped or scrubbed with water or swept with moisture, or by some other dustless method, at least once daily, and shall be scrubbed with water and soap, or water and some other solvent substance at least once weekly.

Carpets, rugs and other fabric floor coverings shall be cleaned at least once daily by means of suction cleaning, beating or dustless sweeping. Curtains and draperies shall be cleaned at least once monthly by suction cleaning, beating or washing. Cornices, walls and other dust-holding places shall be kept free from dust by washing or moist wiping. The wood and metal parts of all seats shall be kept clean. Fabric upholstering of seats and railings and ther fixed fabrics shall be cleaned by suction cleaning, or other dustless method, at least once monthly.

SUB-SECTION "H"

No child, actually or apparently under the age of sixteen years, unless accompanied by its parent or guardian, shall be permitted to enter any motion picture theater except that between the hours of 3 p. m. and 6 p. m. on days when the public schools are open for instruction and at any time up to 6 p. m. on other days, unaccompanied children under sixteen years of age may be admitted and allowed to remain not later than 7 p. m., provided:

I.—That there shall be reserved in said theaters during the above-mentioned hours for the exclusive use of said unaccompanied children, a part or section of seats which shall be at least three feet distant on all sides from all other seats.

II.—That said unaccompanied children shall not be permitted to occupy or remain in any place or space in said theaters other than said seats, and that during the above-mentioned hours no other person except the matron, hereinafter mentioned, shall be permitted to remain within three feet of said seats.

III.—That at all times during the above-mentioned hours there shall be in attendance at each of said theaters a duly licensed matron who shall be paid by the licensee of said theater and who shall keep constant watch over said children and strictly enforce the provisions of this section.

Nothing contained in this section shall apply to exhibitions or entertainments given under the auspices of educational, religious and charitable institutions, provided that the proceeds thereof are used entirely for educational, religious or charitable purposes.

SUB-SECTION "I"

Matrons above referred to shall be women of good moral character, not under forty years of age, and shall not serve unless they have secured a license from the Mayor. Said license shall not be transferable, and the annual fee therefor shall be five dollars.

Applications for matron licenses shall be made to the Mayor, and each application shall be accompanied by two photographs of the applicant, and shall bear the endorsement of at least two reputable residents of the City of New York, who shall certify to the character and qualifications of the applicant, and shall state the facts or circumstances by which they derived their knowledge.

The photographs herein referred to shall not exceed three inches in diameter, one of which shall be affixed to the application and the other to the license.

No person shall employ an unlicensed matron in a motion picture theater, and immediately upon employment of a matron the person employing her shall notify the Bureau of Licenses in writing, stating the name, address and license number of said matron.

SUB-SECTION "J"

All the provisions contained in this ordinance shall apply to existing places of entertainment which fall under the definition of motion picture theaters in Sub-Section "E" of this ordinance, except those provisions of Sub-Section "B" designated as Nos. I., II., III., IV., V. and VI., but the Bureau of Licenses shall have power in its discretion to enforce the provisions of said paragraph 3 of Section "E" as to exits and courts.

SUB-SECTION "K"

In places of amusement seating less than three hundred persons, where the exhibition constituting a motion picture theater, as defined in Sub-Section "B" of this ordinance, is given in conjunction with any other form of amusement, said places must comply with the provisions of section 109, Chapter 15 (the Building Code), covering theaters seating more than three hundred persons.

SUB-SECTION "L"

Sub-Sections "A," "K" and "M" of this ordinance shall not apply to motion picture exhibitions with or without charge for admission, conducted under the direct management of educational or religious institutions. Before exhbiting motion pictures, an educational or religious institution shall obtain from the Bureau of Licenses a permit for such exhibition or exhibitions. Before granting such permit, the Bureau of Licenses shall cause to be inspected the premises where such proposed exhibition will be held, and shall grant the permit if in its judgment the safety of the public is properly guarded, provided, however, that a fireproof booth shall always be required, constructed according to the specifications in Section "E," Paragraph VII., and provided that all chairs shall be securely fastened to the floor or fastened together in rows.

SUB-SECTION "M"

The Bureau of Licenses at its discretion shall specify the seating capacity for each open-air motion picture theater. Aisles must be four feet wide, or wider in the discretion of the Bureau of Licenses. At least two separate exits, remote from each other, shall be provided, and no exit shall be less than five feet in width. For every twenty-five persons to be accommodated in excess of three hundred, the exits shall be widened one foot. All exits must be indicated by signs and red lights and the doors must open outwardly. Seats must be stationary, with backs thirty-two inches apart, and so arranged that no seat shall have more than seven seats intervening between it and an aisle. The floor must be constructed either of wood with sleepers or of concrete, and must extend at least five feet from the seats on all sides, provided, however, that in the discretion of the Bureau of Licenses, a gravel floor may be substituted for wood or concrete. Chairs must either be securely fastened to wood or concrete floor, or all chairs in a row must be fastened together and at least four rows must be securely fastened to one frame, except that where refreshments are served, tables and unattached chairs or benches used with them may be permitted.

SUB SECTION "N"

Only Sections A, B, C, Paragraphs I and II, D, E, Paragraphs VII and XIII, H, I, J and N of this ordinance shall apply to open air motion picture theaters.

SUB SECTION "O"

This ordinance shall take effect thirty days after its approval by the Mayor. All other rules, regulations and ordinances inconsistent herewith and affecting buildings and places to be occupied as herein defined are hereby revoked.

Amendment Suggested by the Committee to Paragraph One, Section 484 of the Penal Laws of the State of New York. New Matter in Italics.

A person who

Admits to or allows to remain in any dance house, concert saloon, theater, museum, skating rink, kinetoscope or moving picture performance except in a moving picture performance where separate seats are reserved for and used by the children with a matron in attendance to guard them approved by the chief executive of the city, town or village during hours further approved by said chief executive of the city, town or village or in any place where wines or spirituous or malt liquors are sold or given away, or in any place of entertainment injurious to health or morals owned, kept, leased, managed or controlled by him, or by his employee or where such person is employed or performs such services as doorkeeper or ticket seller or ticket collector, any child actually or apparently under the age of sixteen years, unless accompanied by its parent or guardian, or

ANOTHER FINE RANCH PICTURE.

Another fine Western feature picture, depicting life on a great cattle ranch, is being offered for State rights by the Tournament Film Company, of Toledo, Ohio. The title is "The Fall Round-up On the Y-6 Ranch," and illustrates that interesting operation from start to finish, together with scenes at the annual cowboys' tournament at Cheyenne, Wyo., where exhibitions of horsemanship and lariat throwing and other feats peculiar to the range are given.

This subject was taken on the ranch owned by Mr. Charles Irwin, a famous cattle king, and the scenes shown were not posed for the picture, but represent what actually occurs in the regular line of business. The subject is in three reels and is highly illustrative.

Messrs. Block and Smith, of the Tournament Film Company, have already disposed of considerable territory for this picture and are well pleased with the reception given it.

DOIN' THINGS AT LUBIN'S.

A restaurant has been established at the plant of the Lubin Manufacturing Company, Philadelphia, for the use of employees. Mr. Lubin is a great believer in doing everything possible for the comfort and well-being of the people who help to make Lubin masterplays. This is the sole reason for the establishment of the restaurant.

Prices are so low that they will not pay the expenses, but Mr. Lubin believes that the furnishing of wholesome luncheons amid beautiful and comfortable surroundings will conduce to the health of his employees and, therefore, reflect in a desirable way upon the business.

The restaurant is located on the third floor of the Executive building. It has a large seating capacity and is handsomely carpeted and furnished. The cooking is in charge of a chef who has already won the enthusiastic approbation of the employees.

The Scenario Department at the big plant of the Lubin Manufacturing Company in Philadelphia is undergoing a complete renovation. The walls and ceilings of the rooms are being decorated with an artistic covering of stamped metal, which will be painted in colors to harmonize with the furniture. Mr. Warren and his staff are temporarily in other quarters.

NEW THEATER FOR SEDALIA, MISSOURI.

Messrs. Walter J. Bril and G. H. Scruton, who have recently sold their Gem Theater, Sedalia, Mo., will open a new and most up-to-date store show in the Middle West, to be known as "The Lona." The building in which the new theater is to be, stands by an alley, affording in all seven exits, with the operating room on the outside of the building, projecting the picture through an opening in an 8-in. brick wall. This arrangement makes the playhouse practically fireproof. It will be opened round about November 18th.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

Amperage.—There has been much discussion among operators and among managers as to the proper amount of current for projection.. The writer has received hundreds of letters making inquiry and asking advice on this subject. He has been closely watching effects and has listened to what others have said on the subject.

Increase in amperage means hard cash when the current bill comes in, but failure to use sufficient current to give the very best possible curtain results spells loss at the box office. As between the two it is the writer's opinion that loss of best results in order to effect saving in current bills is poor policy.

There is no hard and fast rule to be laid down in respect to the necessary amperage to secure the best possible results, largely because of the difference in screens. However, taking the curtain made of plain bleached muslin of good weight and quality, and supposing it to be located in the best position, it may be said that .2 (two-tenths) of an ampere of D. C. per square foot of screen, with a minimum of 20 and a maximum limit of 45 amperes, is best. With A. C. we would increase this to .3 (three-tenths) of an ampere per square foot of screen, up to a maximum limit of 60 amperes and a minimum limit of 35.

The limit on D. C. is placed at 45 for the reason that no higher amperage can be used to advantage with ⅝ carbons; also with larger carbons and heavier amperage the crater becomes so excessively large that much of the advantage is lost. With A. C. much heavier amperage than 60 can be used to advantage on large pictures, but practically all operating room transformers have sixty for their maximum. Sixty ampers A. C. is about the limit for a ⅝ carbon also, though larger carbons can be and are used for heavier amperage.

A brilliantly lighted picture is infinitely superior in many ways to the duller effect of weaker light, but there is room for difference of opinion in this matter. I would be glad to see this whole proposition taken up and discussed by the department correspondents. One writer in an English publication advocates from .38 to .45 of an ampere per sq. ft., presumably A. C., while another contends that .2 of an ampere is sufficient. The first is, we believe, excessive, while the last is altogether too low for the best results. The first would require from 73 to 86 amperes for a 16-foot picture, while the latter would only use 38. I have never yet seen what could be called a good 16-foot picture projected with 38 amperes A. C. It is not necessary to use 75 on such a picture. My proposal of .3 would call for 48 amperes.

It works out thus, the area and amperage being in round numbers:

50c

Picture	Area Sq. Ft.	Am. D. C.	Am. A. C.
9 × 6.75	48	20	35

20 × 15	300	45	60

This rule must be modified when working with a good type of reflecting screen. It will also be observed that there has been made a minimum of 35 amperes for A. C. This by reason of the fact that it has been found, in our own experience, to be a practical impossibility to maintain clear, steady illumination on the screen with less than that amount of A. C. current. It might be done with smaller carbons than ⅝. With a twenty-foot picture it would be better to use considerably more than 60 amperes A. C., using larger carbons, of course. There is no desire to be dogmatic or to assert that these conclusions are the last word. We shall be pleased to hear from such of our readers as feel they have something of value to say on this question. It is a very important one and deserves the most serious consideration by both operators and managers throughout the country.

New Union.—Harrisburg, Pa., is forming a new union which will contain close to twenty-five members. The membership is expected to be limited to competent operators. Success to you, gentlemen.

Opaque.—St. Louis, Mo., writes: "Noticed article in recent issue saying 'slide glasses smoothly coated with opaque can be made up instantly and should be close at hand.' Where can 'opaque' be bought?"

By "opaque" the writer presumably meant some opaque substance. It is usually mixed as wanted. I used to use such slides myself to some extent, but have long since forgotten just how I mixed the coating. As I remember the matter, it was difficult to get a coating which could be written in after it was dry without cracking and flaking off. Will some reader kindly supply the desired information. Why not use the gelatine slides—the "Make 'Em Yourself" outfit advertised elsewhere in these columns. In emergency one could be made in about two seconds. Simply write on the gelatine, cut it off and slip between two cover glasses bound on only one side.

Position Wanted.—New York City writes asking me to help in obtaining him position as operator's assistant (apprentice) so that he can comply with the law and secure New York card; or else that I advise him to get such a place. Says he has operated in London, Eng., for 2½ years.

Nothing would give me greater pleasure than to help a brother operator to secure a position, or to aid him in any other way. I fear, however, your request is impossible to grant at this time. I am advised that very many operators are now out of employment in this city and naturally those, already holding cards, secure first chance. Under the circumstances the only advice I can give is to make the round of the houses, present your credentials and ask for what you want. Frankly, however, I'm afraid it's a hard proposition. I have been applied to recently by several brothers of the union asking that I assist them to employment. I could offer even them but small encouragement. The apprenticeship law, I am informed, is knocked out finally and completely.

No Law.—Plattsburgh, N. Y., writes: "Not one of the three moving picture theaters of this city employ licensed operators. They are boys from 10 to 15 years of age at from $3 to $6 per week. Is there no law compelling licensing of operators?"

Sorry, Plattsburgh, but license laws, or lack of them, is a purely local matter in this state. Surely you exaggerate. Ten years old and $3 per week is breaking all records. I can hardly believe there exists a manager so lost to all sense of safety as to place a ten-year old infant in charge of his projection ("projection" is good) at $3.00 per week. The child labor law might possibly be invoked if the age be ten, or less than sixteen. It ought to be done, too, and the "manager" punished. Write the Attorney-General, Albany, setting forth the facts, and ask him if the child labor law would apply and how to go about it. Placing children in charge of projection is an outrage in that it endangers the lives of the audience, and is bad from the standpoint of projection as well as for ethical reasons.

Field Regulation.—The Western Electric Company, Denver, Colo., writes: "On p. 203, Oct. 21 issue, in commenting on our letter, you ask if you are correct in understanding that the field regulation automatically controls the voltage and amperage. First, if you will permit me to go back a little, I will say that the motor-generator set in question is a 50-volt dynamo. As you know, 50 to 52 volts is the normal arc voltage for projection machines. The generator of this set normally produces 50 volts. As the load increases or decreases because of the changing length of the arc, the amperage will decrease accordingly. Now as this takes place, the voltage will vary. In order to maintain a uniform voltage all generators are provided with a field rheostat which is used to maintain a uniform voltage. This is not done automatically, although we have an apparatus which will automatically maintain the voltage within one volt of a predetermined point. This field regulator increases or decreases the amount of excitation for the fields, and as the field will strengthen or weaken according to the excitation, the voltage is increased or decreased. Of course this regulation has to be performed by hand, but it a very simple matter to do so, as the field rheostat can be placed at any point desired, and for a motor-generator set for a moving picture machine it can be placed right beside the operator so that as he wishes to vary his voltage, all he needs to do is to move his dial one or two notches, which will give him the desired change. I believe that this makes clear your suggestion of an explanation as to how the voltage is maintained. As to efficiency of a motor-generator set, this is determined by the loss of the motor plus the loss of the generator. The difference between the total loss and 100 will give you the efficiency of the motor-generator set, which at its worst is far superior to that of ordinary resistance. Another point in favor of the motor-generator set over the ordinary resistance is that as your load changes your voltage will change, and with an ordinary resistance, unless you can cut in on part of the resistance, your voltage will vary with your load, consequently your light will vary. With the motor-generator set you can maintain uniform voltage on all loads, thus insuring perfect screen results. No attention need be paid to the amperage, for if you are able to regulate your voltage at any increase or decrease in amperage, it will not affect your lights."

We thank the Western Electric for setting this matter forth thus clearly. There is one query I would like to make, however; also one comment. At fifty volts the arc carrying 40 amperes offers, within itself, 1¼ ohms resistance. Now suppose I cut out this resistance entirely by freezing the carbons—what happens to the dynamo? I can conceive of this very thing happening with no one there knowing enough to readjust the field resistance. It seems to me an enormous overload would instantly develop. My comment is this: You say if voltage is regulated—kept normal—the screen results will remain perfect, regardless of the amperage. Unless you mean that normal voltage will ensure normal amperage, you are surely in error there. As I understand the matter, it is wholly and entirely the amperage which governs the illumination. A certain given voltage is necessary to a given arc amperage, but absolutely the only function of pressure is to force the current (amperage) across the air-gap. If the voltage is lowered, the arc must be made shorter, and vice-versa. The reason, and only reason, according to my understanding, that 50 is the best voltage—that a voltage of 50 at the arc produces the best light—is that with that voltage the arc, when burning correctly and in a manner to produce the best results, is exactly the best length for the securing of those results. It is my desire to have our readers thoroughly understand these matters. The Western Electric, as well as any of our correspondents who feel capable, are invited to discuss this matter further along the lines I have suggested.

Lenses.—Moscow, Idaho, writes: "Am building a new theater 99 x 21 x 21; capacity, 350; picture 13½ feet; throw, 92 feet; machine, Powers Six; lenses, 5 feet above center of picture. What size projection lens and what combination of condensers would you advise?"

With an inside calliper measure the width of your aperture exactly . Not "pretty near," but exactly. Have a machinist do it with his scale if you cannot do it closely enough. Measure exact distance, in feet, from center of screen to lens. Multiply this measurement by exact width of aperture and divide that result by 13½, the width of picture. Result will be equivalent focus of required projection lens as close as it can be had. It may not be exactly accurate, as cheap lenses vary somewhat; also you possibly won't be able to get precisely what the result calls for. All the foregoing is set forth on page 68 of the handbook. Don't go by the tables. Do your own calculating. Use two 7½ condensing lenses.

Lenses.—Bradentown, Fla., writes: "What size condensing lenses ought I use on 10 foot picture at 65 feet? Features seem to be clouded. What can I do to clear them?"

Two 7½ condensers should fill the bill. Presume you mean that definition is not good. Clean your projection lenses thoroughly. Use a very soft, very clean cloth. A very slight, almost entirely invisible finger mark, or some similar thing, on the projection lens will sometimes produce exactly the effect you speak of. It may be the lens is not a good one. If cleaning doesn't help please describe effect more closely.

Apologies.—Athens, Ga., writes, apologizing for his letter in October 21 issue. Says he did not dream it would appear so boastful in print. There is no apology due, Athens. Your letter did not strike me as boastful, but merely that the things set forth were too highly theoretical to be of any large practical value to operators. What those professors write certainly will pass anywhere. It must be taken into account, however, that, while they are deeply versed and learned in theory, they are not strong in matters purely practical. And theory does not always work out well in practice, remember. I don't know the finer points of corpuscles or molecules bombarding each other, but I do know that, regardless of what any professor or any one else may say, when I want more light I've got to have more amperes of current—not more voltage, except to a very limited extent. I know that a 10 ampere arc operates at its best at a little less than 40 volts, whereas the 100 ampere arc has but approximately 55. There is an enormous difference in the illumination with 10 amperes and with 100. There is a rise of but about 18 volts and 90 amperes. I therefore maintain that the power of the light depends on the amperage, not on the voltage. I hold that the whole and entire function of the voltage is to force the current across the air-gap. When the professor asserts that with A. C. there is no crater on one of the carbons we all know he is absolutely wrong. As to seeing more technical discussion in the department, you doubtless will as time goes on. I believe that operators are now awakening to the necessity for study and as we advance in knowledge, naturally we may discuss things with understanding which would have literally have been Greek to the average operator at the time this department was started. The motion picture business was of mushroom growth. Men who took up operating were not, as a rule, electricians. In fact the great majority wouldn't have been able to recognize a watt from a bale of hay or an ohm from an over-ripe squash. In a few years from now projection will be far in advance of what it is today. The department may then be discussing matters theoretically.

Condenser Breakage.—Reddings, Cal., says he has excessive condenser breakage. Asks for remedy. The various remedies, or the various methods for remedying the trouble complained of have been set forth time and again in the department. We do not feel that we can consume valuable space repeating the same thing over and over indefinitely. If Reddings will look through his back numbers of the World, Projection Department, he will find very many articles dealing with condenser breakage in all its phases. On page 63-64-65 of handbook he will also find the matter briefly treated. I must again emphasize the importance of keeping all copies of the World on file. One never knows when one will want to refer to them. For the benefit of all I shall presently, in an article, sum up all the various phases of the subject of condenser breakage.

New Arc Projector.—On page 302, October 28 issue, appears an advertisement of the Jacobson arc controller. At the request of the manufacturers the editor of this department examined the device in operation. The illustration in the advertisement shows exactly what it is and how it works. It projects a very clear, inverted image of the arc on a small screen of white paper placed on the operating room wall The image may be increased in size at will and is remarkably clear, even the carbon vapor being visible. The device is entirely practical in its working and will doubtless be of much benefit to projection.

Low Amperage.—Elsberry, Mo., writes: "I have a 10 ampere rheostat, 110 volt, 60 cycle current. Meter registers 12 to 15 amperes while I am showing six reels. I cut off the light while changing reels. Have trouble with terminals burning off. In fact the whole lamp house gets very warm. What must I do to cut down the meter bill?"

I cannot make out what you mean, Elsberry, by meter registering 12 to 15 amperes while you show six reels. Also you say you have a 10 ampere rheostat. Impossible; absolutely so. If you can get light from 12 to 15 amperes A. C. projection light, I mean—you have broken all records. Moreover, if you were only using that amount of current you wouldn't be bothered with terminals burning off, or heat in the lamp house either. A meter doesn't register amperes, but watts, or watt hours. What size wire (asbestos) are you using for lamp leads? If you have a handbook see pages 61 and 62 for lamp lead burning prevention. See that top vent of lamp house is clean, so that hot air has free passage. Will advise you further on receipt of better information.

Film Trouble.—Binghamton, N. Y., writes: "For the love of Mike, what is the trouble with the Kalem films nowadays? Have a new No. 6 and all, or nearly all films run rock steady, excepting the Kalem, which in places rock like a ship in a storm. All operators here complain of the same thing. Film stock seems to be O. K. Picture appears to move in relation to the film. Also why are the Melies so lacking in clearness in the titles? A number of their subjects have a double outline as though printed twice."

The Kalem Company had trouble for a short time, which they tell me was due to unusual expansion of film stock. It is now, they assure me, entirely remedied. The Melies title is subject to improvement, undoubtedly. We would cheerfully recommend that they get busy doing it. Just what the difficulty may be I do not know, but it is hardly excusable. Better titles, gentlemen, please. Binghamton's protest is justifiable. It is up to you.

Camera Wanted.—Mr. Lester B. Hughes, Stroudsburg, Pa., wants to know where he can procure a postage stamp camera. Prefers one that has quick action. Says he is studying a certain form of reptile and finds it quite exciting. Has one in captivity.

There is a postage stamp camera sold by G. Gennert, New York City, which has very rapid action. It is warranted so, I believe. It can be reloaded in daylight.

Splendid Program.—Mr. R. T. Soderstrom, manager the Photoplay Theater, Riverside, Cal., writes: "Enclosed find copy of program we issued for the Selig three-reel, "The Two Orphans." It is the first time such a program has been used here and it created quite a lot of favorable comment. The daily papers, of which we have two, gave it very favorable mention. It would be well if all producers included the cast of characters in their bulletins. We could then make the program a permanent feature. The audience seemed to follow the cast of characters very closely. I believe it made the picture much more interesting."

The program is indeed a most excellent one and is by far the best the writer has seen to date. It is printed on excellent quality, light-tan colored paper. On front page appears name of theater, date (Oct. 26-27, 1911) and the following in neat display: "Selig presents 'Two Orphans,' in three reels. The most stupendous production ever undertaken in moving pictures. Produced under the personal supervision of Miss Kate Claxton. Staged by Mr. Otis Turner at the Selig studios, Chicago, Ill."

On the second page are two advertisements, neatly gotten up, and the full cast of characters just as appears on the program of the regular theaters playing the "Two Orphans." Page three contains two advertisements and a brief synopsis of the action of the three reels. Page four contains two more advertisements and an announcement of reels for the four following days.

Taken altogether the program overtops anything in that line I have seen attempted by a picture palace. It is a thing to be heartily commended. It is also to be recommended to exhibitors all over the country. There is nothing cheap looking about it. It fills a very decided want and fills it well. I believe with you, Riverside, that the cast of characters should be given out by the manufacturers with every reel. It is hardly up to them to dismiss the matter with the curt announcement, "we don't wish to." It would seem that the exhibitor ought, of right, to have some say in a matter of that kind.

Resistance.—Texas (name of town suppressed) writes: "Have Motiograph, 1908 model. On right side of picture, about two feet over in the picture, it seems to be out of focus. Remainder of picture is O. K. except that other side is a trifle out of focus, though not much. Have sent for new aperture plate. Possibly the one I have is too badly worn. I also have a pretty fierce current proposition. The voltage is 220 D. C. I have a 220 Powers adjustable rheostat and a 110 volt non-adjustable rheostat hooked up together in order to get it reduced sufficiently. Can you tell me reason for having to provide all this resistance? The house is fed by two wires. Does this cause my meter bill to climb faster than it would if I had the three-wire system hooked up as per your handbook? Can I change this to a three-wire system from meter to operating room? If I had a three-wire system would I require only resistance for 110 volts?"

As to the out-of-focus spot, I am of the opinion that you will find a small, almost invisible, finger mark, or oil spot on the lens. You may have to look close to see it, but it is probably there, all right. Take the lens combinations from their mounts and wash thoroughly with alcohol. See last part of page 68, handbook. If this does not remove the trouble there may be something wrong with the lens itself. If the picture is slightly out of focus on one side find the difficulty and remedy it, even at the expense of a new lens. If your machine sets to one side of the screen, that would explain the out of focus effect on one side.

No, you cannot change to three-wire system from the meter. The three wires must come from the dynamos. If it is a three-wire system in the street maybe you can get them to run one outside wire and the neutral into your house instead of the two outside wires. They probably won't want to do it, however. See if they won't run all three wires in and balance the load. If you can't get 110 volts I would advise you by all means to either install a mercury arc rectifier or a motor generator set; 220 volts through rheostats is enormously wasteful. Presumably you have the round, wire-coil 220 volt rheostat. As to why you require two rheostats in series I cannot say. The 220 volt rheostat should take care of that pressure. Possibly the actual voltage is a little in excess of 220. Tell me your amperage at arc and send sketch of rheostat connections and position of adjustment handle of rheostat and I can then form an idea of what is wrong.

THE RETAIL MERCHANT AND THE CINEMATOGRAPH.

Word comes from one of our subscribers in Scranton, Pa., that the proprietor of the Scranton Candy Kitchen, Scranton, has purchased a Powers No. 6 machine and a regulation size booth and will entertain his patrons with moving pictures. Mr. J. D. Williams, also of this city, has been running moving pictures in his lunchroom for the past month or so. His lunchroom is connected with the Scranton Candy Kitchen, and he caters to the aristocratic trade of the city.

Clark Brothers, who have a line of department stores, have a theater in connection with their Scranton Store, which seats about 600 people. They entertain their customers with a fine line of pictures each day from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m.

Our correspondent says that he asked these parties what free pictures did for their trade, and they unanimously agreed that it increased their patronage. He also says that quite a number of persons who visited these free exhibitions of moving pictures were many who would not visit a moving picture theater, and claims that these exhibitions have converted them into the moving picture fraternity. A handsome moving picture theater is in course of construction at Sunbury, Pa.

NEW HANDSOME PICTURE PALACE FOR IOWA CITY, IOWA.

Mr. Fred E. Dever, manager and owner of the Pastime Picture Palace, Iowa City, Iowa, will open on Jan. 1, 1912, what will be considered the most handsome picture theater in this city. The site is on College Street near Dubuque, which is one of the best and busiest corners in the city. The building will be of tile and stucco ornamentations and beautifully designed. The operating room will be 7 x 12 x 7, with an 18-inch exhaust fan over each motiograph machine, there being two in number. Two stereopticon dissolvers will also be in use. The screen will be hung high from the floor, and the ventilating system will be of the most modern type. Three reels of Independent film will constitute a performance. It has a seating capacity of about 450. The house will cost approximately $8,000, and will be a strictly first class picture theater.

Norman A. Seymour, of Mt. Morris, N. Y., writes us that he has opened a new moving picture theater in that city, named The Casino. We gather from his letter that it is a one-story theater and seats 800. Mr. Seymour is also the manager of several other amusement enterprises.

Comments on the Films

"The Greatest of Engineering Feats" (Kalem), November 1.—An illustration well worth seeing of the gigantic operations in progress in the Catskill mountains to bring water to New York. The acqueduct will be ninety-two miles long. In fact, the entire undertaking, as shown in this film, is one of the greatest pieces of engineering work ever undertaken. This film is an excellent illustration of it.

"The Plot Against Bertie" (Kalem), November 1.—Here is a good Bertie comedy. In this instance Bertie gets in bad because the men are jealous of him and concoct a plot to have him thought a cholera suspect. It works for a time, but he succeeds in repaying their interference with a liberal bonus for good measure.

"The Rise and Fall of Weary Willie" (Edison), November 1.—A tramp in this picture is mistaken for a learned doctor who is investigating the tramp's world from the standpoint of the tramp, while the aforesaid learned doctor is mistaken for a genuine tramp and is promptly escorted to the lock-up. Matters are speedily cleared up and the real tramp and the real doctor change places.

"A Southern Soldier's Sacrifice" (Vitagraph), November 1.—A war story which appeals very strongly to the emotions. It represents one brother saving another when he is captured and imprisoned as a spy, and giving up his life for his brother. A tender love story is included which adds to the heart interest. The news of the brother's heroic deed is shortly followed by a wedding.

"Love Moulds Labor" (Pathe), November 1.—A story of a foundry, with a jealous man included. A strike is narrowly averted and an altercation occurs, enough of which is witnessed by the head of the firm to cause him to turn the jealous one out of the firm, while the loyal foreman gets the girl.

"A Sioux Lover's Strategy" (Pathe), November 2.—The main incident in this picture, which shows a girl put to sleep and buried so that her lover can find and restore her, is somewhat old, yet the actors, in the guise of Indians have interpreted it in a sufficiently new way to make it interesting. Perhaps the main feature is the ending, which shows the lovers united, while in another place the despised husband is mourning the loss of his recently acquired squaw.

"Right or Wrong" (Melies), November 2.—This picture is based upon a question which is as old as civilized warfare and is no nearer solution now than it was the first time it was asked. Is a soldier justified in permitting one of the enemy to escape when he discovers him, as in this instance, at the bedside of his dying mother? The heart says he is, but according to the rules of warfare as understood by all nations, he has not. This soldier pondered long on the matter after he permitted the escape. He didn't settle it to suit him after all. This problem gives the film a strength which it would not otherwise possess. It is a commonplace in pictures for one soldier to pursue one of the enemy and ultimately capture him.

"Mexican As It Is Spoken" (Melies), November 2.—This comedy is interesting because it is somewhat out of the ordinary. Picture to yourselves the predicament of a man who could not understand Mexican. He approaches a place where a blast is to be exploded. He doesn't understand and the two Mexicans tie him with a rope to prevent his being injured. He sends word to his friends he is being murdered and they hasten to his rescue. Meanwhile the blast has been exploded and poor Percy is quite sure he is doomed to extinction. The arrival of his friends affords the Mexicans opportunity to explain and Percy discovers that in place of being murdered he was in reality saved from destruction. The unexpected situation is what creates the fun.

"One on Reno" (Lubin), November 3.—Every smile and laugh in this very amusing comedy rises from the situation; some of its action seems a bit forced, but there is nothing that is "tacked on"; most of it seems natural and most of it is clever. It is good-natured, and the fun comes from putting Mr. Brown (Mr. Johnson plays the part), a very simple-minded, elemental man in a social atmosphere very up-to-date and sophisticated. Brown is such a bookworm that Mrs. Brown (Miss Lawrence) is exasperated into taking up residence in the divorce colony at Reno. Brown follows. Mrs. Brown hasn't yet been able to get her papers and Brown is, of course, still her husband. He won't accept the situation. It is a very acceptable comedy. Some in the gallery may not appreciate all of it, nor understand every one of its allusions, but it is a very clever picture. It will be popular with people who know a thing or two.

"Hi Feathertop at the Fair" (Essanay), November 3.—Hi is a jay farmer character. The player doesn't get the part over very naturally, although he does many things that such a man, who had money to spend at a county fair would do. He certainly made them laugh while winning on the home stretch in the pie eating contest. It is fairly good.

"The Right John Smith" (Essanay), November 3.—Of course, there are many John Smiths; most of them are married. One of them, a bachelor, left his wallet while calling on Miss Brown. Miss Brown's maid was told to telephone to Mr. John and tell him. She called 'em all up and their wives got the messages. The maid was not a very amusing characterization. Some of the things that happened at the other end of the telephone were very laughable indeed; some were not very. There are a great many good hearty laughs in it, though, and it is clearly a success. John Smith, policeman, and his wife were very funny indeed.

"The Forester's Plea" (Essanay), October 28.—A virile and interesting idea is presented in this picture, although the writer of the scenario deserves only the Homeric credit of knowing a good thing when seen. Mr. Norman Duncan's story of the Rev. Fairweather and his lumberjack friends, printed about a year ago in Harper's, is followed very closely indeed by this picture. That is not at all in derogation; one is a story, the other a moving picture. Sometimes producers forget that there is any difference in form between the two and spoil a picture to make it too closely like some good short story. This is a good picture and worth seeing, although the virile idea it tried to bring out, and that the story brought out very clearly, is only suggested faintly.

"Their First Divorce Case" (Biograph), November 2.—The two Biograph sleuths are employed by an exasperated woman to collect evidence against her faithless husband. He, however, is contrite, and makes up with her. The sleuths have been given his picture, but haven't seen her. They think she is the co-respondent. Enough has been said. It is full of laughs, but is not what one could call very refined.

"A Victim of Circumstances" (Biograph), November 2.—This comic character farce was laughed at by a part of the audience, but there is very little that is fresh or interesting in it. The wife was buying her husband a birthday present. He saw her shaking hands with a silly-looking jeweler whose facial expression wasn't even amusing, and got jealous. By a very mechanical train of circumstances, the husband grows even more suspicious of this jeweler, until the wife explains. Then it is all made clear.

"The Inner Mind" (Selig), November 2.—By using hypnotism, a weird, uncanny effect is given to an exciting, up-to-date detective story. The impression that it makes grips the spectator in a peculiar way, but grips him strongly. It claims to introduce the methods of "Prof. Locksley, the hypnotist detective." This is probably only a fiction; it is to be hoped it is; for, if the detective claims to use suggestion in hypnosis thus, he is a quack. However, the story is unusual and remarkably powerful. So out-of-the-ordinary is it that it stands out from all other pictures of this kind. It is not instructive, but misleading; much art is, even in such magazines as charge thirty-five cents a copy. The picture, is, however, a star number without any doubt. It will be talked about and it will draw.

"The Price of Ambition" (Kalem), November 3.—There are several strong situations in this film which is based upon an old theme, but is worked out with skill and sympathy. The girl, to gratify her ambition, marries a wealthy man, without love, deserting her lover, a poor, young man. He becomes a monk and years afterward she meets him. The old love is rekindled and she intrigues to get him to follow her. Spies of her husband discover the plot and he hastens to the scene. He undertakes to kill the monk with the sword, but his wife flings herself between them and receives the thrust. She has paid the price of ambition. While there is scarcely anything new in the picture, the scenes are laid around an old Spanish mission, which affords a picturesque background and setting. The acting is in harmony with the subject.

"His First Long Trousers" (Selig), November 3.—In this picture the Selig company has reproduced one of the stories concerning the cutting off of a pair of trousers by successive members of the family until they become little more than swimming trunks. The boy is very much surprised to discover that his first pair of long trousers has been ruined through the kindness of his friends. Most men in middle life will recall the story they heard when boys, when this series of excellent illustrations is thrown on the screen.

"Seeing Indianapolis" (Selig), November 3.—A series of excellent pictures of Indianapolis, one of the most attractive cities of the Middle West. To those who know the city this picture will bring a feeling of pleasure because it reproduces familiar scenes very accurately. Others may rest assured that they are looking upon faithful pictures of the city. It was the home of this reviewer for some time and he desires to commend the photographer for its accuracy.

"Bill Bumper's Bargain" (Essanay), November 3.—In this picture the producer has introduced a reminiscence of Faust. Bill makes a similar bargain, only it is but twelve hours before the Devil calls for the redemption of the agreement. Bill has a good time for the twelve hours and he no doubt thoroughly enjoys such pleasures as are thrust at him. But when the twelve hours are over he is taken to the infernal regions, where he renders full payment for his dozen hours of enjoyment. The picture is a good burlesque and very commendable.

"The Girl and the Motor Boat" (Edison), November 3.—The exciting motor boat race in this picture is the principal feature, though the love story which tells what induced the girl to appear and drive the winning boat to victory is interesting. The idea is not new, but the plan upon which it is worked out is new and the audience watches the race with more than ordinary manifestations of approval. Indeed, there was loud applause in one theater. The rich rival sought to defeat the young man by fair means or foul, but he failed to consider the girl at all and she enters the contest in time to win, and at the same time demonstrate her loyalty to the man she loves.

"The Outlaw Deputy" (Essanay), November 4.—This is one of the most interesting "Western" pictures that the Essanay people have produced in some time. Buck, the outlaw, who had served his time, undertook to bring Kelly in. Kelly was also an outlaw and was "wanted." He and Mrs. Kelly lived in a tent up on the hills. He got Kelly all right, but Mrs. Kelly very nearly got him. He forced her at length to obey him, at the point of his revolver, which he carefully kept pointed at Kelly's heart. In this way he forced Mrs. Kelly to bring out all the firearms and then to hammer them with a hatchet so that she couldn't fire them when his back was turned. He sent her the reward he won. It was enough to keep her till her husband got out. Mr. Anderson's Buck is very interesting. Miss Fields plays Mrs. Kelly.

"Love and Hatred" (Edison), November 4.—Roy Norton's "The Greater Hate," furnished the scenario for this picture. It would have been better if it had furnished only the situation. It seems that more than half of the film was used up in stating the situation. Much of this preliminary work was of use in the story as giving what is called "local color." The incident of the teacher's birthday presents was useful chiefly for that purpose, but added very little to the development of the action. It sometimes takes pages to give local color to a story; a picture is full of it the instant it is thrown on the screen. Consequently, it is a waste of time for a picture producer to linger on such scenes. He should grasp only the kernel of the story, its central situation and picture that in action, if he wants to be powerful. None of the players gave any special signficance to these early scenes. Later, when the woman's true lover and her faithful husband meet, there is a dramatic and powerfully-acted scene. The heroine looked pretty, but the picture was not a very fortunate choice as a vehicle for her expression. She has done better work in romantic comedies.

"The Coward" (Pathe), November 4.—The best scenes in this picture are not the dramatic scenes, although they are well-acted and good, but the skillfully-managed battle scenes. These are very suggestively pictured and thrilling. The picture's chief purpose, though, was to show the pain and horror of the old, armless hero of the Mexican war, when he was told that his younger son was a coward. He was about to commit suicide, which showed that the son, after all, came honestly by his timidity, caused by flightiness of temperament. For the story's convenience, the home of the old man and his family was within a short distance of the field and when the enemy attacks again, the timid boy has a chance to throw himself into the midst of the fray. He stems a retreat, leads a charge and dies as the day is won. It is a satisfying war picture.

"Aunt Jane's Legacy" (Lubin), November 6.—A clever and well-managed comedy-satire. The fun came from the very earnest efforts of two brothers to be pleasant to dear Aunt Jane, who could leave a legacy. They also worked hard to outdo each other in making love to Aunt Jane's niece, who might or might not have been their relative. Aunty brought the trouble on herself. She didn't like her niece's accepted beau. She informed him that he would never get her money and then she invited a nephew. She didn't say which and both came. Their rivalry made a good many laughs in the audience. When it came to open war, Aunty had to call on the third young man, who ejected the rivals. After that Aunt Jane saw him in a different light. It's a pleasant, lively comedy.

"The Coquette" (Selig), November 6.—A tragic story of the rocky Californian seashore. The scenario is rather sentimental, but the players' intelligent acting did much to redeem it. The coquette was a young girl, the only survivor of a wreck, and was rescued by Hugh, the sweetheart of a lame but pretty girl of the village. This girl with others is kind to the shipwrecked girl and provides her with a pretty new dress. When she has recovered, she plays the coquette and engages herself to Hugh and to the brother of his former sweetheart. This brings about a very dramatic quarrel between these two. The picture has a happy ending. It is not a great picture, but it is pretty in both settings and acting and is pleasing.

"Her Cowboy Lover" (Vitagraph), November 6.—A very pretty romantic comedy in a prairie setting in which Miss Story pictures a young woman in love with one man and engaged to another. It is of no consequence that the man she loves is a cowboy, save that he takes a Westerner's ready, simple way out of the difficulty. The young woman was not insensible to obligations both ways and her struggle has been pictured very dramatically and with insight. It required artistic qualities of a high order to bring so much to the surface in such a situation. What is more, Miss Story has probably never had a part in which she was more charming, not even in that thoroughgoing romance, "Tony the Greaser." The whole cast does such fine work and the photographs and all the settings are so praiseworthy that the picture is made a desirable film.

"The Vagabond" (Gaumont), November 7.—A slight but dramatic study of the heart of a vagrant outcast who was tempted to steal, but returned the purse. There are but three actors in the cast; only two show the situation. One of these is, of course, the ragged vagrant; the other is a motherly peasant woman. Her picture is made particularly strong by the very competent Gaumont leading woman. It makes a good film.

"A Trip on a Dirigible Balloon" (Gaumont), November 7.—These Gaumont scenic pictures by reason of excellence are being looked forward to by photoplay spectators. This one, like several recent pictures by this company, is indeed a treat. Take, for instance, the views of the Chateau of Pierrefonds as seen from the balloon which encircles it. No traveler can get such views ordinarily. We see the interesting castle and palace from all sides and the village cuddling up around it. It is a privilege to be a picture reviewer and see all the pictures of this kind or quality.

"He Fought for the U. S. A." (Essanay), November 7.—A wartime melodrama in which the son of the Southern family surprised his father, sweetheart and friends by refusing to fight for the Confederacy when Sumter was fired upon. The situation that was finally pictured dramatically was slow in getting started. The relationship of the characters was not clear at first nor was the business of the early scenes significant enough to be interesting. Later, this Northern sympathizer, now a Union officer, helps to save his own brother, a C. S. A. officer who is wounded and in hiding in the old homestead. There is the usual "after the war" reconciliations. There is little in the picture of types, settings, acting or freshly pictured humanity that is likely to be very popular

"A Modern Cinderella" (Edison), November 7.—There is much in the settings and background of this sprightly and very amusing comedy that reminds one of a recent Edison picture, "An Island Comedy." This is also a Thousand Island picture. It is livelier than the other. Mary Fuller plays the part of a young girl who, thinking herself alone, went in wading and was surprised by a man. She denies that the shoe and stocking that he picked up are hers. She also refuses to have him presented to her. Later, she sees a chance to steal back the shoe and stocking when the man (Darwin Kerr) is absent from his tent on the shore. She is caught. She had said that they were not hers. So, in taking them, she must be stealing and is therefore compelled to own up. It is pictured and acted in a way rich in pleasing comedy and is sure to please. It is a praiseworthy picture.

"Western Hearts" (Selig), November 7.—One reason why this picture, more or less formal Western that it is, keeps its interest is that is awake to a picture's real business from the start. It pictures a dramatic situation in action; doesn't waste our time and patience by making us watch a baker's dozen of scenes that are not understood and whose whole object is local color. The picture has another advantage in the glorious scenes among which it is set. In one or two scenes the background is used meaninglessly for its own sake and this is a weakness. Also one sensational incident, the boarding of a moving freight car from horseback, is not clear as to its significance and confuses the story, until in astonishment we realize that it was the sheriff on his way to get a doctor for the sick wife of a man who, in great straights for money, had that day snatched a wallet from the very doctor that the sheriff was about to bring. It's a good picture.

"A Message from Beyond" (Vitagraph), November 4.—The title of this picture suggests a story founded on some psychic phenomenon like telepathy, or some spiritualistic communication from the dead. In one sense, it does picture the communication as coming from the dead mother to reunite the obdurate father and the weak and erring son; but that interpretation is not forced upon us; what happens seems also like coincidence. The picture is very wisely conducted and powerful. The producer knew just how far he could go and carry his audience with him, and stopped at the right line. Ghosts never really "get over" as ghosts. The painting of the mother on the wall is shown as taking on an uncanny reality, but it is still a painting; the expression doesn't change (a weak producer would have made it do so), nor does it move. The rose falls by accident from the vase beneath it to the boy's feet. It was a rose from the mother's bush. The father that morning had placed it there, an anniversary offering. When the father, hearing a noise, comes into the darkened room, it is the rose in the boy's hand that softens him. In this picture Miss Julia Swayne has given us one of her finest and most beautiful portrayals. It is a fine success. The lad also succeeds in being boyish all through and his part is made unusually convincing. This picture is one of the Vitagraph life portrayals and it is worth while very truly.

"Uncle's Money" (C. G. P. C.), November 7.—A clever farce with a fresh idea that could be utilized to make many other farces quite different. Between the rich uncle and his nephew's family there is not much difference in their attitude toward each other. The nephew, thinking the uncle rich, invites him to live with his family. The uncle refuses. Uncle thinks he has been ruined and recalls the refusal, fooling his nephew by a promise to make him his heir. Later, he learns that his money is safe and sets a trap into which nephew falls. He kicks him out of the house, only to learn that his uncle was really rich. It has a number of good laughs.

"The Gossip" (Vitagraph), November 3.—Miss Finch wins the honors in this amusing satire by a very good portrait of the chief gossip of the village. This time the gossip most certainly put her foot in it. The matron to whom she tried to tell an especially unpleasant but fresh bit of news gave her a very chilly hearing. She was glad enough to be able to get even and with the absent-minded help of Mr. Bunny, one of the village dominies, she gets the whole village, including the husband of the matron in question, very much worked up. She gets into trouble first and then into the ducking pond. Miss Finch's interpretation of the walk home is one of the best things seen in some time. It is a very clever picture.

"An Episode Under Henry III" (C. G. P. C.), November 4.—A very well colored and romantic picture, much along the lines of that Edison picture, "The Three Musketeers," recently released. It is an interesting, dramatic, tragic story, well acted and graceful. It is likely to please.

Independent.

"Saints and Sinners" (Rex), November 9.—A very interesting picture, it is a melodrama of summer hotel life and, if taken as a whole, it is not a life portrayal, it has several very human and interesting portraits of modern characters. It takes a half-dozen types such as one might find in a summer hotel piazza (the saint, sinner, frivilous wife, sporty character, hotel keeper) and then very cleverly gets up a scandal about them which gives a very well utilized chance of showing just what part each of these characters takes in it. It shows—and the impression it creates is very clear and deep—how out of focus the world's view is likely to be in such cases. It's a picture that sophisticated people will greatly enjoy. It is moral and very commendable as deeply interesting and full of truth.

"A True Westerner" (Nestor), November 8.—A "Western" along the formal lines, it pictures a young tenderfoot who fell into the hands of a cheating gambler. Losing all his money, he helped himself to two hundred dollars out of a fund that he and his older brother were saving to buy a home for their old mother, then in an attempt to win it back he risked and lost the whole. The true Westerner is his uncle. This man saw the gambler cheat and took the money away from him. A little later he found his nephew about to rob his safe. He watched from behind a piece of furniture. The boy resisted the temptation. Then the uncle came out, shook his hand and returned the money taken from the gambler. The uncle is a very well acted and interesting character, although the whole picture is well played. It is an interesting story.

"The Missing Heir" (Thanhouser), November 7.—The nephew was to inherit in case the missing heir, a grandson, was not found before a fixed date. We are shown the missing heir as a homeless waif found by an Italian on the slum streets of New York and taken to his lodgings. This Italian sees the advertisement and coming to the lawyer's office to tell him of the heir, meets the nephew, who pays him to keep the child hidden. The little prisoner arouses the sympathy of the news girl who lives on the same landing. She overhears the plot to do away with the child and brings help so that he is not only saved in a sensational way, but the nephew and the Italian are brought to justice. The picture is perhaps a bit too sensational, as presented, to get the most effect out of the pathetic situation. Excitement was desired and sentiment was sacrificed. It thrills more for the moment, but is less likely to be remembered as a human picture. The Thanhouser Kid plays the little heir and the whole picture is competently handled. It will probably be applauded and enjoyed.

"The Last of the Mohicans" (Thanhouser), November 10.—Cooper's famous novel is extremely well pictured on this film. The settings and backgrounds are on the actual scene of the story, near Lake George. The costumes were carefully chosen, and the players plainly took much pleasure in interpreting the different parts. As a consequence, we have our old friends, "Hawkeye," with the Mohicans, father and son; the crafty Huron, "Le Gros Serpent"; the two daughters of the colonel, and the brave major, all on the screen and just as real as life. It puts us back in the glorious time when we first read Cooper's gripping tales. How can such a film help being popular? It is very worthy and one can safely predict a fine success for it.

"Folks of Old Virginia" (Champion), November 6.—A war-time picture for North and South, dignified, thrilling, pretty, and very dramatic. Perhaps it doesn't ring quite true to life and human hearts, as it is pictured. War is too serious a business for such misunderstandings to come as needlessly as here shown; yet the sentiment is reasonable, which is the chief thing. The hero wanted to go with the first enlistment, but his mother needed him. The girl knew this, yet she returned his rings and called him a coward. There is camera consciousness in some of its prettiest scenes; but, on the whole, it is a distinct advance over this company's work of six months ago. One might remark that all its recent pictures are better than formerly.

"The Moonshiner's Trail" (Champion), November 8.—A broken jug of moonshine sprinkled its contents along the road and its bouquet made the trail plain. The revenue officer followed it home to the moonshiner's cabin. He then craftily manages to capture two of the band, but doesn't guard himself against the moonshiner's daughter, who fells him with a club of wood. Later she repents and takes a message from him to the sheriff, who comes with a posse, releases the prisoner and captures the moonshiners. The ending is a love scene, of course. There is very little that is new or freshly interesting in the picture; it is the same old story and is not convincing. But, to the uncritical who haven't seen to many of this kind, it will be exciting. The types are good, although the heroine wasn't well cast in this part, which demanded a girlish character.

"The Three Shell Game" (American), November 6.—The homesteader was weak and foolish; he gambled his fortune away to a three shell man. The tramp whom the homesteader had helped, played bandit, got the money back from the cheating gambler and married the daughter of the family. The picture is not so good as other "Americans" have been. There is nothing very fresh in it save the characters. It is interesting, however.

"The Mexican" (American), November 9.—The Mexican adopted a baby that he found and she grew up to young womanhood as his daughter. In later years some ugly punchers first insult the girl and attack the old man in his hut, but are driven off by some friendly rangers. There is nothing very fresh in the situation. One of the American cowboys falls in love with the girl, but her father has been treated so unjustly that he incites the other Mexicans of the neighborhood to make a raid on the American ranch. Some are killed, the others are beaten off, and the old man is captured. The puncher who had been ugliest in his treatment of the Mexican and his daughter takes the others with him to the hut, captures the girl, and brings her to the tree where the old man is about to be hanged, intending to hang both together. The Mexican reveals who the girl is. The ugly cowboy seems much concerned and departs without hanging either. The lovers are united. The picture doesn't deserve any special notice among recent "Flying A" pictures.

"Marriage" (Reliance), November 8.—A story of a young society doctor and his wife. A doctor's time is never his own. Calls, more or less urgent, are bound to come, interrupting his moments of leisure and relaxation. He is called away from the most formal dinners. What is more, he is compelled to run the risk of bringing home contagious diseases to his home. The danger of this the doctor knows how to make the very least, but it happens sometimes. What is more, the average doctor's family expenses are usually more than his income, for his profession compels him to live a social life. A doctor needs a wise and womanly wife. It is clearly shown in this picture. Under the stress of these hard and trying conditions, this young wife of the picture lost her love for the doctor and left him, but soon she realized and returned to be his helpmeet to the end. It is well acted, well photographed and very interesting.

"The Track Walker" (Reliance), November 11.—A very melodramatic railroad story of the kind dear to the gallery's heart. It is built on the well-used formula and has many sensational incidents; some of these are even freaky. Even a sketchy outline will show its quality. The track walker has a pretty wife, and the villain has taken a fancy to her; he is her husband's friend. She repulses the villain. On her way to visit the city, she waves to her husband as the train passes. On the day she is expected back the villain gets drunk with other rough characters and determines to wreck the train. The gang captures the track walker, who is also switchman, binds him, carries him back into the fields and, with his keys, opens the switch to ditch the train. One has thrown away a cigarette. The track walker rubs the bandage off his face, rolls over to the cigarette, gets it in his mouth and with it burns through his bonds. He is free, but cannot close the switch, for his key is gone. He has no red flag nor red handkerchief nor red shirt, so gashes his arm and makes of his white shirt a bloody flag, then falls fainting across the track. The villain comes to himself, runs to the switch, but he has lost the key, so he uses the bloody shirt to stop the train. Then we have the emotional pretty picture for a closing scene. Walthall is the railroader; Greenlief is the villain, and Miss Ruth Robinson is the young wife, so it is a very well acted picture within the limitations of such. The photographs are heavy and not always clear.

"He Didn't Like the Tune" (Yankee), November 10.—Not speaking of violins, a fiddle is apt to be an instrument of torture to everyone in the house. Poor Mr. LeMoin's wife was a fiddler. It drove him distracted and he smashed the fiddle; so his wife and her brother, also musical, put up a job on him. The brother put on a false beard and the two went away together, she leaving a note saying that she had eloped. Hubby had a long chase through much interesting scenery, including the Palisades of the Hudson as seen from a motor boat. They do him up so brown that he makes wifie a promise never to interfere again with her music.

"A Coward's Regeneration" (Yankee), November 6.—The Yankee photographer at his best comes as near as possible perhaps to giving to the natural colors their right value in untinted films. Some of the scenes in this picture are beautiful; one, for instance, showing a police sergeant at his desk, is a masterpiece of portraiture. Some of its out-of-door scenes are foggy, as though a print had become light-struck. The story is a melodrama fairly well designed in a loose way and well acted, but it is not intended for very critical spectators. The average spectator, however, will probably like it very much because of its lively action. The hero is called a "coward," but he never showed any cowardice and turns out in the end a very brave man, winning the pretty heroine for his wife.

"Little Willie Challenges Jim Jackson" (Eclair), November 6.—Jim Jackson in this picture is the present world's champion black prizefighter; little Willie, perhaps five years of age, dreams that he challenges him and then goes into hard training as a "white hope." There is much fun in it, but nothing more amusing than is the big African umbrella held over Jackson's head by a page.

"Life at the Bottom of the Sea" (Eclair), November 6.—Many strange fish and queer creatures live in the sea. This picture of these interesting beings from a very good aquarium, is well worth while. It is instructive and novel.

"Dolly's Doll" (Ambrosio), November 8.—The woman deserted her little girl and husband to run away with another man. He ill-treated her and was killed in a brawl. She comes back weeping to sit on the doorstep of her old home. The child's doll falls from the upper story and the child, coming down for it, finds her mother. She brings about a reconciliation between her mother and father. The acting of the Ambrosio stock company is well known; this picture is nothing special.

"Tweedledum's Motor Car" (Ambrosio), November 8.—A rough-and-tumble farce. There have been so many of them that this doesn't need special comment, save to say that Tweedledum was chased by the police because there was no license number on his car. He had it on the seat of his trousers.

"An Interrupted Elopement" (Solax), November 8.—It was so naturally acted and its incidents are so unlikely that it has something of the quality of a mincepie dream. There is nothing in it that, taken by itself, is very funny, but, as a whole, it is amusing. It is acceptable as entertainment, but is not likely to be talked about very long.

"The Effects of a Rocket" (Itala), November 11.—A man with a burning rocket tied to him led the chase in this film and broke the crockery. It's nothing more than usual.

"A Victim of Competition" (Itala), November 11.—The victim was a Chinaman in Italy. He had a dozen bundles; different porters each got one of these and walked off with it. He was a victim of competition in many different ways. It's a plate-smashing, run-and-knock-down farce. There is a very amusing idea under it, however.

"Mobilization of the American Fleet on the Hudson" (Powers), November 7.—The Powers Company has caught some very interesting moving views of the U. S. ships in the great flotilla that was just reviewed by President Taft. It contains some very interesting views of the Utah taken in the Brooklyn navy yard, and some dandy New York harbor views taken from the big ship as she slowly steamed up the Hudson past the other ships of war to take her place in the line. It shows near views of many of the ships, submarines, etc. Most of the photographs are splendid and the film is one of the most interesting local pictures possible just at present.

"For the Tribe" (Powers), November 11.—The best thing in this picture is the galloping of horses. The central theme of the picture is fresh, but it is not made very effective and doesn't convince at all. Some of the story is not quite clear, but the main theme is this: An Indian lad is adopted by white people, grows up with them and is engaged to marry a white girl. An ugly cowpuncher, twenty years after the boy was sold, kills one of the tribe, and the chief, the young man's old father, recalls him to lead them on the war path. He leaves his sweetheart and at the council fire of the tribe tears off his collar and white shirt. Just what his influence with the tribe accomplished isn't clear, nor is it clear what the sheriff effected when he came to the tepee with a posse. In the end the young chief dreams of the white girl and returns to her.

"A Race for a Bride" (Bison), November 7.—In an exciting finish of a long, hard race Tim wins a bride. The race is speedy and "Snowball," the horse he rides, doesn't lie down on his job of bringing Tim in. The girl's promising to marry him if he wins is not new in pictures, but that is not of great moment, for the race is the picture's feature. And it, and the villain's attempt to win by foul means, which was foiled by the other boys, who demanded fair play, make a picture with "go." The photographs are not good. One can hardly see the faces except when hats are off and the players very close to the camera. It is a picture that will excite the gallery.

"Woman's Broken Promise" (Bison), November 10.—Wenona gave Lone Wolf a promise that at the end of the school term, four years, she would marry him. While Lone Wolf is away at school, Big Bear woos Wenona and Lone Wolf is forgotten. He finds them wed and gone from the village. He might have taken vengeance, but didn't and becomes a lone wanderer. The player who takes Wenona's part looks not unlike an Indian, but most certainly two or three other girls who take squaw parts do not look like Indians, although one of them shows herself a competent actress. One looks more like Beatrice Conci than like a squaw. The picture is interesting, well acted and acceptable, but it isn't photographed very well.

"Bill Is Taken for a Ghost" (Lux), November 10.—It happened in Spook Grange. Bill had been in swimming in the stream near by, and took a walk wrapped in a sheet. He scared some tourists. There is a comic chase in the picture, but nothing of special interest or beauty.

"The Diversions of a Nursemaid" (Lux), November 10.—The nursemaid left her charge, a little girl, and a nurseman left his charge, a senile old man, and the two, at an expensive restaurant, got drunk on champagne. It is only so so.

"Waiting at the Church" (Imp), November 6.—A brisk and amusing comedy, full of laughs. It pictures a bridegroom's difficulties on his way to his wedding and shows why he was late in getting to the church; but it is, nevertheless, quite fresh and out of the ordinary run. The scenario has a good comedy situation which is well managed. The acting also is good. Jim was to be married at two o'clock. In the office he was on pins and needles, for the boss didn't come in till quarter to two and he couldn't get away till then. It is already past the hour when we see him rushing out of his boarding house in his new clothes. It happened that the wife of his boss had sent her nursegirl with the baby to the store. Jim, in his hurry, meets them at a sharp corner. All three go down together; it looks realistic, but the baby is well taken care of. The girl is knocked unconscious. The ambulance comes and, before Jim knows it, it has gone away with the nurse and he is standing there with the baby in his arms. No one will help him get rid of it, not even the cop. It looks as though he'll have to take it to the church with him. Meanwhile his boss has been called up and with his wife is out seeking for the baby. The cop directs them to the church. Jim, in despair, has left the kid in a cab, and, after pacifying the bride, has been married. The wedding party is leaving the church when the cabbie runs up and puts the kid back in his arms. It was a great inconvenience before; now it's a nuisance. The kid's father and mother arrive and save the situation. It's a good, desirable comedy.

"The Wife's Awakening" (Imp), November 9.—While the picture does not give a closely knit, single-situation drama, it does give a story very dramatic and clearly articulated, one that rises on an even slope, becomes more and more interesting, to a very effective and emotional climax. Human hearts can hardly know life except by experience. Like the inventor's wife in this picture, we are often asleep and don't see our own true good until something, often some little thing, wakes us, and then, like her, we see. Her husband had been blinded by an electric flash while working on an invention. He couldn't go around with her to dances and good times as formerly, and she was led into temptation. She was about to leave him for another man. Packing up her things, she came on the dress of her baby who had died and this brought her to herself. It sounds slight, but it is not so in the picture, which is very affecting. The film's weak point is that on her coming back she finds her blind husband about to commit suicide. These suicides and attempted suicides are not fair. They criticize life unjustly, give it a stab in the back. There is more to life than material happiness. It wouldn't have weakened this picture one whit, if the man had recognized that. Besides, these suicides are quite conventional; they've been used and therefore they are used again. Spectators don't hanker for them. They are the easiest way out.

A Leavenworth, Kan., paper has had the baseness to hint that the moving picture people are back of that war between Italy and Turkey. Oh, cruel thought!

THE RANDOM SHOTS OF A PICTURE FAN.

There are too many comic tragedies. The comic element in them always comes toward the end when, according to the best intentions of the film maker, the audience ought to get ready for its tear-wipers. I saw one like that the other day, a Pathe, "acted and made in this country." It was the sixty-ninth version of the "lost memory plot" that I had seen since the Pathe classic "The Hunter's Grief" had won its great success. Well, in this particular reel an old man had been left on a solitary island and when he was, in due course of events, rescued, his memory was gone. He only had about 150 feet of film to recover it in and his struggle to be true to probabilities and at the same time keep within the film limit were pathetic to the degree of painfulness. The necessities of the film limit won and the result was funny. Even the sailors had to laugh and when everybody was beginning to shake hands the audience appreciated the involuntary humor of the thing and there was a ripple of genuine merriment. Can't we have a closed season for the "Lost Memory Thing" say for about six months?

A Lubin film, "Two Tars Ashore," showed us two animals, that seem to occur very often and without any apparent necessity—a little pig and a domestic fowl, I am not sure whether it was a duck or a goose. The same two animals did duty, if memory will serve, in that splendid old fashioned Lubin comedy, "The Wrong Valise," and in some others that I could name. Unless intended as symbols I do not think the constant appearance of certain animals in certain makes of film is very pleasing to an audience. To get back to the film in question, its comedy bubbled over with refinement; the fight in front of the frankfurter stand and the dosing of the young pig with milk in front of the bar being notable instances of it. The Lubin people have shown that they are well capable of turning out splendid original comedy, clean and boisterous, just the kind that an exhibitor loves to get and a fan likes to see. I will only mention their recent success, "Love's Victory." Why, then, they will descend to such a level as "The Two Tars Ashore" is more than the poor fan can understand in a hurry.

Said a well traveled friend of the fan the other day, apropos of the fine Vitagraph picture, "Regeneration": "Do you know, that this picture was hard to make by an American company. The idea is to show the birth of a new soul in a tainted and tarnished woman. Of course the taint and tarnish had to be shown plainly and effectively. Well, it would have been easy for a French or an Italian company to show that and run no danger of offending the moral sense and the propriety of the audience. Paris or Vienna could have gone to the limit on that with no possibility of disgusting even the women in the audience. Usage, you know, often makes morality. An American maker had to use the utmost art and diplomacy to keep the story strong and wholesome at the same time. The Vitagraph people displayed fine tact and lost not a bit of the force. All the outward and visible signs of wickedness allowed to the bad woman of the American stage is the traditional cigarette, a jaunty looking hat, an unconventional sitting attitude on a table and an occasional drink of whiskey. The rest of the colors for painting a wicked woman had to be supplied by the artist and the task was well done. It was one of the pictures that draw the heart and eye toward the people on the screen."

I heard some fans say some time ago, it may be quite a long time ago, that the bad film of the older companies would never again show those horrible long streaks of sprocket impressions, but I guess my friends must have been mistaken. A friend living on the east side invited me to a theater on Second Avenue and I saw more dents of sprockets on films than I ever did before in my life in one evening. They came down the face of the weeping heroine, cut across the galloping cowboys and completely spoiled one climax in a drama.

Never again will I go to a theater, knowing that fellow citizens of African descent form part of the audience. Not that I have the slightest prejudice against them as such, on the contrary; I don't attach very much importance to the color of a man's skin, but so many of the colored people are like children and insist on laughing at the pictures, no matter how tragic they may be. That is not the worst of it, either. They have such a hearty, rollicking, infectious laugh, that they carry the audience with them. I found myself shaking with laughter at a tragic climax, because of the comments and giggling and gurgling sounds that came from two colored men. No matter how disgusted I felt, both at them and at myself, I simply had to laugh, and the more I sought to check myself the worse it got. I left the theater thoroughly ashamed of myself and determined not to be mad again at what may seem foolish laughter, for I know now it is at times entirely involuntary. P. F.

"BREAKING THE SEVENTH COMMANDMENT" (Imp).

"Breaking the Seventh Commandment" is a story replete with pathos, depicting life among the unfortunate. An aged mechanic is discharged to make room for a younger and more active man. He has been rather improvident and the loss of his weekly wage works a hardship on his family, consisting of his wife and little girl. The daughter has only one comfort in life—a beautiful dog—and she derives much pleasure in playing with the canine, which is an intelligent animal. The employer, who brought about the dismissal of the old man, also has a daughter. She sees the dog of the poor little girl and covets it. Accustomed to humoring her every whim the wealthy contractor seeks to buy the dog, but the girl will not part with it, although a generous sum is offered. The girl falls ill and the father has no money to purchase delicacies or medical attention. He conceives the idea of selling the dog and does so, taking him to the residence of his former employer and obtaining money. Hastening home with his arms full of the necessaries of life he finds his daughter very ill. She awakens and asks for her dog. She will not be comforted. The physician tries to give her medicine, but she is inconsolable on account of the absence of the dog—her only playmate. The father is in despair. His conscience smites him and he becomes desperate. Returning to the grounds of the contractor he steals the dog and takes it home. The child is cheered, becomes better immediately and the father is temporarily happy. His joy is shortlived, for the owner of the dog enters the room, accompanied by an officer. The contractor threatens arrest and then notices the dog on the bed of the sick child, clasped in her arms. It all dawns on him, and the theft is forgotten. The dog is rightfully restored to the child and the old man is again taken on as an employee.

"THE MAN IN THE TAXI" (Lubin).

Certainly the path of love could not possibly be rougher or more tangled than it was in the case of John Mason and Betty Brown, who are the principal characters in a Lubin comedy-drama, which will soon be released, entitled "The Man in the Taxi." Betty's father objected to Cupid's plans for the pair, so they decided there was nothing left to do but to elope. When John's father heard of this he announced that John would have to choose between Betty and himself. Of course John chose Betty and found himself disinherited.

He arranged to have his friend, Bob, meet him in front of the hotel at 11:30 at night. Arriving early, John settled himself comfortably in his taxicab to wait for Bob. Bob lounged in the hotel lobby, waiting for John. A woman and her husband entered and the woman stopped at the desk to deposit her jewels when a strange man grabbed them and dashed out of the hotel. Seeing the open taxicab there he jumped into it and compelled the chauffeur to drive swiftly away. He noticed that he was being pursued by men in another taxi. He saw that his only chance was to cast suspicion on the man whom he had found sleeping in the taxi—namely, John. He emptied most of the jewels into his own pocket and then put the bag into John's pocket. Then he drew a calling card from John's pocket and put it in his own. Having done this, he leaped from the flying taxi, but fell and was rendered unconscious. He was taken to a hospital, where he was entered as John Mason, his identity being judged from the card in his pocket.

Meanwhile John had been captured and taken to the station house. He refused to give his name, but the jewel bag in his pocket pointed to him as the thief.

Betty, after failing to meet John, went back to the house. where she found she had locked herself out. She spent the night tearfully on the porch. When the morning papers came she was astounded at the headlines, which stated that a John Mason had made a daring attempt at robbery and that another John Mason had been badly hurt in an accident. She called Bob on the 'phone and together they went to the hospital, where they learned that the supposed John Mason had died. Bob recognized the body as that of the thief of the previous night. The jewels were found under his pillow.

Taking them, Betty and Bob hurried to police headquarters. Then everything was explained. John's father, shocked at the report of his son's death, was in a repentant mood. Both the fathers, after the exciting incidents of the night, were ready to surrender to Cupid. It is a story of extraordinary plot and action well knit together.

To the Users of Excello Flaming Arc Lamps

You must use "Excello" Carbons if you want good results from Excello Lamps.

Any statement to the contrary is false, because good working of these lamps is only guaranteed by the manufacturers, Messrs. Koerting & Mathiesen, Leipsig, when "Excello" carbons are used.

The manufacturer ought to know what carbon his lamp requires, and as the "Excello" Carbon has been specially designed by them for use in their lamp, it stands to reason that it is "the" carbon for that type of lamp.

The Excello Arc Lamp Company of this city say in their catalogue, on page 7:

> "Excello Carbons are superior in quality of material, evenness of texture, precision in shape and dimensions, and freedom from blisters to any carbon yet produced. These are the qualities that have made them famous in every country where flaming arc lamps are used. They are suitable for any type of flaming arc lamp. Each carbon bears the name 'EXCELLO' branded on its side."

In view of this statement it will be hard for anyone to make the consumer believe any other brand is as good as the "Excello."

See that every carbon which you buy bears the name "EXCELLO" and that each package is labeled with the trade mark.

"LITTLE RED RIDING HOOD."

This Famous Children's Story Delightfully Produced By Essanay Player.

"Little Red Riding Hood," the Wolf, Grandmother, the two woodsmen and all the delightful characters of this child's fairy story make up an excellent six hundred foot picture soon to be released by the Essanay Company. It is a play which will please the children, particularly, and will prove really interesting to adults.

Miss Eva Prout.

There never was a more sprightly, more happily cast "Red Riding Hood." Miss Eva Prout, who plays the part, has been seen in other Essanay productions, and her charm, her excellent work, has been praised by all critics who have seen her. "The Wolf," who has to be human enough to talk, is a very good sort of a villain, while "Grandmother" is just the right kind of a grandmother. The scenes have been excellently chosen.

Is it necessary to tell the story of "Red Riding Hood?" Here, at least, is a brief synopsis. Little Red Riding Hood is given a basket of good things to eat to take to Grandma, who lives on the other side of the big woods. Tripping happily along the path through the woods, she passes the wood-cutters, who nod her a pleasant good-day, and tell her to watch out for bears and wolves which may be prowling about. She has gone very little further, and is loitering along, picking flowers, when suddenly a great, shaggy wolf emerges from the underbrush. At first she is frightened, but the wolf speaks kindly to her and tells her not to fear. But all the time the wolf is thinking of what a fine morsel the little girl would make. He dares not to touch her now, as the wood-cutters are near, and when he learns that she is going to her grandmother's he proposes a race between them, and the first one to arrive at grandmother's cabin is to have a prize. Immediately after, the wolf starts off and when out of sight of the girl increases his speed, easily outdistancing the little girl. Inside, he chases grandmother under the bed, gets into her clothes, and crawling under the covers, waits for Little Red Riding Hood. When Red Riding Hood arrives she is puzzled to know what has caused the change in her grandmother.

Who will forget the end of the story?

"Oh, Grandma, what long sharp nails you've got!" exclaimed Little Red Riding Hood.

"The better to feel with, my child," replied the wily wolf.

"But, Grandma, what great big eyes you have!"

"The better to see with, my child."

"And, Grandma, what great long teeth you have!"

"The better to eat you with, my child!" And the wolf springs at the terrified little girl, but he is too late. The woodmen have followed Little Red Riding Hood, and entering the cabin at this very moment, kill the wolf with their axes. Grandmother crawls from under the bed and there is a happy reunion.

On the same reel with "Little Red Riding Hood" is an excellent comedy under the title of "'Twas Ever Thus." The two pictures are released Thursday, Nov. 30.

NEW HOUSE FOR SARANAC LAKE, N. Y.

J. H. Farrington, former proprietor of the Bijou moving picture show in Saranac Lake, N. Y., has leased the Opera House and installed a new Powers No. 6 machine with a Fort Wayne compensarc as a current saver. Doors were opened October 9, with a fine line of Independent films to a record-breaking attendance. The service is the only Independent service used at Saranac Lake and is taking well with the public. Mr. Farrington has in course of construction at 55 Broadway, this city, a new up to date ground floor theater, with a seating capacity of 500. A well equipped stage for traveling troupes will be a feature of the new place. Moving pictures will be shown every night excepting nights that plays are booked, and those nights the pictures will be run before the show and between the acts.

THE MYSTERY OF THE MAINE.

Special Release of the Raising of the Wreck of the U. S. S. Maine, in Havana Harbor.

The newest thing in the way of a special release is an excellent two-reel subject entitled "The Mystery of the Maine," which is an authentic and authorized moving picture of the raising of the Maine in Havana Harbor. So far this picture is in two reels, but within six months it will be augmented by a third reel as the work of raising the destroyed vessel progresses. The picture has been called The Mystery of the Maine for the reason that as yet it cannot be definitely determined, even by moving pictures, as to whether the explosion took place within the vessel or from without.

The principal difficulty of making this picture was in getting the permission from the government to do so. It required some very skillful diplomacy on the part of Mr. John Reed, Jr., to obtain the official consent. This permission was granted only after he had convinced the Navy Department that the pictures would make the most valuable record of their labors in Havana Harbor than any other possible medium. The pictures are positively the only motion views that have been taken inside the coffer-dam.

The work of Raising the Maine is a gigantic undertaking; much more stupendous than anyone would suppose from reading the average newspaper report. It is equal in effect and cost with the building of a city skyscraper, with the added element of danger of collapse. It was necessary in the beginning to surround the Maine with a chain of coffer-dams against which there is a tremendous pressure of water from the outside. These are very clearly shown from all points of view. The photographs of the wreck itself are more than interesting. It is the ghost of a once proud vessel that we see, returned after thirteen years from its watery grave. It has a strange fascination for the beholder and shows the effect of many years' repose in Davy Jones' Locker. The picture will stand for many years to come as a valuable record as well as an excellent means of instruction for students in engineering work.

"The Mystery of the Maine" will be handled as a State rights picture. It will have a wide scope, because it is more than an ordinary moving picture, it has an educational value and is equally appropriate for church, school or amusement purposes. It is to be marketed through a special company to be known as Raising the Maine Film Company, with offices already in the Exchange Building, 145 West 45th Street, New York City.

"HOME"—A THANKSGIVING STORY (Edison).

A pretty Thanksgiving story will be released by the Edison Company. It introduces the spectator to a typical New England home, where the mother is sorrowing for the absence of a wayward son. She inserts an advertisement in a newspaper, asking the boy to come back home. The "personal" gets into the hands of a number of people, who by reading it are reminded of their own Thanksgiving days in the past. The advertisement has the same profound effect on a club-home. He succeeds, however, in becoming the uninvited passenger of a freight train and reaches his home, sad-eyed and discouraged. He steps into the little dining room of the old homestead just after the turkey has been served and the old folks are saying grace. As the gray-haired mother raises her head to her husband, she notices the wayward son, who unperceived by her, had entered the home and had joined in the prayer at table. The Thanksgiving atmosphere is happily portrayed and brought home to the spectator in the first few scenes.

WHO THEY ARE.

Some Handy Data on the Champion Ball Players Who Became Picture Players.

The four cracks of the World's Champion Athletics, who were engaged by the Thanhouser Company to appear in "The Baseball Bug," a comedy released Friday, Nov. 24th, have had stirring baseball careers, and have figured strongly in the headlines in the past few years. To the dyed-in-the-wool fan, their diamond records are gospel. But for the busy fan who likes to have his baseball jogged him we have gathered the following:

Jack Coombs is 29 years of age. He graduated from Colby College in 1906 and went direct from college to the American League. His first noteworthy game being with the Athletics against Boston, when he pitched one of the longest games in the history of baseball, lasting 24 innings. Coombs' arm went back on him the next year, but he gamely stuck to the game, playing in the outfield. The next year his arm came back in good style, and since then he has been known as one of the headiest pitchers in baseball, doing his best work on joining the Athletics. His record this year is 31 games won, 11 lost. In last year's World's Series against the Chicago Cubs, Coombs won three straight games, equalling Mathewson's famous record of 1905. In the World's Series this year he clashed with Mathewson for the first time, neither ever having lost a World's Series game, and Coombs won. Mr. Coombs will be in vaudeville this winter, appearing with Bender and Morgan and the Misses Katherine and Violet Pearl.

"Big Chief" Bender is a full-blooded Chippewa Indian, twenty-nine years of age, born in Oklahoma. He attended Carlisle Indian Institute. A highly educated man, he is known in baseball as one of the cleverest pitchers and batsmen. He went direct from Carlisle to the Philadelphia Athletics, nine years ago, and has been one of Mack's mainstays for the past three years. His pitching record this year is 19 games won and 5 lost.

Henry Richard Morgan, known as "Cy," is a native of Martins Ferry, Ohio, right across from the West Virginia line. He is known as the minstrel of baseball players—putting in his winters on the stage. He broke into professional baseball ten years ago in the New England League at the age of twenty-one, and pitched such sensational ball that he was signed by the St. Louis Nationals. Next year he went to the American Association for more seasoning and then to Boston three years ago, where his work was so excellent that Connie Mack paid $3,500 and two crack players for him. He is one of the best spit-ball pitchers in the business. His record for the year is 17 games won and 7 lost.

Robert E. Oldring, known as "Rube," is a native of Mount Vernon, New York. He is twenty-seven years old and broke into the game around the lots of Harlem and the Bronx, New York City, six years ago. He was with Memphis down South when Connie Mack selected him for the Athletics. He has been the regular center-fielder of the Athletics for the last four years, and is ranked as one of the speediest men on the diamond. His batting average is the high one of .300 and he has few equals as a sure hitter. He appears to be getting better every year, with this past his most successful season to date in big league baseball.

The picture is issued as a regular release.

COWBOY AND INDIAN FRONTIER CELEBRATION PICTURES.

Messrs. Ott, Naugle & Brosius, proprietors of the Star Amusement Company, with headquarters at the Antler Hotel, Pittsburgh, Pa., have bought the rights for Western Pennsylvania of the Tournament Film Company's production, "The Cowboy and Indian Frontier Celebration at Cheyenne, Wyoming." These gentlemen have been exhibiting the picture for four weeks in Pittsburg and have been graced with capacity houses at each performance.

THE PRINCESS THEATER OF NASHVILLE, TENN.

The Princess Theater is rapidly going up at 511 Church Street. The foundation has been laid, and the brickwork is now built up to a height of 15 feet, showing the twelve exits on the ground floor. It will be constructed entirely of new brick and cement, no mortar being used. The downstairs of the residence at 159 Fifth Avenue, North, has been torn out, preparatory to building one of its entrances. The storehouse at 511 Church Street has been overhauled, preparatory for the tiling, etc., to be put in; this will be the other entrance. The size of the building, although only started, looms up, showing it to be the largest theater in Nashville in dimensions. Manager Ready states that the contractors have promised to deliver the house, completely finished, by Christmas week. The opening pictures and singers will be features of the highest order.

BUSY DAYS FOR H. & H.

C. J. Hite, of Hutchinson & Hite, is one of the Independents who is profiting by the popularity of Independent films throughout the Middle West. "We are steadily adding new theaters," said Mr. Hite. "I have just returned from a little business trip over our territory and am very much encouraged with the prospects. Last week we opened accounts with the Isis Theater, North Avenue and Swayer Street, Chicago. Then we added the Lyric Theater, Halstead and Madison Streets, Chicago. L. M. Carroll, Jacksonville, Ill., has opened an Independent house and will take his service from us."

Miss Agnes Egan has accepted the offer of Mr. B. E. Clements, of the National Film Distributing Company, to act as his private secretary. Attaching Miss Egan to the staff of the National Company shows good judgment on the part of Mr. Clements, as this young lady is thoroughly familiar with all the various departments of the industry.

An awe-inspiring and wonderful motion picture spectacle, taken by special permission of the Department of War, of the United States Government

This two-reel feature film, which we consider the most important work ever undertaken in moving pictures, shows every important step of this daring engineering achievement during the last eight months, where we have had our director and camera operator stationed, since this work began.

The U. S. S. "Maine" as she appeared September 1911

It is hardly necessary to say that there is not a man, woman, or child in the United States, who will not be anxious to see these pictures where for the first time will be revealed the mystery and secrets of this national calamity that have remained hidden beneath the waters of Havana Harbor for over thirteen years.

"BLACKBEARD."

Selig's Great Pirate Tragedy Will Be Released at an Early Date.

By Cecil Metcalf.

Last September the Western branch of the Selig Polyscope Co. secured two good sized sailing vessels, stripped them for action, placed several frowning cannon upon their decks, manned them with some three hundred properly costumed actors and sailors, lead by the combined strength of both of Selig's Western stock companies, and set out to sea to produce a pirate picture that would surpass, if possible, the "Buccaneers"—the Selig pirate picture which proved to be one of last year's popular successes.

At a private exhibition in the Selig Vault a few days ago, I saw the result of all this preparation. To say the least, the Selig people got what they went after—they usually do. "Blackbeard" surpasses any subject in this line that the Selig people have yet released.

"Blackbeard," a sordid figure of history, who was supposed to have held sway over the Spanish Main some four hundred years ago, together with his nefarious crew, attack the town of Martinique, where they burn, rob, and pillage the inhabitants. The governor and his family, together with their friends, are taken aboard the pirate ship. In one scene we see the governor (superbly played by Hobart Bosworth) walk the plank, hands tied and blindfolded, and plunge into the briny deep below. Then we see Conchita, the governor's maid (played by Bessie Eyton) plunge overboard from the lofty deck of the pirate craft, holding in her teeth a sharp edged dirk. When she reaches the drowning form of her master, she cuts his bonds and they start on a long swim for the distant rockbound shore. They finally succeed in reaching land, where they are recognized by some kind fishermen, who help them to board an English man-of-war. Here they are received with all possible hospitality. The governor foregoes his own comfort and orders the decks cleared for action. The pirate ship sights the man-of-war and also prepares for battle. The prisoners are taken to the hold, where they are bound to huge iron rings, while the fiendish Blackbeard prepares to suffocate them with charcoal fumes. The charcoal is lighted. Blackbeard and his murderous looking crew go on deck to man the guns, leaving the prisoners to their fate. In the meantime, the English vessel has been bearing down upon the pirates and now they open fire with their cannon. Blackbeard responds with a broadside, but the English gunners are much better marksmen and the piraates are overcome. One of the last shots from the English vessel pierces the side of Blackbeard's craft and this allows the welcome air to enter, which somewhat revives the prisoners. After a desperate hand-to-hand battle on deck the governor overpowers Blackbeard, and the crew are captured. In a trice the prisoners are released and, as they stagger on deck, they behold Blackbeard and his pirate leaders dangling from a yard arm at the end of a rope.

The acting is splendid and the picture is replete with scenes that thrill. The old "Alden Besse," an 840-ton vessel of unsavory name because of its recent difficulties with our government over suspected smuggling and near-piracy, was chartered for the purpose and entirely outfitted for the occasion. When this picture was produced the Pacific Electric R. R. of Los Angeles ran excursion cars down to the beach in order to accommodate the vast crowds that wished to see the spectacle, and it is reported that the crowd was so dense that one man lost his life by drowning when he attempted to swim out nearer the boats.

GEO. L. BARROWS RETURNS.

Mr. George L. Barrows, advertising and sales manager of the Berlin Aniline Works, manufacturers and distributors of "everything for the moving picture laboratory" in the way of dyes and chemicals, has returned from Europe after a two months' business trip. In comparing the condition of the trade on both sides of the ocean, Mr. Barrows reports show that foreign business is booming and that the market for American production is very strong, particularly for American cowboy and dramatic subjects.

NEW THEATER FOR RUTHERFORD, N. J.

One of the most attractive motion picture and vaudeville houses in the East is now under construction at Rutherford, N. J., and will be opened early in December. The building is 44 x 129, fully fireproof, and will contain every accessory for the safety, comfort and pleasure of its patrons. The owners are Messrs. Walker W. Vick, John T. Collins and Thomas E. Lawrence, and the Moving Picture World is the original doctor's prescription to them. The policy of the house will be safety, comfort and refinement, with high-class entertainment in every department.

COLONIAL THEATER, WEST HOBOKEN, N. J.

Recently a representative of the Moving Picture World paid a visit to the Colonial Theater, West Hoboken, N. J., situated at the transfer station near Summit Avenue. The proprietor of the Colonial is Mr. G. A. Robinson, who is a very young man to own such a large theater, for he is yet in his twenties. The size of the theater is 50 by 150, seating 720. It began as an airdome a couple of years ago on the very same ground and proved to be such a success that a permanent building was the result of Mr. Robinson's judgment and good management.

Conditions at the Colonial are ideal. Mr. Robinson is one of those managers who is alert to the advancement of the picture. He is militant for the good of his profession. He follows all the good suggestions that are to be found in the Moving Picture World and rejects those phases of the business that have any tendency to lower it in public esteem.

No expense is spared in the operation of the house. Its chief operator is Mr. Joseph A. Bliss. He is allowed as many machines as necessary, regardless of cost. The same is true of the music department, consisting of violin and piano played by Mr. Joseph A. Hoelz and Fred A. Krause. Neither one of these two gentlemen is yet twenty years old, but as an example of their attention to their work, we submit the following music programme selected and played by them for the Thanhouser special release, David Copperfield, which was playing at the Colonial Theater upon the night in question. This music harmonized so well with the pictures that it is submitted for the approval of managers and musicians for use with the David Copperfield series.

AN ATTRACTIVE LOBBY DISPLAY OF LEADING PHOTOPLAYERS.

The R. & H. Company, 17-19 West Lake Street, Chicago, offers to the trade a series of beautiful photographs, 6 by 8 inches, in size, of any of the artists seen in the Vitagraph, Lubin, Kalem, Edison, Essanay, Melies and Selig stock companies. These photographs are priced at only twenty cents each, or $2.00 per dozen. They are very attractive for a lobby display. This firm also announces stereopticon slides of all the photoplayers, with over 200 to select from. For further particulars see their advertisement in the Moving Picture World.

KALEM PLAYERS GO SOUTH.

A jolly company of picture players left New York on an early train Saturday, November 4th, for Jacksonville, Fla., in charge of Mr. Sidney Olcott, chief producer for the Kalem Company. Special accommodations for this company have been provided by the Kalem Company and something different in the picture line is promised. Miss Gene Gauntier, the leading woman of the Kalem Southern players, did not accompany the party, but left New York the day previous for a two weeks' visit with her parents in Kansas City, Mo., after which she will join the company in Jacksonville.

MEETING OF EXHIBITORS' NATIONAL LEAGUE.

A meeting of the executive committee of The Moving Picture League of America was held at the Southern Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, November 1 and 2, 1911, pursuant to a call by the president, M. A. Neff.

Those present were: M. A. Neff, Cincinnati, O., president; Fred. J. Herrington, Pittsburg, Pa.; S. E. Morris, Cleveland, O.; William Ullman, Detroit, Mich.; William J. Sweeney, Chicago, Ill.; C. H. Phillips, Milwaukee, Wis.; H. S. Dickson, Winchester, Ind., vice-presidents; C. M. Christenson, Cleveland, O., secretary, and J. R. Rieder, Jackson, Mich., treasurer. Vice-President H. C. Farley, of Montgomery, Ala., and H. F. B. McLain, of Wheeling, W. Va., were represented by proxy.

The executive committee deemed it advisable to change the name of the league from "The Moving Picture League of America" to "The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America," for the reason that the former name was not specific.

The league was incorporated under the laws of the state of Ohio, by M. A. Neff, Cincinnati, Ohio; William J Sweeney, Chicago, Illinois; Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; S. E. Morris, Cleveland, Ohio, and C. M. Christenson, Cleveland, Ohio.

At this meeting the following resolutions were passed:

1. That the authorities of every city and town in the United States and Canada be requested to enforce, strictly, the law in safe-guarding the public by refusing to allow films to be projected in any moving picture theater, or any other place, which does not comply with the law requiring the machine to be located in a fire-proof booth, and with such other regulations as are covered by state laws and city ordinances.

2. That a law be enacted making it an offense equally on the part of any corporation, company or individual furnishing films to a theater, or any other place, not complying with the law as above stated, as well as the corporation, company or individual receiving such films and showing them.

3. That we condemn the practice of film manufacturers in releasing what are known as "Special Films," for which they charge the exhibitors, through the film exchanges, extra film rental.

4. That no single reel of film shall exceed a maximum length of Ten Hundred and Seventy-five (1075) feet; and that in the case of certain story subjects, as, for instance, "Colleen Bawn," or "A Tale of Two Cities," the length of which would greatly exceed the above named limit, the subject be so divided that one reel of it may come out on the regular release day of its manufacturer, the remainder to follow on the next succeeding release day, to the extent of one reel of film, proceeding in this manner until the subject is finished.

5. That the League members take notice of the action of Mr. William N. Selig, of the Selig Polyscope Co., Chicago, Ill., who recently manufactured and released the film known as "The Two Orphans," consisting of two reels of film. These were known as Special Films, and Mr. Selig personally notified The General Film Company that no extra charges should be made for these films to exhibitors, and that the exhibitor should get the film in the regular course of his service the same as any other film."

C. M. Christenson, Secretary.

Meeting of Ohio Branch.

The Annual Convention of the Ohio Branch of The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held at the Southern Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, November 1st and 2nd, 1911. About 150 members were present at this meeting. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, M. A. Neff, Cincinnati, O.; 1st vice-pres., W. A. Pettis, Conneaut, O.; 2nd vice-pres., J. H. Broomhall, Hamilton, O.; secretary, John J. Huss, Cincinnati, O.; treasurer, Max Stearns, Columbus, O.

Forty-nine exhibitors made application and were admitted into the league, giving a total membership, in the state of Ohio, of three hundred.

Resolutions were passed favoring the regulation of length of program; it being recommended that two reels of film should be the maximum number of films to be shown for five cents, and that any excess should be charged for at the rate of ten cents or more.

Resolutions were also passed recommending the discontinuance of vaudeville in connection with moving pictures, for the following reasons:

1st. That large vaudeville theaters are not regular moving picture theaters and should therefore have a separate classification.

2nd. That most cities in the state of Ohio do not allow vaudeville performances on Sunday, and, in order to keep their houses open on that day, it is the custom, with most vaudeville theaters, to run an old film after the regular evening's performance during the week, in order to secure films on Sunday, thereby keeping their vaudeville theater open on Sunday to the great detriment of the regular moving picture theater, as a greater number of films are shown in the vaudeville theater than in the moving picture theater.

CHICAGO NOTES.

The Chicago offices of the Moving Picture World had the pleasure last week of a visit from E. A. Schultz, traveling representative for the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. Mr. Schultz expressed his entire satisfaction with trade conditions and the increasing popularity of the Motiograph machine. Mr. Schultz has traveled all over this country—Mexico, Cuba and Canada—in the interests of the Motiograph people.

G. H. Walker, traveling representative for the Nestor Film Co., called at the Chicago offices of the Moving Picture World last week. Mr. Walker is introducing Nestor's new cartoon reproduction, "Desperate Desmond." The picture was exhibited for a number of film men and representatives of this paper. "Desperate Desmond" is a hit. That's all there is to it. The production is far better carried out and far more convincing than the Mutt and Jeff pictures—more action and more excitement—a picture that certainly will appeal to the rising generation.

Ideal Theater will be the name of a new picture house, now under construction at Harrison and 48th avenues. The proprietor is Peter Schuchman, director of the Schuchman School of Music, Oak Park. Mr. Schuchman is well experienced in the business, having owned and operated several theaters in Chicago and other towns. The Ideal Theater will be a straight picture house, seating 300, charging five cents admission. The house will open December 15, at an estimated cost of $10,000.

There is considerable satisfaction in the ranks of the Independents over the addition to their forces of the National and the Columbia Theaters of Detroit. Independents are inclined to regard these two big Detroit houses as leaders in that city and believe that their conversion to the Independent side will mean that other smaller houses will follow. The Columbia has a seating capacity of 1,100 and is considered one of the most beautiful playhouses in the city. The cost of erection, according to A. Arthur Caille and John H. Kinsky, proprietors, exceeded $125,000. The theater is equipped with a $10,000 pipe organ and has an entrance corridor of imported Italian marble, 160 feet in length, where crowds may congregate awaiting the next performance. This entrance compares quite favorably with that of the Grand Opera House of Paris, which is generally considered the finest of its kind anywhere. The Columbia is now showing four first-run reels per day. The National is also a fine house and has a seating capacity of 1,500. The Cadillac Film Exchange is at present supplying both theaters.

INQUIRIES

Correspondents are advised that no attention will be paid inquiries which do not give the name and address of the writers. For the purpose of reply, initials or noms de plume may be used.

Inquiry as to the private affairs of photoplayers will not be answered. This includes the question as to whether or not they are married.

No inquiries of a general nature will hereafter be answered by mail and only in special cases when a stamped self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Many correspondents ask the same question and we have initiated this department to save our own time and yet help out our readers when we can.

Los Angeles.—The best we can do is Pa-thay Frayer (the "s" is silent). To get the real French pronunciation you should aim midway between that and Pa tay. The a in Pa is long, and the accent is on the second syllable. Kalem is pronounced Kay-lem, with the accent on the first and May-lees will do for the Melies Company. Accent the first syllable there, too.

Clare.—Miss Gladys Field is still with Essanay. We have had her picture.

E. L. W.—Miss Edith Story was Mary Jane in "The Kiss of Mary Jane." (2) We regret that we cannot give definite information as to foreign players, but we do not believe that the same player had both parts you mention.

H. W. R.—Miss Winifred Greenwood has recently appeared in these Selig releases: Louise, the blind girl, in "The Two Orphans;" the country girl, in "His Better Self," and the young wife in "A Tennessee Love Story." (2) Miss Frances Gibson was the senorita in Lubin's "The Senorita's Conquest."

G. M. B.—Your suggestion that the film companies charge admision to their studio has been made before. It is not a practical idea. (2) We do not believe that any company would notify you when it intends to make street pictures. They go out when they get ready if the weather is favorable and that is the closest they can come to a time table.

Gus.—Ability as an acrobat will be of little use to you in getting a chance with a film company, but it might help if the company makes rough and tumble farces. (2) We know of no school. (3) One hundred dollars is not the outside price for a scenario, but it is not often paid because there is seldom offered a film worth that. Literary quality does not appear in the m, so that is not paid for. The money goes for the idea, and you'll need mighty good idea if you want a three figure check.

E. C. H.—Elsie Glynn was the girl in the Lubin comedy. (2) A Biograph ayer. (3) Jack Standing had the lead in Lubin's "An Accidental Outlaw."

Bess.—The leopards in "Lost in the Jungle" were leopards and not domestic animals made up. They are on the regular payroll of the Selig mpany and take their salary in beef. Miss Kathryn Williams played e girl. She is not an animal tamer, but a regular member of the stock company. The picture was made in Florida, we understand.

M. L. S.—The player is still with the company mentioned, but we want to wait until the Majestic company gets through choosing before we state that he will remain with his present connection.

K. L. M.—Aunt Hulda in the Vitagraph's "Aunt Hulda, the Matchmaker," is Mrs. Devere. She is not a negress. We do not know of any negro player, though at one time the Lubin company frequently used a three hundred pound negro in the old fashioned rough comedies.

Y. B. E.—Marc McDermott and Miriam Nesbitt had the leading parts in Edison's "An Island Comedy." The company's publication states that the picture was made in the Thousand Islands, where a number of their recent productions appear to have been made.

W. W. D.—The Selig fire pictures are not related any more than are the wild animal pictures. There was more than one good story in the Los Angeles fire department and so more than one was made, but not in series. Each is distinct. The same players appear in them, but do not sustain the same characters.

S. E. H.—Reliance and Essanay have each released a photoplay entitled "Pals." Which do you mean? (2) Harry Ten Brook was the bully in Nestor's "The Parson and the Bully."

S. N. F.—Miss Ethel Elder was the petticoat sheriff in the Lubin film of that title. (2) Frank Crane was formerly of the Thanhouser company. (3) Mr. Delaney is not dead, neither is Mr. Costello or any of the others who get killed regularly.

R. G. T.—King Baggot is Mr. King, the detective of the Imp series. (2) Any person can submit a scenario for the series. (3) It is too late to for Christmas films to any company.

H. E. P.—Mother and son in the "Quaker Mother" were Mrs. Mary Laurice and Maurice Costello. The relationship does not extend beyond ne picture. (2) Herbert Prior and Richard Neil had the two leading parts Edison's "The Quarrel on the Cliff." (3) Not in order.

S. K. H.—John Bunny had a reputation long before he came to the Vitagraph, but we do not believe that he ever had greater opportunities than are given him there. You can get his picture for ten cents or a quarter according to whether you want a half tone cut or a real photograph. The latter are printed on heavyweight card, but are not mounted. They do not need to be. His "best" role is purely a matter of opinion.

G. N. K.—The Majestic will not make the first Sunday release on record. Pathe Freres put out a special Sunday release last Spring, one of the operatic films, if we remember rightly.

P. O. F.—Warren Kerrigan is the leading man for the American productions. (2) Philips Smalley was the husband in the Rex "The Realization." It was produced last spring.

H. T. N.—The suggestion you make is ingenious and not impossible, but technical difficulties would make the cost of production prohibitive. It can be done without trouble on a plate camera, but not on a one-inch film. Better stick to straight scenarios if you do not know the camera kinks.

Sidewheeler.—Why not make up a list of the companies doing military stuff? They could use a one-armed actor to better effect than others, but we cannot offer much encouragement.

T. E. A.—Judson Mefford played the boy in Kalem's "Rescued from the Desert." (2) Martin Faust and Julia Taylor had the leads in the Thanhouser production of "Robert Emmett." (3) Jack J. Clarke was the Rory and Miss Gene Gauntier the sweetheart in Kalem's "Rory O'More." (4) The return of the Irish section was duly chronicled in these columns at the time. It was announced that they will winter in the South.

J. M. L.—Hobart (not Herbert) Bosworth was the Indian in Selig's "A Sacrifice to Civilization." The picture was made in California.

S. P. O.—Lucile Young and King Baggot had the leading parts (Hester and the minister) in the Imp production of "The Scarlet Letter."

V. A. N.—We fail to see that the stage scene in "The Stolen Play" (Reliance) was obscure. The characters were taking their curtain calls when the real author came upon the stage through the door leading to the auditorium. (2) The Champion production, "Shenandoah," is not based on the play of the same title. The company has a legal right to the title so long as the incidents of the drama are not duplicated.

Eager.—During the month of October, Leo Delaney was seen in these Vitagraph productions: "Answer of the Roses," "The Cabin Boy," and "Madge of the Mountains." He is not dead.

T. S. A.—The sheriff in the Essanay "The Sheriff's Brother" was Arthur Mackley, but G. M. Anderson plays most of the sheriffs in the Essanay photoplays.

E. B. S.—A photoplay in six scenes is too short. The probabilities are that you have more scenes there, but you've not written them in. From eighteen to twenty-five scenes is the average number.

L. P. C.—William Clifford and Miss Edith Storey had the leads in Melies "A Spanish Love Song." Mr. Clifford is still with the company. Miss Mildred Bracken is now most frequently named as his opposite. Miss Edna Payne had the lead in "The Story of Rosie's Rose."

L. V. E.—Miss Adriene Kroell and Warren Kerrigan had the leads in the American's "Strategy."

Arthur.—The Lubin company produced both "A Gay Time in Atlantic City" and "A Hot Time in Atlantic City." The first is part of a series which so far includes New York and Washington. "A Hot Time" is a new production of an old subject that enjoyed more than ordinary popularity.

B. F. K.—There is no "proper number of words" for a full length reel. Tell your story in as few words as will enable you to convey your ideas and plan for about twenty scenes. A full minute may be covered in two lines or ten lines may be required to explain a twenty-second scene.

Jack.—We do not believe that the companies will place you on their mailing lists for bulletins unless you can show connection with some photoplay theater. All of the descriptions are printed in these columns. (2) You can probably purchase posters from the exchange which supplies the theater you patronize. Ask the manager for the address. You cannot purchase scenes from the plays. These pictures are made solely for the use of the advertising department and are not offered for sale.

C. B. C.—Frank Lanning is not an Indian. (2) Alice Joyce is too busy to pose for artists now. (3) Only the comedy company is located near the Kalem home office. (4) We suppose that the Biograph will have a field company this winter, but have had no advice as to details.

S. M. G.—Hazel Neason played the title role in the Vitagraph's "How Milly Became an Actress." (2) Paul Kelly, not Kenneth Casey, was the office boy.

FILM REALISM—FOREIGN SHOWS, ETC.

Alexandria, La., Oct. 13, 1911.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—Apropos of several things gleaned from the Moving Picture World lately, I hope the film makers will not take too seriously the objections some exhibitors make about delineating their characters. When everything is said and done, it is other people's characteristics which either make us take to them or shun them. Take Essanay's Shorty (Alkali Ike, I believe), among the highbrows he would be impossible, whereas in a cowcamp his jawtackle would be the whole show, and far and wide he would be a welcome character. I have met his prototype many times out West. Supposing a character does chew tobacco and spits, is he the less enjoyable or true to nature? Eliminate everything which might be objectionable, according to some people, and we had better go to church for our amusements.

I take it for granted that Mr. Edison visited the public moving picture shows on the Continent and spoke of them to his interviewer. Here is what he found, as I found it in Holland and Germany, just a year ago, and I don't think I missed one in all the large cities I visited.

Nobody takes his hat off. Smoking is allowed. Beer is sold in every one of them. The program is made up of six or seven reels, making a two and one-half to three-hour performance. Their best attraction was Pathe's Weekly. Next, Italian and French films. The few Americans I saw seemed to have been doctored. In this I may have been mistaken, but they looked to me that way. It seemed to me that they were killing the goose that laid the golden egg. To my mind, nobody would have the fortitude to visit another moving picture show inside of three months after sitting out a whole program. It would take that long to recuperate the eyes from the effects of the curtain glare and the tobacco smoke. The attendance I found very indifferent, and no wonder. At nine P. M. they forced me to take my boy out, it being against the law to have children in there after that hour. I think there is a field there for shows run on the American plan.

The past hot summer has been very good to us down here, the hotter the weather the better the attendance, and this has encouraged me to build a modern moving picture house, which I expect to have ready for the next hot spell. Hoping for continued success in our line, I remain, very truly yours,

PELICAN.

Beware of "FAKE" World's Series Films

A spurious world's series baseball film is now in circulation. It was made from house tops outside the grounds of the Philadelphia Park, and taken at this long range shows nothing of interest. The few close-up scenes were duped from the Essanay Company's last year's baseball film.

MELIES.

THE REASON WHY (Nov. 30).—Pedro takes a fresh shave and Hank shines his boots as they were never polished before, because, as may be supposed, there is a woman in the case. The two old partners are rivals for the affections of Marie, a pretty store keeper, and one is ever trying to steal a march on the other. Pedro steals off to the store and buys a pipe, no less than the fortieth one, some excuse being necessary. Hank enters and buys tobacco, although he has enough to last for years.

Scene from "The Reason Why (Melies).

Each day this continues, and each partner believes he has made wonderful progress toward winning the coveted hand. A chance for one to outdo the other is never let go by, and on one occasion Hank thought he saw the chance of a lifetime. Two "drunks" have passed him, taking the direction of the store, and Hank fears for Marie. He follows their course and when they have entered the store, rushes in. But drunken strength is too much for Hank, and before long they have him powerless on the floor and were it not for the arrival of Pedro, who knows what would have happened? The latter throws them off, and, with Hank's assistance, out of the store.

Marie thanks Pedro immensely, and he believes his day has come, but alas! she turns and does the same to Hank. And at that moment, to make the disappointment more complete, a young Easterner arrives, whom Marie receives with open arms; and when he produces the sparkling ring, they know that, as far as they're concerned, love's labor has been lost. So home to the old shanty, where each invites the other to use the shoe leather freely. But anyway, pipes and tobacco offer splendid consolation.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, No. 46—1911 (Nov. 13).—Lexington, Ky.—The statue of General Morgan, the famous Confederate raider, is unveiled.

Quebec, Canada.—The Duke of Connaught, the new Governor-General of Canada, arrives and drives to the Parliament building.

Washington, D. C.—The corner-stone of the Masonic Temple is laid with impressive ceremony, the trowel used being the one Washington used to lay the corner-stone of the United States capitol.

Johannisthal (near Berlin), Germany.—The aviation week brings out some strange air craft.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—A terrible explosion in the Brownsville section wrecks a tenement, killing one and injuring several more.

Ostersund, Sweden.—The King and Queen visit the city.

San Francisco, Cal.—President Taft breaks ground for the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in 1915.

Quebec, Canada.—Former Governor-General of Canada, Lord Grey and his family, leave for England.

New York, N. Y.—Mayor Gaynor makes the principal address at the unveiling of the William Cullen Bryant statue.

Issy-les-Moulineaux (near Paris), France.—The new army dirigible, "Adjutant Réau," makes its official trial flight.

Newport, R. I.—Colonel Collin, Commanding Officer of the District of Narragansett Bay, holds the annual coast artillery target practice at Fort Adams and Fort Wetherill—shows the firing of the 12-inch barbette mounted guns, the 6-inch disappearing guns, firing a 10-inch disappearing gun, the strange 12-inch mortars and the 3-inch rapid fire guns and many others.

A PINCH OF SNUFF (Nov. 22).—Billy goes to dine with his sweetheart, and while there, asks her papa for her hand. Papa gives him this and also a pinch of snuff, with such comical results that the dinner is spoilt and Billy leaves the house in disgrace. The next day, however, Billy meets his sweetheart and her mother, and helps them through a difficult situation, with the result that all is forgotten. Billy, however, plans a revenge, and attending the house again at a dinner party, gets his revenge by presenting papa with a bunch of flowers over which has been sprinkled copiously the best grade of black pepper. The result can well be imagined.

COWBOY LIFE (Nov. 23).—This picture can scarcely be called a story, and yet it is far more fascinating than the usual run of Western stuff. It shows real life on the ranch—what the cowboys do from the time they arrive in the morning until they finally liquor up at the saloon 18 miles away. Among the particularly interesting views are those showing the herd being rounded up and driven to the corral across the beautiful, fertile valleys, hedged in with towering mountains, snow-capped. And finally, the cattle's semi-annual bath, which is a disinfecting process ordered by the government every six months.

TWO DAUGHTERS OF HAVANA (Nov. 24).—This story hinges on a case of mistaken identity in which two men are in love with two girls, the two girls being as much alike as two peas in a pod. No one of the four knows about the other and the incidents which follow the opening of the story, give rise to many interesting complications. The matter, however, is not a comedy, but a drama, built upon this theme, and the fight between the two men, who think that they are in love with the same girl, is thrilling in the extreme.

THE LOST NECKLACE (Nov. 25).—A young girl is presented, on her birthday, with a beautiful pearl necklace, the oldest heirloom in the family. Her maid carefully locks it up in the bureau drawer; but the next morning the necklace is missing. Naturally, the maid is accused, but she denies all knowledge of the whereabouts of the necklace, and puts the blame on the washerwoamn, who had called at the time she was locking the jewels up; in consequence, the washerwoman is arrested, and her little son, thrown on his own resources, finds employment with the milkman. Two or three days later, while delivering milk at a fashionable residence, he sees a young lady walking in her sleep, out across the lawn, and follows her to a hollow tree, where he sees her dig up the jewels, which she has hidden on a previous somnambulistic promenade. Of course, this soon leads to the straightening out of all the difficulty.

C. G. P. C.

CAIN AND ABEL (Nov. 21).—The story of the first murder in the history of the world is vividly told in this picture. The life of Adam and Eve and their two sons is charmingly shown. But soon jealousy creeps in and Cain becomes envious of the love so showered upon Abel by his father and mother. Finally the two sons make their offerings to God, and Cain's offering is displeasing in the sight of God, while Abel's is acceptable. This so enrages Cain that he commits the terrible crime with which we are all so familiar. The remaining scenes of the film show the tortures of remorse.

ESSANAY.

TOO MUCH TURKEY (Nov. 21).—When Mabel, an impressionable girl, has her fortune told and is advised she will marry a Turk, she casts off Bob, her sweetheart. Bob plots with his friends to give Mabel a good scare and masquerading as a Turkish Pasha, with his friends as wives he calls on Mabel. Mabel is horrified when introduced to the "harem" and after some difficulty locks the "Pasha" in a clothes-closet and the wives in a bed room. At this instance Mabel's Italian music teacher arrives. Bob, in the meantime, gets out of the closet and appears mysteriously before Mabel and the Italian in misfit evening clothes. He then makes short work out of the dummy in the "Pasha's" outfit and throws the supposed Turk out of the window. An Italian hand-organ man with a monkey are called in to help get rid of the wives, who are successfully disposed of and Mabel goes to Bob's arms, fully satisfied in getting her old love back.

OLD FIDELITY (Nov. 23).—In this story it is pay day at the Gressey Mills, and George Baker, the paymaster, rides to town for the weekly payroll. On his way back he pauses to eat his lunch, when the white bulldog, apparently homeless, comes up to him and wags his tail pleadingly as he watches Baker dispose of a sandwich. Baker feeds the dog, then lays down to sleep, his head on the saddlebags containing the money. When Baker prepares to leave he mounts his horse without the bags and though the dog protests and tries to attract Baker's attention, the latter is blind to the hint. In order to frighten the dog away Baker fires his gun, intentionally at the ground, but wounds the animal. Baker then rides on and the dog limps painfully back to the tree to guard the saddlebags. Not until Baker reaches the mills is he aware of his loss. Then turning his horse and followed by the mill owner, he returns to the tree, where they find the wounded dog, still on guard. "Old Fidelity," it is needless to say, is nursed back to health and given a home for life.

AT THE STROKE OF TWELVE (Nov. 24).—Stopping a runaway, Tom, a newsboy, saves Marcella Cooper, the five-year-old daughter of a wealthy contractor and for his bravery is rewarded with a position in Cooper's office. Twenty years later Tom, who has made a careful study of the business, is given an opportunity to obtain a position of trust with the company. The company has a big government contract, the plans of which are in the hands of the chief draftsman, who, it is believed, is the only man who can successfully make them up. He, however, is suffering with fatal heart disease and on the day in which the plans are supposed to be completed, he dies. Cooper thinks the contract is lost, but Tom begs an opportunity to work on the plans and told that he has but eight hours to have the plans ready he locks himself in his room and goes to work. At midnight, just as Cooper has given up all hope, Tom, breathless after a long run, enters the room and hands the plans over to the government officials. An hour later it is learned that the company has won the contract and Tom is rewarded with the position of chief draftsman.

THE DESERT CLAIM (Nov. 25).—Jim Lee, an old prospector, after some years working a rather meagre claim in the desert, strikes a great vein of gold. Staking his claim, Jim takes specimens of the ore to town and shows them to various of his friends at Bud Riley's saloon. Two new prospectors plot to get the claim and after getting Jim drunk they learn of the location of the mine. The next day Jim returns to the claim and becomes suspicious when he sees the two prospectors loitering near. That night he wads up his blankets to make it appear he is in bed and waits outside. One of the prospectors soon comes on the scene and fires into the tent at what he supposes is Lee. Lee overpowers the two men and tying them together turns them loose in the desert. They are nearly dead with thirst when Lee relents and turning them loose orders them out of the country.

SELIG.

THE CONVERT OF SAN CLEMENTE (Nov. 20).—The Indians of the Channel Islands were converted and brought into the fold by two of the Franciscan Fathers. This picture shows not only the physical fortitude of the good Father Baltasar, but the terrible temptation he underwent and overcame. Accompanied only by one monk, Father Jaime, he landed upon San Clemente Island. The savages attacked them and Father Baltasar fell, struck by an arrow. Father Jaime, thinking him dead, fled back to the boat and made his escape. Baltasar's life was saved by a young Indian maiden.

A year passed, and no boat or sign of life appeared in those unfrequented waters. Father Baltasar had taught Nenetzin to speak Spanish, and she was now a Christian. But one thing she could not understand, his priestly vows, and she loved him and showed her love all too plainly. Torn by gratitude and natural affection, and unable to explain to Nenetzin the nature of his religious responsibilities Baltasar was heavily tempted. But at his weakest moment a vision was vouchsafed him in which he saw himself dying gloriously for God. Henceforward he was enabled to resist the pleadings of the poor Indian girl. His prayers were answered by the approach of a fishing boat in which he embarked.

THE NIGHT HERDER (Nov. 21).—Much trouble with horse thieves, causes Colonel Hardy to install a night herder, which position is ably filled by Dick Turner, friend of Hardy and sweetheart of his daughter Kate. Dick departs for his night's vigil, and the other cowboys gather in the mess for supper. Pete comes in and persuades young Dan, a reckless fellow, to steal the horses. Toy, the Chinese cook, spills some coffee on one of the boys, who pulls his gun, and fires at the Celestial's feet, and in a fright he rushes to the barn—where Pete and Dan are formulating their plans. He is discovered and the rustlers tie him to a tree. Dick does not notice the approach of the men until it is too late, and when he tries to draw his gun, is shot in the arm, while the rustlers drive his herd away. The next day, Kate finds the Chinaman, who explains the situation. Colonel Hardy orders the cowboys to go after the rustlers. Kate goes also.

In the meantime Dick, being faint and weak, loses consciousness. He is discovered and they leave Kate with Dick, Pete and Dan, still encamped from the night before, are forced to leave, attemp to escape, are captured and given their just deserts. Kate succeeds in getting Dick home, and while convalescing, his betrothment to Kate is announced.

BLACKBEARD (Nov. 23).—The town of Martinique is attacked, sacked, and Governor Gonzales and his soldiers are captured by the nefarious

Blackbeard and his pirate band. The Governor, his wife and her friends are all taken to the pirate ship. The Governor is made to walk the plank before his horrified wife, but his rescue comes unexpectedly at the hands of Conchita, his wife's maid who grasps a knife from a pirate, dives overboard, cuts the Governor's bonds and both swim away. They succeed in escaping and where some kind fisherman recognize the Governor and take him and his companion to their cottage. But on board the ship the prisoners are hustled into the hold, tied to the rings, and Blackbeard prepares to suffocate them with sulphur. The fishermen have sighted an English man-of-war, and they hasten to the Governor who boards the vessel, and after explaining his predicament, the commander of the vessel orders the deck cleared for battle. But the pirate vessel has likewise sighted the British man-of-war, and prepares for action. Blackbeard orders the sulphur to be lighted, and then leaves to superintend preparations on deck. A shot pierces the side of the vessel, allowing the welcome air in to somewhat revive the prisoners. Right is might, and the pirate is boarded by the English sailors and the pirates put to rout. Blackbeard and his ringleaders are hung at the yardarms of his own vessel.

GETTING MARRIED (Nov. 24).—Sally Featherstone is engaged to Loring Jones, a young artist. Her father objects, having other plans for his daughter. The young lady pays no attention to this paternal opposition, and she and Loring arrange to have the young Rev. Reed, an old College chum, perform the ceremony in Jones' studio. Loring's next door neighbor, a modiste also having the name of Jones, purchases a wardrobe which is delivered by mistake at the studio. Father Featherstone follows the young people to the studio and Sally takes refuge in the wardrobe. While Father Featherstone is searching for his daughter, the furniture men call and transfer the wardrobe (with Sally still inside) to its rightful owner. Later Loring and his friend crawl through the skylight next door and there the young couple are married while the irate father storms to his heart's delight in the sutdio.

IN JAPAN (Nov. 24).—Another interesting educational subject showing some of the games and pastimes of our Oriental neighbors.

BIOGRAPH.

THE MISER'S HEART (Nov. 20).—An old miser living in an east side tenement, forms quite an attachment for a little child in the same house. The old miser is reputed to keep a large amount of money in a safe in his room, and a couple of crooks decide to take a chance to get it. They enter his room by way of the fire-escape, and tying him to a chair, try to force him to tell the combination of his safe. The little child happens in the room, and to further compel him, they suspend the child out of the window on a rope, threatening to let her drop if he does not give the combination. A tramp sees the child hanging from the window and hastens to the police station for aid. On his way he passes a baker boy from whom he stole a bag of rolls, and the boy, following, has him locked up without giving him a chance to explain the object of his errand. The captain, however, consents to hear the tramp out, and sends a quartette of incredulous policemen, who receive a shock when they find the truth of the tramp's story. The child is saved and the crooks taken into custody.

RESOURCEFUL LOVERS (Nov. 23).—The old chemist's assitant discovers the lacking ingredient in the combination of a deadly poison. One drop of this liquid means death within ten minutes. To reward him, the old man promises him the hand of his only daughter. But the daughter objects, for her heart is already given to another. To win their point the young lover pretends to have drunk some of the poison. Hence, as he is expected to live but a few minutes, the old man consents to his marrying the girl. When he learns the truth, he decides to make the best of the bargain.

HER MOTHER INTERFERES (Nov. 23).—Mr. Jack is married now and so good-bye to his bachelor friends, but they promise to stand by him just the same should he need their aid or sympathy. Mrs. Jack's mother warns the young wife to insist upon having their own way and if hubby kicks, faints or do something to play upon his sympathy. The scheme works until hubby gets wise and then—well, mother is called to handle the recalcitrant spouse. Jack goes to the club and his old friend helps him out of the trouble in a most unique manner.

ECLIPSE.

GUY FAWKES—OR THE GUNPOWDER PLOT (Nov. 22).—Several noblemen of England, incensed against Parliament for passing strict laws concerning all religious meetings, plot to destroy it.

Under the leadership of Gatesby, they rent a certain dwelling from which they can tunnel to the cellar of the House of Parliament. Bringing in a quantity of powder to the proper place they complete their plans of destruction by selecting Guy Fawkes to light the fuse.

Fawkes, knowing that his sweetheart and her friends will be endangered, is swayed between love and duty, and finally yields to the former. He stamps out the fuse and the plot is a failure.

KALEM.

DAN, THE LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER (Nov. 20).—Alice rescues from the water, Michael, an old miser, who tells her as she helps him home that her kindness will be remembered in a way she little realizes. Dan, the lighthouse keeper, a sweetheart of Alice, goes with her to her father and asks for her hand in marriage. The father, a retired sea captain, tells Dan "When you quit drinking and can show me one thousand dollars you can have her." Pete, who is in love with Alice, determines to use Dan's weakness to his own advantage, believing if he can keep Dan drinking Alice will soon become disgusted and throw him over. Inducing Dan to visit the village dram shop Pete succeeds in sending him home two hours later very much under the weather. The same day the lighthouse inspector while making his rounds sees Dan's condition and promptly discharges him. In the meantime, the aged miser who has become dangerously ill through his recent experience, tells the doctor when he is dead to give his money to the young girl who has been kind to him. The next night Pete, who has learned of the miser's horde, persuades Dan while in more or less of an irresponsible condition, to go with him to get the gold. Alice, who has seen the meeting and suspects mischief, follows and enters the miser's hut just after Dan's arrival and is confronted by the doctor, who tells them the miser has just died and left his money to Alice. Dan, awakened to the realization of his unfortunate position, falls on his knees and begs Alice's forgiveness.

HOW TEXAS GOT LEFT (Nov. 22).—Texas, a wild and woolly Western cowboy, but a born flirt, imagines he is in love with Emily Hardy, the ranch owner's daughter. He proposes marriage and is accepted. Emily tells Jim, one of her father's cowboys, of her engagement to Texas and is much surprises that she is not heartily congratulated. She is not aware that Jim is very much in love with her himself and further does not realize that she honestly cares more for him than she does for the big husky cowboy, Texas, who has carried her heart by storm. Emily's father is very much disappointed that she has elected to marry Texas, as he had hoped she would fall in love with and marry Jim, whom he considers staunch and reliable, and one to whom he can safely leave the care of the ranch should Emily become an orphan. Dell Wear, the foreman's sister, comes to visit the ranch and meets Texas. This conceited cowboy believes he can make a hit with the charming miss and starts a desperate flirtation, but Emily has something to say. Quickly recognizing the worthlessness of Texas she better understands the true worth of Jim and when Dell leaves the ranch after her visit is ended, and Jim has proven his ability as a successful rival, Texas murmurs, "Stung!"

THE TEMPTATION OF RODNEY VANE (Nov. 24).—Rodney Vane, foreman of the Staire vineyard, is in love with Millie Waine. Rodney has a rival in the person of Clayton White, an Internal Revenue gauger. Jack Staire brings his fiancée to visit his parents at the Staire vineyard. While wandering through the vineyard young Staire meets Millie, whose pretty face attracts his attention. This causes Rodney a pang of jealousy. This feeling is enhanced by remarks made by the revenue man. His insinuations are so strong that Rodney refuses to listen to him and knocks him down. That night White goes to Rodney and tells him that Millie is visiting at young Staire's house and Rodney is prevailed upon to investigate for himself. Seeing two shadows on the window shade Rodney believes all White has told him. The next day Rodney shows young Staire over the wine vats. Staire slips and falls into an empty vat. Jealousy tempts Rodney to fill the vat with wine and drown Staire. His better nature triumps and young Staire is rescued. Rodney, believing he has no chance to retain Millie's love, decides to leave, but as he is about to take his departure explanations take place and the lovers are reunited.

GAUMONT.

THE SEALED CONFESSION (Nov. 21).—An absorbing story of two rivals, Harry Belmont and George Elkins, who wish to marry the daughter of a rich banker. The climax is reached when a sealed confession of guilt is revealed in time to save the girl from making a grave mistake in her choice.

A STONE QUARRY IN SAXONY (Nov. 21).—Interesting views of the quarries, showing how the stone is wrested from the hills and transported for shipment.

THE ESCAPE FROM THE DUNGEON (Nov. 25).—While taking his wine at a wayside inn, Captain Lyman invites a stranger to drink with him, but the invitation being refused, he challenges him to a duel. During the encounter he learns that the stranger is a woman, the daughter of Hugo Salan, who lies confined in a dungeon at Brissac's Castle.

Hearing that she is on her way to free her father, Lyman and a companion offer their assistance, and the three proceed to the castle, disguised as minstrels. There, after entertaining the company, they cleverly provoke a brawl. In the confusion they obtain the key to the dungeon and effect the rescue. Father and daughter are united, and the two gallant friends take their leave and go in search of new adventures.

CAVE HOMES IN THE CANARY ISLES (Nov. 25).—Showing the crude dwellings and customs of the Troglodytes, the ancient inhabitants of the islands.

LUBIN.

MY BROTHER AGOSTINO (Nov. 20).—Tomasino was a splendid waiter in a popular Italian restaurant. His earnings were not large, but they were sufficient to support a cozy and happy little home. But Tomasino grew ill. The doctors looked at him and shook their heads. He was too sick to work and probably would not live long.

He talked over the situation with his little wife, Rosiana. Instead of despairing, she bravely cheered him up. She thought over the situation and finally she had an inspiration. She dressed up in men's clothes and presented herself at the restaurant as Agostino, brother of Tomasino. Thus she did her husband's work and made money to live and to buy medicine.

Now Rosa, a dancer, having left her lazy good-for-nothing husband met the supposed Agostino and fell madly in love. Rosa's husband discovered her infatuation and, filled with true Sicilian jealousy, determined to cut his rival to pieces.

Everything was ready for a real tragedy, when it was averted in a strange and surprising manner, which must be seen to be appreciated, and the whole thrilling plot comes to a happy ending.

THE RANCH MAN'S DAUGHTER (Nov. 22).—Jose, a young Mexican, tiring of domestic ties, abandoned his wife and child and journeyed to the ranch of John Gibson, where he secured employment. Gibson's daughter, Rose, was in love with Sam Norris, a cowboy. Gibson, learning of it, made Sam foreman as a sort of prenuptial present. Mason, the ex-foreman, then managed to make some trouble for Sam.

Jose tried to become friendly with Rose and she innocently talked to him as she would to any other of her father's employees. One day he came to the house and when Rose demanded what he wanted he said he wanted to see her father. Rose went to find him and while she was absent, Jose picked up one of her photographs and put it in his pocket. Later he exhibited the photograph in a saloon where Sam happened to be present, stating that the girl had given it to him. A quarrel between the two men was prevented by the others. As Jose was leaving the saloon he was seen by his wife, who had traced him to this place.

When the Mexican arrived home he was astounded to meet his wife. In the course of their interview there was a knock at the door. Jose's wife hid herself and when the door was opened Jose found it was Sam who had knocked. Sam covered the Mexican with his revolver and demanded Rose's photograph. Jose taunted him with cowardice for using a gun on an unarmed man. Sam then threw his gun on the table and forced the Mexican to give up the photograph, after which he left the house, but forgot his gun.

Jose's wife from her place of concealment heard all her husband's perfidy and her Spanish blood was roused. A both quarrel ensued between husband and wife, during which she picked up the gun on the table and killed him. Then she fled, but dropped exhausted near the ranch house, where Rose came to her assistance.

The next morning the Mexican's body and Sam's gun were found. All circumstances indicated that Sam had committed the murder. The cowboys started a lynching party, word of which came to Mr. Gibson. Jose's wife, hearing that the man accused of the murder was the lover of her benefactress, confessed her own guilt and then there was a quick rescue of Sam.

A BLIND DECEPTION (Nov. 23).—Robert Nelson, a wealthy young bachelor and very fond of children, was playing with two of his little friends one day. In a spirit of fun he consented to ride down hill in their pushmobile. Unfortunately, the little machine ran into an obstruction at the bottom of the hill and was wrecked.

It happened that Ellen Austin was passing on her way to apply for a position as nurse to a blind man residing in the neighborhood. Now Robert had on a pair of goggles and the girl immediately concluded that he was the blind man. She also concluded that the children were making sport of him and she promptly became his champion, telling him that she had come in answer to his advertisement. Robert was so charmed with her that he decided to carry through the deception.

One day Ellen discovered the blind (?) patient reading. She told Robert her opinion of him and then left the house. Robert felt wretchedly lonely in the days that followed.

One day his two little companions brought a gun to him which was out of order. While Robert was trying to fix it it exploded. The boys ran away and brought Ellen. Later an operation was performed, but it was impossible to restore Robert's sight. He was blind for life. Then Ellen was brought to a realization of her love for him and the picture ends in a happy reconciliation.

HIS BROTHER'S DOUBLE (Nov. 25.)—Bob and Jack Lester were exactly alike in person, but quite different in character. Bob was a two-faced deceiver and Jack was big hearted and generous. But Bob had won his father's favor and Jack was accused of the theft. Now Jack knew that Bob had taken the money, but instead of telling on him he went to his uncle explained the affair and planned a unique way to punish Bob.

He secured clothes exactly matching Bob's and then impersonated his wayward brother, acting in such a way as to put Bob in embarrassing positions. He also paid court to Bob's sweetheart, Grace, whom he also loved. When the wedding day arrived there was all kinds of a mixup. Jack had Bob carried far into the country and left there to walk back.

Meanwhile the boy's father had learned that Bob was to elope and he hurried to the place where the wedding was about to be performed, where he denounced the supposed Bob (who was in reality Jack). About this time Bob arrived upon the scene, but was promptly thrown out, while the wedding proceeded with Jack as the bridegroom.

HEROES OF THE MUTINY (Nov. 20).—Gerald O'Hara, a young officer in the Anglo-Indian Army, is in love with his Colonel's daughter. One day he sees Hassan, an Indian merchant, unmercifully beating one of his servants, who has fallen beneath a heavy burden. Kimta, the servant, is found to be very ill, and is ordered by the doctor and the Colonel to the hospital.

When he recovers, Gerald takes him into his service. The regiment is sent up country to a small fort. The Indian mutiny breaks out and the fort is surrounded and cut off. Gerald volunteers to try and break through the lines and Kimta says that he will go with him. They escape from the fort disguised as beggars.

They return, however, and spy upon the camp and learn of the plans of their enemies. Then they steal a couple of horses and dash forth on their journey. After several adventures they reach the camp of a British regiment and lead them back to the fort in time to rescue the besieged. Ruth is restored to Gerald's arms and the faithful Kimta praised and congratulated by all.

WISTARIA (Nov. 21).—Ed Forbes, an ambitious young man, leaves his widowed mother's home. Through some means or other, Ed is made a prisoner in his new found land by a malignant person. The young prisoner is set to work trimming the wistaria vines growing around the warden's home. As he smells the flower (which is his mother's favorite) there he is reminded of her.

At night in his cell he writes to his mother, tells her that he is innocent and that he still loves her. She is touched by her son's letter and decides to journey to him. To raise enough funds she has to sell her treasures, which are bought, unknown to her, by her faithful servant, who afterwards returns them.

On the train she encounters a sickly lady with a baby that cries incessantly.

Mrs. Forbes takes it, soon soothes it and caresses the mother. This kind act is witnessed by Governor Coleman, who enters into a conversation with Mrs. Forbes. She tells the Governor everything. Later he investigates the case and finds that Ed Forbes is innocent. The pardon is delivered by the executive's private secretary. Ed and his mother are soon back in their home enjoying the pleasures of it, she being enabled to restore it by a generous donation from the Governor.

THE HALF-BREED'S DAUGHTER (Nov. 22).—Jim Brand, a half-breed, lives a lonely life in a hut with his one daughter, Nita, a girl of seventeen, whom he idolizes. Luke Lansing, a young hunter, sees the girl passing one day, and stopping for a drink of water, makes her acquaintance. Tom is suspicious of Luke, but cannot say too much. Luke, through a friend, gets Tom an offer of a week's work at some distance. Tom departs and Luke persuades Nita to elope with him.

Tom returns a week later to find his home empty. He searches everywhere, but can find no trace of her.

Meantime Luke and his friend, Jake Bailey, have gone up into the mountain country to search for gold. Luke is already weary of Nita and finds her a hindrance. Jake brings news of a rich strike in the mountains, where she would be a drag on them, and while she is sleeping they pack up their things and leave her. She wanders back to her old home and dies in Tom's arms. He swears vengeance on Luke, follows him for many days, at last overtakes him. In fear Luke backs away from his pursuer and topples over the precipice. The half-breed lifts his hands in supplication to the Great Spirit, humbly acknowledging the avenging of his wrong.

AN INNOCENT BURGLAR (Nov. 24).—Frank Rosie and his father and mother, lock up their town house and go to the seaside. While there, Frank receives a note from his fiancee, Myra Pope, asking him to stop in town for a night and attend a game of bridge. Frank gets the key of the town house from his father and determines to stop there for the bridge game. He is detained at the office until late and upon arriving at his home, finds that he has left the key at the office. He has no time to return for it and so makes an entrance into the house through an open window at the back of the residence. He lays out his dress things and proceeds to take a bath.

He is seen by the servants and the janitor opposite the house to enter and they think he is a burglar. They telephone for the police. A sergeant and several men arrive and arrest Frank for a burglar. He tires to explain, but they will not listen. At last he gets them to telephone Mr. Pope, and on hearing the news he and his daughter at once take a taxi and Mr. Pope, who is well known, gives the police "the wink." They enter the taxi, tell the chauffeur to take Frank to the "lock-up." Myra insists upon going with them. The chauffeur, who has been posted, takes them to the delayed bridge party.

THE LIFE BOAT (Nov. 25).—Old Captain Bill and his wife have an only son, whom they idolize. He loses all his money at gambling and drinking, and determines to do better in the city.

After a short absence he writes his people that he has secured a good position, is saving money, and will be home before long. A year or two later he arrives in town and on his way to his home, passes the old saloon he used to patronize. He cannot resist the temptation, and goes in. He falls in with a lot of bad fellows and is robbed.

Ashamed to go home, he ships on board a sailing vessel. Just as it has gotten out of the harbor it strikes a rock. The town-people are aroused. As old Bill is the captain of a life-saving crew, he is obliged to leave his sick wife, whose sickness has been brought on through worry over her son. Far out in the sea he picks up a drowning man, who proves to be his son. After resuscitating him Captain Bill brings him home. His mother clasps him lovingly in her arms.

LIFE IN THE UNITED STATES ARMY (Nov. 21).—A young man out of work is attracted by the United States Army posters and after questioning the sergeant on duty decides to enlist. He is brought before the recruiting officer where, after a preliminary examination, including reading and writing, he is sent to the recruiting depot.

Arriving with a number of other recruits from various parts of the country, he undergoes the final examination. Heart, lungs, eyes and ears must be in perfect condition. His finger prints are forwarded to Washington. Only after the examination has been safely passed is the oath of allegiance administered. He is taught the drills, manual of arms and the routine of army life. Swimming, running, baseball, football, boxing, motion pictures, billiards, etc., all these tend to break the monotony of barrack life.

We follow our recruit to the coast artillery corps, where the heavy guns in the service are shown at target practice. The target, thirty by sixty feet, is towed about six miles to sea. The gun is trained and a moment later, with a roar, the gun is discharged. The shell strikes the target, sending the fragments several hundred feet in the air.

HOME (Nov. 24).—Mr. and Mrs. Carter, an old-fashioned country couple, mourn the absence of their only son from whom they have had no word for several years. Thanksgiving Day is approaching and the longing to see her boy prompts Mrs. Carter to insert in a New York daily a "personal," which reads: "My child, come home. Then it will truly be Thanksgiving Day—Mother."

The editor of the daily in going over the copy fresh from the press, reads it first. He stops in the midst of his work and a vision of his home and mother appears to him. He resolves to spend Thanksgiving, the first in many years, at his old home. He goes to the street, tosses the paper into the waiting auto before he realizes that he is stepping into the wrong machine, then getting into his own is driven to the station. The owner of the other machine gets in, finds the paper and puts it into his pocket. He visits an actress in her dressing room, and while waiting for her to finish her act, begins to read the newspaper. His eyes fall upon the personal and the appeal so affects him that he also decides to spend Thanksgiving with the old folks. The actress finds the paper he has left, starts to read it and finds the touching little paragraph. She, too, has been many years from home and decides to pay a Thanksgiving visit. Rushing from the theater, she is accosted by a newsboy, but not caring to stop, hands him the newspaper and hurries on. He promptly sells it again. A man buys it, goes to his club, begins to read and finds the paragraph. He decides to go home and in his haste, tosses the paper from the club window, where it lands at the feet of the one for whom it was meant. Penniless and cold he scans the "want" column, then he sees mother's "personal." He decides to give up the city and go back to the farm. He beats his way on a freight train and arrives home, just as his father and mother are asking the blessing before sitting down to their lonely Thanksgiving dinner. He takes his place with bowed head, to be welcomed with open arms by both parents.

A PERILOUS RIDE (Nov. 25).—A capricious girl was in love with Captain Lorraine, and knowing his fondness for her, she laid him a wager of a kiss to race her to the river, although she had received instructions from her father, the colonel not to leave the fort. A moment he hesitates, but flushed cheek and sparkling eyes win and they are off. The river's edge is reached and the young captain has won the wager. But from across the river the warlike band of Utes dashes toward them and now it is a race, not for love, but for life. The captain realizes that there is no chance for them both to escape, so signals the girl to ride on while in desperation he endeavors to hold the Indians in check for a few moments in order that she may gain the fort in time. This she eventually does, but the young captain falls into the hands of the Indians and is taken to the camp, bound and thrown into the chief's tent. At night, White Swan, the chief's daughter, whom he has befriended, steals into his tent and manages his escape. She arrives at the fort with news of his escape, but is wounded. White Feather, the chief, comes to the fort under a flag of truce, not knowing of his daughter's whereabouts, and demands the colonel's daughter as his squaw. The colonel realizes that time must be gained and tells him of his daughter's presence, but refuses to let the old chief see her. The redman does not believe the colonel, and sends forth a cry for his White Swan. He waits to hear her voice, but only silence falls upon the air, for death has stolen in and silenced White Swan's voice forever. The Indian chief believing the white man is deceiving him, turns to the window and draws his bow to send forth the arrow which will signal the attack. Suddenly the air is rent with pistol shots and distant sounds of conflict—Captain Lorraine has arrived with reinforcements.

THE BO'SUN'S WATCH (Nov. 22).—When the good ship "Evening Star" docked, Pat McCann, the boatswain, intended to go ashore immediately after its anchorage to marry Bedelia, but the stern captain who commanded Pat, the bo'sun, to keep watch over it, would not listen to his pleadings. To make matters worse, the captain when gong ashore, discovered that Jack Stanley was paying court to his daughter. He ordered her locked up in the ship's cabin, and gave instructions to Pat to see that she does not escape.

During her imprisonment, Mary writes a letter to her sweetheart expressing her willingness to elope with him. She entrusted the note with Pat, to be delivered at the residence of Jack. Pat refused, but at last consented. Instead of doing what he was told, he went directly to the home of Bedelia. This is his chance to be married, so they started for the parsonage, where they were astonished to meet May and Jack. As the minister was in the act of tying their martial knot, Bedelia and Pat took a seat and waited patiently.

During the suspense, Pat let May's undelivered letter fall out of his pocket. Bedelia picked it up and read the note. There was fire in her eyes. She denounced Pat. As they were fighting the old captain came unexpectedly in. When he saw Bedelia, he recognized her as being his old sweetheart. To cap the climax, Bedelia and the captain were married, leaving poor Pat to the cruel world.

THANHOUSER.

A MASTER OF MILLIONS (Nov. 21).—A man of dominating personality by exceptional ability arose from the humble position of foreman of a railroad section gang, to that of a millionaire, before whom most men bowed. He owed his early start in life to the kindly favor of a railway president, and when he became a master of millions he graciously consented to keep this official in his position.

At a reception in the president's house the millionaire met the daughter of his host, and decided to marry her. Accustomed to the power of wealth, he did not bother to court the girl. He sent for the father and bluntly announced his decision. When the perturbed father hesitated, the millionaire, furious, threatened to ruin his one-time benefactor unless the marriage was arranged without delay. The girl, to save her father, consented to the loveless match, and again the millionaire was convinced that nothing could withstand his will.

Later, at his country estate, the millionaire gave a house party. With others of his guests he went hunting, became separated and finally lost. When completely exhausted he saw a light shining in the woods; he dragged himself to it and found refuge in the humble home of a poor hunter.

The hunter had a beautiful wife, to whom the millionaire let his fancy lightly run. He told her of his wealth, promised to provide for her and was much astonished when she rejected his overtures. Roughly, he grabbed and kissed her, and when the hunter returned he found his wife struggling in the arms of the man whose life he had saved.

The hunter, aiming a gun at the millionaire's heart, ordered him to leave the house. Then, with his gun still leveled, he followed him through the woods, the millionaire pleading gravely for his life. They traversed the forest, and at the edge the hunter pointed out the home of the millionaire in the distance, whereupon the man who tried to wrong him plucked up heart, thanked his guide and offered him money.

The hunter looked at him somberly and in silence, then knocked him down and the last words the millionaire heard as he staggered through the woods were the farewell ones of the hunter—"You cur."

It was the first rebuff he had experienced since wealth came to him. He realized that there was one thing and one man he could not buy. And the grim face of the hunter and his words haunted him.

The girl came to him at last and asked for her freedom. He tried to tell her that she must keep her promise or her father would be ruined, but the face of the one man who had beaten him appeared to him, and he found that he was powerless.

He gave her the freedom she asked and tried to forget his humiliation in hard work. His associates found that he was more lenient and less arrogant, and they wondered. For no one knew the story of the poverty-stricken hunter who had mastered the master of millions.

THE BASEBALL BUG (Nov. 24).—A little frog who splashes into a tiny puddle sometimes thinks he has created a commotion in the Atlantic Ocean. A young clerk in a small town was like the little frog, and local triumphs on an amateur baseball team convinced him that he was really a wonderful player, and far superior to the men in the big leagues.

Glory came to him, that is to say, his name was a household word in the small village where he lived, but he got no money for it. More than that, he neglected his regular work in a store, and was in danger of being discharged. For he though baseball, drank baseball and dreamed baseball. He was a nuisance to his friends and a trial to his family, and his wife worried greatly as to what the future would bring.

The wife had a distant cousin, Big Chief Bender, the noted twirler of the world champions, the Philadelphia Athletics, and she decided to confide her troubles to him. She figured that a man who could pitch three out of the six past seasons' games against the Giants, win two of them and list the third by a fluke, must be resourceful enough to help her. She judged correctly, and her appeal was not in vain.

To the conceited counter jumper came a letter purporting to be signed by Connie Mack, explaining that his fame had reached Philadelphia and that Bender, Coombs (the pitcher who beat Mathewson), Morgan, the wonderful spit ball expert, and "Rube" Oldring (the heavy-hitting outfielder who broke up a World's Series game with a home run) were coming to the country to learn from the village champion how to play baseball.

By this time the little frog had swollen to such a size that he really believed that the plea for help was genuine. So he gladly welcomed the seasoned champions of the world and they studied baseball together.

There was only one lesson. Then the little frog went saddly home. He burned up his uniform, his bat and the baseballs he had. He returned to his regular work behind the counter and the wife finds that he is cured of his infatuation.

RELIANCE.

THE MOONSHINER (Nov. 15).—Barrett and Harley are young moonshiners. Harley's wife and Barrett's sweetheart, Rose Smith, want the men to go to a picnic, but they are compelled to stay at the still. The revenue officer is on their trail and runs across Barrett as he is going to the village. Barrett loses his pursuer at the village store by going out the back way. The girls decide to go to the picnic alone. The revenue officer makes their acquaintance and they go with him in a buggy. At the barn dance he gets Mrs. Harley to drink with him and is very attentive to her. Rose mistrusts him and warns Mrs. Harley, but the latter laughs at the suspicions, and goes home with the officer. He prevails upon her to disclose the location of the still and joins his men. An attack is made on the moonshiners and Barrett is wounded, but escapes. Harley is captured. Rose finds Barrett wounded but he refuses her assistance, thinking she divulged the hiding place of the still to the revenue officer. Mrs. Harley, finding Rose falsely suspected, tells Barrett the truth. He goes in search of Rose and finds her in the woods, sobbing bitterly. He clasps her in his arms and all is forgiven.

THE INJUSTICE OF MAN (Nov. 18).—A minister walking along the street has his pocket picked. In running away the thief knocks down Jim Brown and the stolen wallet is knocked out of his hand. Dazed, Brown arises and picks up the wallet. He is arrested as the thief, tried and sentenced to the penitentiary. After serving his term he tries to secure employment, but his prison record prevents this. Even his own family lose faith in him and turn away. In despair he decides to commit suicide. He prepares for death under a big tree, but is interrupted by a little child who, unafraid, talks with the strange man and asks him to help her with her Sunday school lesson. The text is "Though your sins be as scarlet," etc., and it affects him strongly. The little girl takes him by the hand and leads him to the church, which turns out to be that of the minister who was robbed. A call comes for the minister from a dying man, who proves to be the thief. He makes a confession before expiring, and the clouds are removed from Jim Brown's life.

BISON.

THE WINNING OF WONEGA (Nov. 14).—Wonega is a very pretty Crow Indian girl with whom Deer Track is in love. Her decided aversion angers him. One day while gathering herbs and leaves for the medicine man, she falls from a high rock into the water. Her cries are heard by Feathered Arrow, a Sioux warrior on a lone hunting trip in a canoe, who rescues her and carries her to his tepee. Wonega's father sends Deer Track to look her up, and he discovers her with Feathered Arrow, who has won her heart. A swift attack is made on Feathered Arrow, and he is captured and condemned to death. The Crows break up camp and move on, leaving Feathered Arrow to the tender mercies of his rival, Deer Track, who proceeds to torture his bound and helpless prisoner. Wonega has been given to Deer Track in marriage, and he has tied her to a tree. She tugs desperately at her bonds and finally unloosens herself. Creeping up behind Deer Track, she fells him with a fagot and releases Feathered Arrow. The lovers make their escape by canoe to Feathered Arrow's village.

THE RANCHMAN'S MOTHER-IN-LAW (Nov. 17).—Jones, owner of the ranch, becomes tired of the conduct of the drunken cook and makes a bet with the foreman that he can get a wife in the city who is a good cook. He wins the bet, bringing home a very pretty girl. It turns out, however, that she does not know the first thing about preparing a meal, and her hubby is taken sick with indigestion. Wifey, in tears, writes to her mother to come and help her out. Jones has a horror of mothers-in-law, and falling asleep has a terrible dream, in which he is slammed around by the awful ogre of a mother-in-law. His cries attract Mrs. Jones, who wakes him up. The mother-in-law finally arrives and turns out to be a sweet-faced old lady whose cooking is a revelation, and the enthusiastic cowboys raise her on their shoulders and give her three cheers.

AMBROSIO.

THE CONVICT'S SONG (Nov. 15).—This is an elaborately-staged drama, showing the reveries of a convict as he looks back upon the incidents of his imprisonment. It shows him as a happy peasant, toiling in the fields, waiting for the close of day to meet the beautiful girl whom he loves passionately. Then a rich man comes upon the scene and takes the girl away as his wife to a life of luxury. In a weird scene, in the darkness of night, the peasant, with his countenance distorted by hate and a consuming desire for vengeance, stealthily makes his way to the rich man's home and destroys them.

CHAMPION.

NATIONAL GUARDSMEN AND REGULARS AT FORT RILEY, KANS. (Nov. 20).—The first and second regiments of Kansas Militia are noted throughout the West as the crack regiments of that section, besides being distinguished for their splendid and robust physique. The evolutions of this military body are carried out with a vim and dash at times that are truly amazing.

To see their wonderful marksmanship in their target practi,e practice drills, is to receive information at first hand. But, of course, the marching and counter-marching, the brilliant formations and drills which an occasion of this kind shows forth, is what must have the greatest appeal to the masses. To add to the effectiveness of the grand ensemble of this mobilization we have several companies of United States troops; these latter taking part in all the military manipulations of field and barracks.

WHEN THE SHERIFF GOT HIS MAN (Nov. 22).—Music may have charms to soothe the savage breast, but the melting glance of a woman's eye hath charms to do the rest; that is, all the rest necessary to the capture of the savage, his enslavement and so on; and so it happened that Alice, the ranchman's daughter, caught and held in durance vile the heart of the new sheriff, Ben Humphries.

The parents of Alice liked Ben and were pleased that he showed a preference for their daughter, but Ben's desperate efforts at love-making caused them the greatest amusement in the world. The girl wasn't a flirt, but she certainly did lead Ben a pace, and he danced to her every whim like a trained bear in a circus ring. Finally he sends her a note by a Chink telling her he must get an answer from her to his numerous proposals, and he fixes the place where, next day, she must meet him with the precious assurance. Alice decides to give in at last to Ben, for she loves him dearly, so she repairs to the trysting place. But, alas! he is not there.

At a dance given by her parents in her honor, she flirts desperately with a handsome rascal, out of spite, and this man was Jack London, an outlaw, on whose account Ben Humphries did not show up at the trysting place. He had received hurried word to get after this fellow at the last moment, and he followed his duty. He had, however, sent her an explanatory note by the Chink, but the Oriental had carelessly thrown it in the fire.

Ben had got to his man, but the bad man had gotten the "drop" on Ben good and proper, wounding and tying him to a tree. Thus it was that Jack London was at the dance, and Ben was not. But Ben came in "unexpected like," to the bad man in the midst of the flirting, and to the girl's surprise, the outlaw dove through a window, and the Sheriff after him. Then, what a chase, with Ben and the crowd in pursuit! He gave them all the slip but Ben, who got after Jack London hot foot, and got him for fair this time, after a thrilling fight, which would have proved disastrous for Ben had not Alice come up and helped things a bit by putting a gun to the outlaw's head.

SAAS GRUND, A VILLAGE IN THE ALPS (Nov. 17).—This is a little Alpine scenic of good quality and great interest.

THE MYSTERY OF BEAUFORT GRANGE (Nov. 17).—Mid the charming grounds of Beaufort Grange, Helen and a party of friends engage in the childish game of hide-and-seek. The game is exciting and Helen seeks to hide herself in the old castle. She hides in an old fireplace of the customary massive proportions, when suddenly—as if by some unseen hand—a secret door springs open and a flight of stone steps are revealed. thinking this to be a fine hiding place, the young lady goes down the steps.. Immediately the door closes after her, and she is entrapped in a dismal dungeon. Time wears on and exhausted in her efforts to attract attention, Helen falls into a stupor. Meanwhile, her friends have searched high and low and found no trace of her. The affair develops into a serious mystery. The Duke of Beaufort, owner of the Grange, becomes interested and alarmed. With the aid of some old maps of the Grange he searches for the lost girl. By some chance he happens to also place his hand upon the hidden spring—the door flies open, and he penetrates into the gloomy dungeon, where he finds the imprisoned Helen. Thus two people are entrapped, for the door closes and defies all efforts to burst it open. Things now become so serious that a detective is engaged to unravel the puzzle. He goes into the Grange and finds the Duke's papers where he left them. By this manner he is able to locate the secret trap, for he reads in the plans there once existed a secret entrance to the dungeon. The secret is discovered, and the Duke and Helen are released from their prison. The Duke is much impressed by the fortitude of the brave girl and the affair ends up in an interesting romance.

IMP.

FROM THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA (Nov. 20).—It has to do with the love affair of an ensign on a submarine boat and the daughter of a lieutenant, his superior officer. The scene is laid in the U. S. Navy and a genuine submarine boat was placed at the disposal of the director in the filming of the picture.

The young ensign loves the daughter of the lieutenant and his love is returned. The lieutenant has other aspirations and tells the young man to win his stripes before he will consider his suit. The lover is not crestfallen as he is ambitious and the girl is willing to wait. A French army officer also loves the girl but, while he is favored by the father, the girl despises him.

The lieutenant receives a message from naval headquarters commanding him to take charge of the submarine boat on a cruise and to further instruct the ensign in his duties. Prior to his going abroad the ensign kindly shows the Frenchman, his rival, over the boat. The villain, anxious to avenge himself on the young man, steals the valve handle off the mechanism which controls the buoyancy arrangement when the boat is submerged and carries it away.

The lieutenant boards the boat and she goes on the educational cruise. There are many scenes of the evolutions of the boat and she finally sinks to the bottom. The officers watch the gauge but find themselves powerless to rise, owing to the tampering with the mechanism. They are suffocating for the want of air and are doomed to die like rats in a trap. Then the young ensign shows his mettle. He proposes that his shipmates shoot him through the torpedo tube and he will swim for assistance.

He is shot through the tube, against the wishes of the lieutenant, rises to the surface and swims for it, summoning a submarine boat tender. The boat is anchored over the submerged craft and the emergency expedient is resorted to with success. Air is pumped into the receptacles and the vessel arises and the crew is saved through the heroism of the young officer. The Frenchman is suspected of the trickery and is punished.

It is needless to chronicle that the enign made good and the lieutenant removed all objections to his marriage with his daughter. (Copyrighted 1911 by Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America.)

EXECUTIVE CLEMENCY (Nov. 23).—Dan Fuller, an honest mechanic, is the victim of circumstances. He is ill one day and the rent collector, who is an unprincipled masher, with insinuating manners, calls and grossly insults his wife, attacking her in a familiar manner. Dan is aroused and rushing into the room administers a beating to the rascal which results in a serious injury.

Fuller is arrested and, having no friends, is convicted on a charge of felonious assault, the mitigating circumstances not being considered.

He is serving a sentence in the penitentiary when he receives a letter informing him he is the father of a child. Obsessed by the injustice of his incarceration and insane with a desire to see his wife and child, he eludes the guards and makes his escape from prison, exchanging garments with a scarecrow.

He visits his home to find his aged mother at the bedside of the young wife. Without awakening his wife he kisses her and the baby and returns to prison and voluntarily gives himself up.

The facts connected with his conviction have reached the governor, who has decided to pardon him on Thanksgiving Day. When it is reported he has escaped the official reconsiders his intention and Fuller is destined to serve his full sentence.

The daughter of the governor reads in a newspare that Fuller escaped to visit his wife and baby and then returned to prison of his own volition and the incident touches her heart. She implores her father to be merciful and he relents.

Fuller is released from prison on Thanksgiving Day. He returns home to find a bountiful Thanksgiving dinner provided by the daughter of the governor and the corned beef and cabbage his mother has prepared for the occasion is laid aside. The coming of the husband is unexpected by the wife and there is a happy reunion witnessed by the daughter of the chief executive, who looks on approvingly. LITTLE WILLY CHALLENGES JIM JACKSON (Nov. 6).—Little Willie is asleep and in his dream he sees the victory of Jim Jackson over his white rival. The emotion makes him fall out of his bed. He shall be the avenger and he writes a note challenging Jackson to a fight, and signs it "Willie Whitehope."

The training commences, severe and implacable. In the care of his trainer he submits to long runs, gymnasium, boxing matches and shower baths. At last Jackson is announced. He arrives, followed by a large escort. Willie waits firmly for him. Just what happened is best told in a great comedy film.

LIFE AT THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA (Nov. 6).—In the mysterious depths of the sea lives a world unknown hitherto to us. This film shows us this intimate life—the vulgar lobster and the crab, swimming amidst the rocks; some curious and horrible fishes; the temporary tenant of empty shells; the sea spider; the Midas turtle and the water caterpillars; the admirable Japanese fish—all this wonderful world of the ocean's depths.

THE LEGEND OF THE EAGLE (Nov. 13).—This film, enhanced by beautiful landscape where the action runs, is of a remarkable quality. It shows with perfection an emotional episode of the wars of the First Empire, showing what strict discipline was imposed upon the army by Napoleon I. He never pardoned a disobedience to his orders, also, whoever was caught in a state of intoxication or lacked respect for women in the enemy's country was shot instantly.

The army has been going for a long while through Austrian country. The sun was hot, the soldiers tired. Grenadier Gridart is resting in the garden of an inn. The wine was cool and nice. He drinks more than necessary. Wine and sun have intoxicated the grenadier, who goes to his camp wobbling. Going through a field, Gridart meets a young peasant woman who was coming from the village. The wine makes him lose his head and forget his orders. He wants to embrace the woman. She defends herself. He is obstinate and brutal. The husband arrives and hits the grenadier a blow on the head which sends him to the ground.

It is there that he was found by a canteen woman. She picks him up, and tries by supporting him to bring him to camp. The task is difficult. He can hardly stand on his feet. Arriving by a small bridge they stop. Unfortunately the Emperor passes there and sees the bleeding grenadier, whom he questions. The soldier says he was hit by a peasant, without cause. The Emperor commands that the peasant be caught and put to death.

Gridart, brought to camp, is taken care of at the ambulance. He is sober. He reflects. A man is going to die unjustly by his fault. He has remorse for his cowardice. His conscience of an honest man revolts. He arises, has himself brought before the Emperor, avows that he disobeyed his orders, got intoxicated and that the peasant had hit him in defense of his wife. Discipline is inflexible. The grenadier is shot.

In the woods in a green road the grenadier lays, his breast pierced by bullets. In a supreme moment of admiration for his heroic loyalty the Austrian peasant and his wife cover the unlucky grenadier's body with flowers.

HANDS ACROSS THE SEA IN '76 (Nov. 21).—On the 3rd of July, 1775, at Cambridge, Washington took command of the Continental Army. Franklin was dispatched to France for aid. Silas Deane, his wife and daughter, were on the ground. Deane and Franklin found enthusiastic allies in Count de Rochambeau and Marquise de Lafayette. Through their good influence, Vergennes, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, was interested. Montraville, English representative in the French court, and Rochambeau were rivals for Grace Deane's hand.

At an audience with King Louis XVI, when assistance was refused, Lafayette and Rochambeau offered their services to the cause of American liberty. Ships were equipped and soldiers armed at their own expense, and the expedition started out to the new world. Franklin and Deane returned to their own country.

Montraville, disappointed at Grace Deane's departure with her father, went back to England, resigned his office and secured a commission in the army. Before he sailed, he met Charlotte Temple, and persuaded her to elope with him.

Washington welcomed the arrival of Lafayette and Rochambeau, who were given important commands.

Rochambeau and Lafayette found time to visit Grace Deane. Their visit was timely, as she and her mother were alone and defenseless, and their home was about to be searched for a secret messenger. Montraville was in charge of the searching party. Lafayette and Rochambeau succeeded in sending the messenger on his way.

The air was portentious with the rumors of war. The colonists flocked to the side of Washington. When Lafayette's men were struggling with a heavy cannon on a steep road, Farmer Brown unhitched his oxen from the plow and rushed to their assistance.

Wayne and Lafayette were given command. Lee refused, but afterward changed his mind and headed an important force. Supported by Lafayette, Washington lead the attack on Clinton at Monmouth. Clinton gallantly returned the charge. Washington secures a glorious victory over Clinton at Monmouth.

The general rejoicing is suddenly checked by the news of Benedict Arnold's treason at West Point. Major Andre is caught as a spy, within the American lines, and a secret message is found concealed in his boot. He is hanged as a spy, while Arnold escapes.

Grace Deane finds Charlotte Temple in a pitiable state. A child is born to her and she is in the extremest poverty. Miss Deane takes her home and while she is convalescing, fate sends Montraville their way. His perfidy was too much for the youthful mother, so she died.

This all served to bring Grace Deane and Rochambeau closer together. He vowed if chance threw him in his way, to punish Montraville as he deserved.

Lafayette was stationed near Yorktown, where he caused no end of trouble to Cornwallis, who occupied the town.

Washington, reinforced by Rochambeau, made a quick maneuver, outwitted Clinton at New York, and was well on his way for a concerted action at Yorktown before the enemy realized his intention. Cornwallis was in a state of seige. He made a gallant charge against Washington in the open, but was met with too forceful a resistance. While the battle was raging, Rochambeau espied Montraville. These two engaged in hand to hand combat. Rochambeau finally conquered.

Lafayette, wounded, retires to a block house for protection. It is heavily attacked by the English. Knowing he is the prize the English are after, he gathers his men around him and says, "Place a musket in my hands and place me before the door, they will all fire on me, and while their guns are empty, dash through them and away." Reluctantly they obey. He falls at the first shot, his comrades dash out to freedom. He is just about to be captured, when Washington's victorious troop dashes up and rescues him. The victory is complete. Cornwallis surrenders to Washington.

AMERICAN.

THE TEST (Nov. 20).—Ethel Dawson was fickle as to whom she should accept as her life partner—Dick or Jack—so she asks the advice of her old friend, the orange grower. He tells her to cut an orange in half, giving each suitor a half and to choose the one who, in a specified period, would bring back both parts. It is agreeable to the boys and Jack departs on a mission into the mountains where he is bound hand and foot by a gang of Dick's "bad men." Dick now returns to the girl with the two halves. In the meantime Jack, who has been extricated, rushes to the girl's home and encounters Dick in front of the house, where a fistic combat takes place. Jack finally subdues his antagonist and Ethel soon learns who the better one is.

THE MASTER OF THE VINEYARD (Nov. 23).—Jim Bradley, who has a fondness for drink, acquires a little home through the work of his wife and daughter. Kirk Winters, who admires Mildred Bradley, purchases her father's home when he (Bradley) is in an intoxicated state. He shows the deeds to Mrs. Bradley and tells her that unless Mildred becomes his wife he will turn them out of the house. Rather than concede to Winter's wishes they leave and subsequently are given employment in the vineyard of George McLean, who bestows courtesy upon them.

Kirk Winters learns from Mr. Bradley where his wife and daughter are. He tries to make trouble for them but they are protected by McLean, who discharges a number of his employees who assisted Winters.

At a saloon where Winters and his men have planned to attack the McLeans is Mr. Bradley.

He overhears their plot, hurries to the McLean home to inform them of impending danger and when Winters arrives and is about to shoot McLean, Bradley jumps in front of him and receives the bullet. The murderer is led away by the now sobered mob and the grief-stricken wife kneels beside the body of her husband.

JOLLY BILL OF THE ROLLICKING R (Nov. 27).—"Jolly Bill," of the "Rollicking R," couldn't be tidy. So the boys of the Rollicking "R" Ranch pulled out his shirt, "mussed" up his hair and sent him off to propose to Miranda. But lo! Miranda wanted a man and seized at the chance. They eloped and headed for 'Frisco. On their return they were met by the cowpunchers, bent on hurling rice and shoes and jokes and other things. Here is the erstwhile-slovenly Bill and his new bride arrayed in the latest of Metropolitan styles. There is a general epidemic of faints among the cowpunchers. The change is permanent with Miranda, but poor Bill, released among his kind, hurls vest and collar into the discard and, amid the exultant shouts of the cowbops, comes into his own once more for five happy minutes. Then Miranda, carefully attired in the new found "city duds," goes in search of Bill and, finding him again in cowpuncher costume and supremely happy, promptly gives chase, finally capturing him and proving forever after that Miranda knows the art of "hectoring" her husband. Thus, Bill is finally reclaimed from untidiness, much against his will but much to his advantage.

POWERS.

RIVALS (Nov. 21).—You may say what you please in defense of our good country cousins, but they sure do have to look to the city man to learn how to make love, and this picture proves it. Of course, it is not the good old-fashioned way they talk about, but then is not all fair in love and war? So it happens that when Si and Hiram confide in citified Jack that they are rivals for the hand of winsome Sue, that young gentleman essays to help them. And he does help them—to lose, for he loves her for himself. He assumes to demonstrate to each of the rubes how a gift should be presented to a lady, and in so doing he appropriates all the favor that goes with candy and flowers that the rubes paid for to learn the art of courtship. It finally comes down to a point where the best man in a scrap is to win, and when they both appear after the fracas they both win—a kiss. Jack wins the girl.

VIEWS OF MONTSERRAT, ITALY (Nov. 21).—A cooling, refreshing glimpse of some grand Italian peasant landscape, from a railroad that wends its perilous way up the precipitous incline. Occasionally we stop for a view of a quaint old prayer house, and occasionally, just as if we begged the engineer to stop so that we may longer admire some particular view, we get a sweeping view of the majestic mountainland. Up hills, around gorges, and through dark tunnels we go, until the signs of village life tell us that the finest part of the trip is over.

JUG O' RUM (Nov. 25).—With the release of this film the jug of rum takes its place in history, occupying without question the niche so long filled by that famous apple from the Garden of Eden. As usual, the man is innocent of all blame, for he was a total abstainer, and as far as he was concerned Aunt Maria could have been as militant as she pleased in her determination to keep liquor out of the hands of her husband, her son, the farm hands and every other man who crossed her path. Even little Toodles, her granddaughter, had learned that the stone jug in the hay loft with the word "poison" painted across its width was good for rheumatism, but young Henry didn't know that. He was growing lazy, it seemed to Aunty, but the truth is that he was deeply in love with Helen. Hired man, though he was, his heart was deeply wounded by her indifference, and at last he decided to end it all. So he got a rope and the jug marked "poison" and hied himself to the elm tree. The hanging process, he found, was more painful than he thought, so he took a deep draught of the jug, then another, then still another, until the contraband liquor rendered him helpless. And it was just his fortune to be so found by Aunt Maria, and that good soul promptly decided that poor Henry was the real guilty party who had been encouraging drinking round the farm. And that same, poor, innocent Henry is promptly subjected to the Keely cure in its most primitive form—beneath the old farm pump.

SOLAX.

BABY NEEDS MEDICINE (Nov. 15).—Mr. Smith has a gold mine for sale. He receives a letter from his attorney stating he has found a possible purchaser in Robert Moore, president of a well-known trust company and they will arrive in time for luncheon. Mrs. Smith is worried, the baby seeming to be ill, but refusing to take any medicine. The attorney and the president of the Trust Company arrive; the baby is worse and mother rushes in begging father to make him take his medicine. Mr. Smith explains to the two gentlemen, who try to bribe the baby with money and candy to take the medicine. Father arranges water in one glass and medicine in another, which act baby sees. While the men are busy talking baby changes the position of the glasses and then tells his father if he and the two gentlemen will drink with him he will take his medicine. The three men all drink from the glass containing the medicine while baby drinks water. At luncheon one after the other is taken ill while baby eats heartily. Whether Mr. Moore bought the gold mine is an open question.

ONLY A SQUAW (Nov. 17).—Mary, a ranchman's little child, is gathering wild flowers in the fields. She meets Nona, an Indian girl, and gives her a bunch of flowers. Nona is greatly pleased and gives Mary a string of beads. An Indian, of the same tribe as Nona, tries to steal a horse belonging to little Mary's father, but is caught and given a severe beating. The Indian sees the child and decides to get revenge by kidnapping her. He watches his chance and when she is playing alone he grabs her and takes her to his camp. Nona recognizes her and by clever strategy takes her away from the camp. Mary is missed at home and cowboys go in search for her. They find Mary with Nona and thinking her the one who had stolen the child, they treat her very roughly and take little Mary home, where she tells the whole story. The cowboys are then sent to find the Indian squaw. They attack the Indian camp and find Nona tied to a post. After killing several of the Indians and putting the rest to flight, they rescue Nona and take her to the welcoming arms of the rancehman's household.

REX.

THE RETURN (Nov. 16).—Betty Blair is to the ranch manner born. Her father wishes her to go to school and become a lady: she wants to be a cowgirl, and is cowed at the prospect of leaving brooks for books. It is finally decided to determine her future on the throw of dice. She loses and goes off to school.

Even school has its redeeming feature—vacation. She returns home to the ranch. While there, Joe Keene, a gambler, a breaker of banks, homes and hearts, attempts to make love to her. He is just about to kiss her—she screams and snatches his gun—and shoots. The man falls, and thinking she has killed him, she calls her brother, explains, and the two drag him to a cave and leave him. With the shadow over her soul, she returns to school.

She meets a friend of her girl chum, Frank Sterling. He looks into her eyes, she looks into his—and in their depths they read the question and the answer—the old, old tale of a man and a maid.

Then Fate returns from her vacation, and resumes weaving her eternal web. Frank tells Betty he must go West. He has received a letter from the sheriff of a small Western town, telling him that a wayward brother, a black sheep who had strayed away from the fold, had met with a disaster that had made his entire past a blank, and was living under the name of—Joe Keene. And Betty thinks the man he was to seek was dead! The years told their secret: the ghost in the closet walked out and proclaimed the truth. That moment, some of Betty died.

A few days later she returned the ring with a note telling him why it was impossible for her to marry him. She goes back to the ranch.

Where comes Frank to see her, to plead with her to change her course. The night is the devil's own, a night such as when the gods are vexed. Betty and Frank are standing by the window, battling with the giant shadow that had cast itself over their paths. The door opens, the figure of a man enters the room. A flash of lightning illumines his face; the girl screams—screams as once before she did when man would violate her honor. There before them stands Joe Keene! That scream! The mist lifted, the shadow disappeared, a light came to Joe Keene's mind and—he remembered!

It might have been Fate's inexplicable way of deciding Destiny. It might have been Fate's test of love and youth, and their strength to combat doubt and despair. And it might have been—a good deal worse.

GREAT NORTHERN.

A RENDEZVOUS IN HYDE PARK (Nov. 18).—Jack writes Mary a note asking her to meet him at 3 o'clock in Hyde Park. Highly elated, Mary asks her parents' permission to keep the appointment, but pater familias refuses consent. Lily has also an appointment with her lover at the same place at the same time. The two concoct a plan which in effect, amounts to the substitution of each other's hats and jackets, and by this means they are able to get out of the house. Their absence is discovered, and their irate parents proceed to track them down. Meanwhile, their disguises have led to endless confusion between the girls and their lovers, but eventually matters have righted themselves, and when the happy quartette are discovered by their parents, the latter's ruffled tempers are smoothed down, and the double event soon occurs.

HIGH SCOTLAND (Nov. 18).—In this film we are taken by the Scotch express to the heart of the Highlands, and thence to High Scotland. We pass through the beautiful scenery only to be found in the land o'cakes. Salmon fishing, a trip on the lochs, and mountain grandeur pass before the gaze in rapid succession, and the eye is charmed and the vision delighted by views of wondrous waterfalls and beautiful cascades.

NESTOR.

THE WHITE MEDICINE MAN (Nov. 15).—Chief Mad Bull was well pleased, for was not Kottona, his daughter, sought by Morning Plume, only son of the powerful chief Big Moon, and had not that chief, accompanied by Morning Plume, arrived with many presents to ask that their children's marriage be celebrated within two moons?

How an unjust accusation brought about happy results

COMET FILM CO., 344 East 32nd St., N. Y. City

The old chief's peace of mind was soon cut short. Spotted Eagle, his favorite son, was taken ill with fever, and although the medicine man had done his best, the young brave grew steadily worse and would have died, but for Dr. Roy Wallace and Ben Allen, who had stopped to inquire the way to the Rankin Mine. There, the half-breed, who acted as an interpreter, prevailed upon Mad Bull to have the White Medicine Man treat his son. So skeptical was the old chief, that Roy and Ben were obliged to remain at the camp until Spotted Eagle had entirely recovered. Then they would have departed, had not Chief Mad Bull been stricken with the same disease. Roy agreed to remain until he, too, had recovered.

Once more the two friends prepared to leave, when the half-breed appeared, to say that the old chief required their presence. Hurrying to the council, Roy was dumbfounded to have the Eagle Feather bestowed upon him, and to hear Chief Mad Bull declare that he was now entitled to marry a chief's daughter, as they needed his skill as a White Medicine Man, and Kottona should be his squaw to keep him among them. At last, prompted by Ben, poor Roy managed to stammer his thanks, and—the young doctor handed Mad Bull a picture of Mary, his little wife. To wed tthe chief's daughter would be impossible.

Fairly beside himself, the Indian tore Mary's picture to bits, and had not Ben interfered, the conflict between Roy and old Mad Bull would certainly have proven fatal. As it was, the two friends were thrown into their tepees to await the morning sun, when Roy would be sacrificed to their Getchie Manitou, for after receiving the Eagle Feather, the Pale Face had repaid their great chief by not only refusing his daughter, but attacking him as well.

Ere night, however, Onesta, the girl's mother, had apprised Morning Plume of the intended sacrifice, and he, by sending a messenger to Mad Bull, saying the whites were preparing to attack them, drew the chief and his braves to their camp. Instantly Morning Plume rushed in, released the two friends; then with Kottona and Onesta, hurried to Big Moon's samp, where, after sending the white men safely on their way, the marriage of the lovers was celebrated.

MUTT AND JEFF AND THE UNLUCKY STAR (Nov. 18).—Without the necessary coin to pay their rent, Mutt and Jeff take up their abode in a garret littered with antique furniture. Being practiced hunters, they start looking things over and under. In a washstand reposes a sheriff's badge. Jeff gets a sudden and brilliant inspiration. Why not use the old badge to satisfy the inner man. They cannot eat the badge, but——

Jeff blows into a swell restaurant; orders a fine dinner; relishes it with great gusto; the garcon brings him a fragrant cigar, and between puffs, he gently waves his handkerchief. Mutt answers the signal—he is a Pinkerton detective and wants Jeff. Jeff is pinched and yanked out of the restaurant, the proprietor of which, fails to collect.

After going some distance, the badge passes into Jeff's possesion, and Mutt enters a beanery to get his "fill." He does not get the same delicious spread as Jeff's, and beef stew and pork and beans is all he may feast upon. He chooses the stew and soon finds himself pretty well stewed.

Jeff wanders slowly away and, being somewhat sleepy, sits down in a convenient corner and journeys to the land of nod. Mutt gives the signal, but the "Pinkerton detective" does not respond. Growing uneasy, he mounts the table and waves his handkerchief most energetically. This brings forth the "boss,' and a few tough-looking waiters, who, deaf to Mutt's explanations, as to how and when the meal is to be paid, escort him into the kitchen to wash dishes until his bill is settled.

THAT KID FORM THE EAST (Nov. 18).—Jim Collins had decided to try his fortunes on a ranch; so when he alighted from his private coach, which by the railroad would have been termed an empty freight car, the young man made straight for a group of cowboys. Here, however, his appearance created no end of amusement, and when he resented some particularly insulting remark of Allen Blair's, his chum, Big Pete Kelly, the bully of the ranch, stepped forward and was using Jim as a punching-bag, until their foreman, Fred Ainsley, appeared, and not only put a stop to the unfair proceeding, but admiring Jim's pluck, at once employed him for the ranch.

Here he soon became a favorite with the ranchman's daughter, Kitty, and as a consequence, Allen and his chum lost no opportunity to make the new cowboy's life as miserable as possible. Allen, having the support of Kitty's father, was determined to marry the girl himself.

It was thus that matters stood when father and daughter, accompanied by Allen and Pete, set out for the village, and although they disregarded Jim's warning that the Indians were now hostile, the young man decided to follow at a distance and see that no harm came to his sweetheart.

From an adjoining peak, the Redskins had spied the buck-board, and had so obstructed the trail with brush, that the entire party alighted to assist in its removal. Then no sooner were their backs turned, than an Indian seized the horse's bridle, while the others opened fire. At the first shot, the ranchman fell, and Allen and Pete, deaf to Kitty's entreaties, turned and ran for their lives. Fortunately, at this instant, Jim dashed up to assist the father and daughter behind a high boulder—from whence, as long as the ammunition held out, he could keep the Indians at a safe distance. However, Jim's riderles horse, which had returned to the ranch, together with the knowledge that the Redskins were on the warpath, and the shots, which could be distinctly heard, caused the foreman and his men to put spurs to their horses and ride as they had never ridden before, coming up just as Jim's last cartridge was fired.

While his boys drove off the Indians, the foreman hastened to the old ranchman, who although quite severely wounded, was still loud in praise of his daughter's wisdom in selecting Jim as her future husband.

The Indestructo Carbon Holder

is an original casting of special metal—[illegible] a sliding clamp, operated by a set screw at wing nut, if desired. The design of the contact fits the carbon, furnishing a larger area of contact, and thus requires less pressure to securely hold the carbon. It is impossible to score the carbon, and the adjustment screw will not "freeze" under any considerations. The concentric adjustment permits instantaneous renewals of carbons.

THE OFFICE BOY'S DREAM (Nov. 20).—Willie Winkle, when he left his quiet home in the country to seek his fortune in the Big City, never thought that his path would be crowned with thorns instead of roses. After divers efforts, he is finally ensconced as office boy. The head of the firm is a man who does not impress Willie as amiable or good tempered. Still there is some solace in the fact that he likes baseball. On the opening day of the recent series for the world's championship, between the Giants and Athletics, the "boss" elects to go to the game, but cruelly forgets to ask Willie to accompany him. All that is left for the boy to do is to remain in the office, nurse his disappointment, and wait for the evening papers for the final score. There is a box of cigars in the desk. It belongs to the boss. Willie helps himself to one and between puffs, goes to the window, watching the surging thousands on their way to the Polo Grounds, where the game is to be played. Willie is tired, and with his legs stretched across the desk, and his head far back in the chair, he falls asleep. He dreams. Everything is different now.

He is dressed in his best and is at the game. He has a seat alongside the "boss," who has taken him there. They are rooting and cheering and seemingly the best of friends. The game is over, the pair enter an automobile and speed their way to the home of the employer, where a steaming hot dinner awaits them. What a change? Everybody is glad to see Willie and the boss is so proud of him that he forthwith introduces him to his daughter. Cupid is at work. The girl discovers that Willie is her ideal, and when the lad proposes, he is accepted on the spot. They are engaged and soon the wedding bells begin to chime. Here we see the youthful pair surrounded by guests, flower girls and their happy parents. Then comes the honeymoon. To the accompaniment of a shower of rice and old shoes, the lovers are sent on their way, and all is bliss and sunshine.

But now comes the rude awakening. Willie receives a severe tug about the neck, is aroused from his placid dream and confronts the boss, who has returned for the tickets for the game, which he has left behind. Willie then gets "fired" and again resumes his search for a new job.

THE DIAMOND LOCKET (Nov. 24).—The Vans belong to New York's wealthy set. They insert an advertisement in one of the dailies for a governess, and Kate Starr, a poor young girl, answers it. She is engaged for the position and intrenches herself into the heart of the Van's little daughter.

Kate is loved by Tim Hogan, an honest inspector employed in the street cleaning department. Tim one day comes to the rescue of a detective, who is set upon by three crooks he tries to arrest while in the act of robbing a drunken man. Tim and the detective become firm friends and when Tim finds the diamond locket in the street he promptly shows it to his pal, who suggests in lieu of an owner, to present it to his sweetheart, which Tim does.

Kate wears the gift proudly around her neck. It appears that the locket was lost by Mrs. Van on her way home from a reception. When Mrs. Van discovers the locket in Kate's possession, she promptly accuses the governess of having stolen it, and despite Kate's tears and protestations of innocence, the young girl is arrested and thrown into prison. Of course, Tim comes to his sweetheart's aid. He brings his friend, the detective, to court, who corroborates Tim's version of how the locket was found and how Kate came to have it. The Vans are humbled, the judge adding to their humiliation by scoring them for their hasty action, and winding up by telling them to be more careful when accusing innocent persons in the future.

HELD UNDER BAIL AS FILM 'PIRATE'

Proprietor of Moving-Picture Supply House Accused of Copyright Infringement

George W. Bradenburg, proprietor of a moving-picture supply house, at 333 North Eighth street, was held under $500 bail for court yesterday by United States Commissioner Craig, charged with infringing upon copyrighted films. The charges were preferred by Ingvald C. Oes, of New York, representing the Great Northern Film Company, of Copenhagen, Denmark.

According to the testimony of Oes, Bradenburg leased two films for production in this state, that are protected under copyrights obtained by Oes in Washington last May. The two films in question are, "Temptations of a Large City," and "In the Hands of Imposters."

Bradenburg claimed that he obtained the films from Europe. Special Treasury Agent Harry B. Jacobs testified that one of the films consigned to Bradenburg had been seized by the department of justice as it was being delivered into this country.

Hooray for the Independents, Hooray, Hooray, for the Cadillac Film Co., Have just taken from the trust four more first run down town Theatres, making six during the last three weeks, at an annual rental of about Forty-Thousand Dollars.

Increase our standing order commencing Week of Nov. 13th to twenty-one reels as per schedule mailed today. This makes thirty-five independent reels per week coming into this city whereas seven months ago there were six. Out of seventeen down town theatres here twelve are independent. The wonderful improvement in the product of the Independent Manufacturers is responsible for this condition and to them is the credit due.

What an exhibitor writes to the Moving Picture World with reference to our Bells and other Musical Instruments:

Fort Worth, Texas, October, 1911.

Moving Picture World, New York City.

Gentlemen:—In conjunction with an article in the Moving Picture World of October 21, headed "A Little Talk on Vaudeville in Picture Theaters," mentioning Mr. J. C. Deagan, of Chicago, manufacturer of musical novelties, especially adapted to picture show work, I can't help but feel it my duty as an extensive purchaser of Mr. Deagan's instruments and a user of the same, to boost for him and his wonderful knowledge of the manufacture of perfectly toned bells. While the article mentions only the organ chimes as an attraction, I have found for complete effects on pictures, the Parsifal Bells, Marimbaphone, Xylophone,

Electric Bells

(the greatest drawing card of all), unequalled when it comes to putting on perfect effects. I am using all these instruments, as well as Mr. Deagan's Cathedral Chimes, in addition to violin, cello, traps and effects.

I have not regretted the expenditure of several hundred dollars on Deagan instruments, and to any show that wishes to increase its receipts, my advice will be fewer drum stunts and more attractive music, such as only Bells can give, and the crowds will come.

(Signed) S. W. CUMMINGS,
Proprietor Orpheum Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas.

We make the Electric Bells in various sizes from

DORIS' FATHER DISCOVERS THE FOREMAN'S TREACHERY

AN OIL COUNTRY ROMANCE

THE foreman at the oil wells is very much in love with Doris, the proprietor's daughter. The latter, however, shows an interest in Tom, one of the workmen, who has just completed an invention which he proudly demonstrates. The foreman, seeing a chance to get "in soft" with the boss and win Doris, steals the plans and claims the invention as his own. How the girl herself frustrates his villainous plot, and how she and her papa reward Tom forms a thrilling, true-to-nature story.

Shakespere's THE TEMPEST Complete in One Reel

Here is another in the Thanhouser Shakesperean series that you'd better get busy featuring. The storm effects are exquisite—easily better than any ever seen in a stage production of this play. The subject gives chances aplenty for pretty settings and you'll see that our producers utilized them to the extreme. The story is a very smooth-running, simple and familiar one. It will be relished in all corners of the house.

The Story of a Test

Beneath the Veil

She faced him and tried him. He encompassed the trial successfully and furnished this film with its great big climax. She was a dashing beauty and he—an artist who loved the beautiful—loved her for her good looks alone. She lost these in a sudden accident. And with her pretty face she lost him. At least she appeared to lose him, and here came his great trial. The film describes it fittingly and prettily pictures its very dainty sequel.

WHY SOME EXCHANGES ARE INCREASING THEIR BUSINESS

By watching each manufacturer's product from week to week and picking out the Best. SOLAX pictures are NOW the best on the market.

DO YOU KNOW THIS?

SOME EXCHANGES have been quick to appreciate this and placed their orders—while others do not see what they buy and rely on the old system of waiting until their customers become dissatisfied, before waking up. Often a customer doesn't kick, but quietly goes elsewhere.

PUT IT ANY WAY YOU LIKE. If a man does not look at what he buys he is not getting the most out of his investment.

PICTURES and PROGRESS

WORLD OVER the live man is ambitious to be classed as progressive.—In the world of pictures, the producer is classified as progressive who grasps the current ideas of the public and who is abreast of the technical developments of his art.

In the Show World the exhibitor who is handling a progressive picture programme without embodying the latest ideas of the showman's art, is neither progressive nor enjoying the full measure of opportunity afforded by his programme.

The National, in adopting the Exclusive idea, did so in deference to its AMBITION to be PROGRESSIVE; we had seen the difficulties of the exhibitor and deliberated long before we determined upon the Exclusive idea.

In the adoption of the Exclusive policy we were convinced of the value of the plan in treating the Showman's ills; frankly we state to you our conclusions then, that you were Slaves of conditions as foreign to your needs as ART is from ACCIDENT.—We could see your rebellious attitude, but we recognized that you were powerless in the absence of a programme that deals fairly with your needs.—The National Exclusive programme in its exclusive features guarantees the first relief ever seriously offered the exhibiting public.

Exclusive Service means freedom from the bondage of trade conditions now taxing the minds of every honest student of the economic needs of our business—be he manufacturer, exchange or exhibitor.

The National's mission is purely a broader administration of the business needs of the exhibitor; in this mission it welcomes and deserves the co-operation and support of every broadminded exhibitor in the country.

In no department of the business can we find greater opportunity for progress than in the policy or system of distribution and control.

The Weekly Dope Sheet

VERY SPECIAL!

We announce the opening of the

for which an enormous expenditure has won the unanimous opinion of experts—the model studios of the day. We've got the facilities now; what would you, exhibitor, think of us if we did not now spend the price that means good staffs and good pictures?

Mark this—you're going to admire us!

For Tuesday, November 28th

A Split Reel of Comedy

"TOO MUCH INJUN"

You never saw an Indian comedy, did you? Nope—never until this release. It's novel and it's good—we're modest. On the same reel,

"The Lineman and the Girl"

Refined fun of the lasting kind. A grouch-executor.

For Saturday, December 2nd

"The Wanderer's Return"

You might know from the title that it's a drama, eh? Of course, you say, and we agree. Well, it isn't! It's one of the cleverest farces you ever saw. On the same reel,

"Views of Lake Como"

You've heard of it, read of it and talked of this famous Italian beauty. So have your patrons. Now let 'em see it.

Whenever God

creates a beautiful woman the devil jots something down in his notebook. We who have pressed soft hands, looked into tender eyes, whispered nothings in eager ears—we who have loved a rag and a bone and a hank of hair and found she was a woman who didn't care and never could understand—we know

THE PRICE!

And when the immutable law of the years takes its course, and youth and beauty fly, bringing regret and repentance, the woman knows

THE PRICE!

And you will know

"THE PRICE"

Released Thursday, Nov. 23rd

if you ask your exchange for it!

It's a story as old as the Garden of Eden, and as new as the latest divorce suit, a page of human history from Adam to Eternity, a tale of temptation, transgression, travail and tears!

"THE PRICE"

is the prize that will be the price of more admissions than the S. R. O. ever represented. And the price to you is "The Price."

Announces Another Great Big Popular

Quartette of Features

Nov. 27 The Right Name But the Wrong Man Nov. 27

The thrilling story of a man who, jilted by the woman he loves, enlists in the army and amid scenes of strife and daring repays with noble sacrifice his loved one's scorn. About 1,000 feet.

Nov. 28 The Telltale Knife Nov. 28

A tale of that daring, danger loving, fast passing, Western type—the cattle rustler—a picture of remarkable atmosphere and action—produced in the foothills and valleys of Colorado, with Tom Mix as the leading actor. About 1,000 feet.

Nov. 30 An Evil Power Nov. 30

A most unusual story in which spirit mediums and clairvoyance almost wreck the placid happiness of an engaged pair. A drama of thrilling episodes. About 1,000 feet.

Dec. 1 In Japan Dec. 1

A sight seeing trip to that wonderful land of interest whose civilization has advanced so rapidly of late. On the same reel with

Seeing Cincinnati

Another interesting travel subject. Each subject is about 500 feet.

LUBIN FILMS

4 REELS A WEEK

Released Wednesday, November 22 Length about 1000 feet

The Ranchman's Daughter

A Western that thrills and throbs with the swift, mad rush of exciting events, ranging from attempted clandestine love to a near-lynching. Excellently portrayed. It is built to hold the people and then send them out to tell others about it.

Released Thursday, November 23 Length about 1000 feet

A Blind Deception

As pretty a love-comedy as was ever flashed on the screen, faithfully and naturally acted by some of Lubin's leading players. It means money in your pocket and delighted patrons who will get the I-want-to-come-here-again feeling.

Released Saturday, November 25 Length about 1000 feet

His Brother's Double

"Double, double, toil and trouble
Fire burn and caldron bubble."

So sing the witches in Macbeth. The fact that Bob was his brother, Jack's, double gave rise to plenty of trouble. It's very funny. Not only that, but it has a strong plot. Not only that, but there's a charming love story woven through it.

Released Monday, November 27 Length about 1000 feet

The Man in the Taxi

If you want a real nickel-coiner, here it is. There was no "Bless you, my children" stunt when bold John Mason and pretty Betty Brown told their parents they wanted to get married. Elopement, robbery, arrest and some other forms of exciting adventure made the path of their love extra rough. But it all came right just when everything looked darkest.

"The Lure of the City"

CAST.

The Boy.....Harold M. Shaw
His Father.....William West
His Mother.....Mrs. William Bechtel
The Girl.....Mary Fuller
Her Mother.....Mrs. Wallace Erskine
A Theatrical Manager.....William Wadsworth

How a young man was attracted by a "get-rich-quick" advertisement, his struggles in the city and how he was finally brought back home by his sweetheart. One of the scenes reproduces the famous painting, "Breaking the Home Ties," by Thomas Hovenden.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 29th

"The Troubles of A. Butler"

CAST.

Mr. A. Butler.....John R. Cumpson
His Butler.....Edward O'Connor
Mr. Ashburton.....Bigelow Cooper
Mrs. Ashburton.....Mrs. C. Jay Williams
Miss Ashburton, A Spinster.....Alice Washburn

Mr. Butler wanted a wife. His butler wanted a situation. Each unknowingly got put into the other's position and in the same household, resulting in a very funny mix-up.

Emphasizes a Distinct Quality and Class Pre-existing Over All Other Films Sold.

It is utterly impossible for anyone to realize the enormous strength in back of the Sales Company organization without a clear idea of the manufacturing facilities and requirements of each and every one of the film producing companies whose brands are sold through this company. To the average man a film studio and plant is merely a factory—a place where films are made. Yet there is the greatest difference in the world. You may have the largest and most expensive plant and still turn out films absolutely flat and uninteresting.

It is the artistic training and years of experience in the moving picture industry of the manager and producer combined with high-class talent, always keenly observing the little details that make the films a success. Originality of plots and the ability to select only such scenarios that will delight, interest, and instruct one, with a general tendency towards the uplifting of the moral standards of humanity.

We are glad to be able to state that the various manufacturers whose brands we sell spare no expense in securing such genius, and can honestly say that any film that is sold through this company is of highest quality.

The words "sold through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company" is in itself a guarantee of Quality.

Facts and Comments

TO what extent will the feature film counteract and displace vaudeville? The question is one of vital interest to every person connected with the moving picture industry. Its answer does not affect exhibitors alone, but must mean much to the manufacturer as well. While the lower order of vaudeville has not held its own as an attraction in moving picture houses, its field is still large and its effects on the photoplay are as injurious as ever. We learn of the trials and tribulations of exhibitors who, very reluctantly in most cases, still cling to vaudeville. Good vaudeville makes a decent profit to the exhibitor nearly impossible. As there is not enough of good vaudeville to go round, the cheap and nasty brand finds shelter in the home of the picture play, to the constant damage of a clean, progressive, straight moving picture entertainment.

Of all the remedies suggested none seems more promising than the frequent feature film. As one old and experienced manager declared to us: "Give me a good feature film once or twice a week and I will do away with vaudeville at once." Is it possible to furnish such a supply of feature films? Leaving theories aside, we call attention to the steady increase of the feature film within the last six months. Look over the releases, mark your feature films with a cross in red ink, and the list makes a formidable showing. We do not believe that any other six months in the history of the moving picture will approach such a desirable state of affairs. It is pleasing to note that this increase in the production of feature films has not been confined to any section of the manufacturing industry; the junior organization has kept pace with the senior organization of film makers. A number of notable features have been brought over from Europe independently of any association of manufacturers and have been made available for the exhibitors.

If, then, the feature film is a welcome means of ousting the vaudeville part of moving picture exhibitions, no one has a greater interest in building up and developing these films than the manufacturers. The exhibitor's demand for such films would be constant and he could afford to share the increased cost of such features by paying a proportionate extra charge. Such a charge would be slight indeed compared to the prices now demanded for even the poorest kind of vaudeville. We know of instances where exhibitors dispensed with vaudeville for a week at a time whenever they could get special or regular releases that could be treated as features and advertised and presented as such to the public. As to the possibilities of feature subjects, it is admitted on all sides, that we have so far scarcely scratched the surface. Fiction, literature, history, are inexhaustible mines. The moving picture has created a cosmopolitan taste and an international capacity for enjoying the great creations of art. The art, which has visualized the thoughts and conceptions of Dante Alighieri, is irresistible in the domain of fiction and literature and may well strike the word "impossible" from its dictionary.

A gentleman highly connected with certain manufacturing interests advanced the opinion that the popularity of the feature film would depend on the exhibitor and his ability to make the most of it. In putting great classic masterpieces on films the manufacturer imposes a task on the exhibitor, but it is a task which he shares with the exhibitor. The manufacturer spends much time and talent on the feature film and generally has before starting with his work as little notion of the subject as the exhibitor would have in the majority of cases. When he has finished his work, the film maker has learned a good deal about it and is then in a position to enlighten the exhibitor. He does this by means of pamphlets and folders. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has done its full share in advising the exhibitor of all the details of the feature films as they have been released and has endeavored to supply all the information which the exhibitor ought to have and which ought to be of direct financial benefit to him. It will continue to do so and render the feature film the most valuable asset in the exhibitor's program.

WE are apt to smile with indulgent contempt at the fat-witted member of the British parliament who thought the safety of the cow on the railroad track more important than the building of a railroad. A few years hence we will laugh at the inconceivable stupidities of legislation purporting to regulate moving picture entertainments. Oh, the horrors of freak legislation! In New York the Solons at the State Capital thought that no man could operate a moving picture machine without being a full citizen; in Pennsylvania, ward-politicians act as censors at $2.50 per reel, in Massachusetts five minutes must elapse between reels to allow the machine to cool off. The average law giver has probably never been inside of a booth and is firmly persuaded, that it is a smouldering volcano. The ignorance and superstition in regard to moving picture machines is more typical of the twelfth than the twentieth century.

EVERYWHERE, even in the columns of the yellowest press, discussion is rife anent the possibilities of the moving picture as an educator. It is indeed an inviting subject, and THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has not only treated it exhaustively long ago, but traced a practical plan for its adoption in aid of systematic instruction. At present there is not, as we have had occasion to point out, any practical and tangible fact showing a systematic effort to make educational pictures for the schools. That could not be done without the advice and co-operation of experienced pedagogues. The latter alone are able to determine the course and scope of such education from the practical teacher's point of view. The impression that the placing of a moving picture machine in a schoolroom is sufficient for the start of a course of cinematographic instruction is erroneous. The pictures themselves are the main and most important thing. Before such pictures can be had much time, patience and expert knowledge will be required. At this present writing there is no material for a systematic course of instruction by moving pictures in even the elementary branches of geography or history.

IS it always good policy to give the audience what it wants regardless of what is good for it? Does an appeal to the finer feelings and the better taste always spell failure from the exhibitor's standpoint? An intelligent discussion of the question would require pages and be well worth them. In the meantime the experience of a well-known Brooklyn exhibitor with the musical end of his show may be of interest to all. His audience or at least the demonstrative part of his audience demanded songs and music of the so-called popular variety, Coney Island rhapsodies, and lively rags. He intended them to learn and appreciate something better, but at first found very little encouragement. He persevered, however, engaged a competent and well-trained singer and slowly but surely carried his audience with him. He now has the rare satisfaction of having helped to develop the better taste of his patrons and having added to his revenues. We know of other exhibitors, who in the face of an indifferent and even hostile audiences have won the double victory for the higher quality and the box office. An audience is after all as ready to be led as it is to be amused and entertained. Only the leading must be done with discretion and we must never attempt to accomplish too much at one sitting. The intelligent exhibitor delights in studying his audience and we have no doubt many of them have stored up valuable experiences, which we invite them to communicate to these columns for the benefit of the exhibiting fraternity generally.

The Added Attraction

Article II.

By W. Stephen Bush.

TWO questions of practical importance present themselves in the further consideration of my subject. How large is the proportion of subjects now available for special presentation with lecture, music and effects and how large is the supply of available lecturers.

As matters stand today, the percentage of subjects for special presentations of feature shows is not large, though it is constantly increasing. The fact that there are comparatively few lecture subjects may lead to the temptation to choose a release as a feature film without the proper qualities. It is well to emphasize the fact in this connection that nothing could possibly be more absurd and less in keeping with the progress of the moving picture as a more refined and theatrical attraction than such an error. A plain, ordinary release of average quality and average length cannot be tortured into a feature film. The latter must be of such a character that even the dullest patrons will at once recognize its superiority to the ordinary reel. In the present state of the market the subject of superior quality and quantity cannot be counted on as a regular part of the exhibitor's entertainment. In order to obtain it at all the exhibitor must make special arrangements with his exchange and know a few days in advance just when he can have it. Then he must immediately make it the subject of special advertising and arrange for the best aids in its proper presentation. This in the average house is no easy matter. In the moving picture theatre, as well as in any other entertainment or business, things have a tendency to fall to a dead level, a routine and monotony, which can never win any new patrons or add to the prestige and reputation of the place.

To illustrate this further, I will take at random a number of feature films from recent releases: "David Copperfield," "Foul Play," "Lady Godiva," "Auld Lang Syne," "The Black Arrow," "The Two Orphans," "Colleen Bawn." To let such features go by without special advertising and special presentation is the neglect of opportunity. Properly handled, such features have all the qualities of a regular theatrical attraction, and in the matter of price the advantage still remains with the exhibitor. I recall the old Selig film, "East Lynne," made in the days when the making of pictures was a crude affair. In a city in Pennsylvania the opera house had an "East Lynne" Company, a band of about a dozen playeyrs, which had scored great successes in all the surrounding territory. An exhibitor in the place secured the Selig film for the very day of its advertised production on the speaking stage of the opera house. The reel was well rehearsed, a very complete lecture was delivered with it, and the result showed extraordinary crowds in the moving picture theatre and empty seats in the opera house. The exhibitor has working for him actors and actresses in the pictures comparing not unfavorably with the general average of the speaking stage. Supply in the way I have indicated in my previous article, the aid of the human voice, rehearse, use special care in the selection of the music and strike the psychological moment with your effects and results will take care of themselves.

In regard to lecturers, I am a very firm believer in the law of supply and demand. The demand for good men may just now be greater than the supply, which on the whole is a very good sign. It shows that the public will only accept true ability and earnest effort and no substitute whatever. A good voice, a fair education and a determination to give the best there is in you at all times and everywhere are some of the stepping stones to success. A thorough and patient study of the picture which is to be the subject of the lecture is essential. If you have seen a picture ten times you can be of great help to the man who sees it for the first time. You can explain and point out things that at the first exhibition of the release even a man of average intelligence and good education might very easily miss. Do not, however, attempt to lecture on a film unless you feel in your heart and soul that there is need for it and that you are competent to fill that need.

One word in regard to the so-called educational picture. As a rule these pictures, showing scenery or the workings of some industries or the people of foreign lands, are not longer than 500 feet and generally they are shorter. Excellent and useful as these pictures are, they can be treated seriously as a lecture subject only when they constitute at least one full reel of a thousand feet. Where a regular lecturer forms part of the staff it is of course quite different; in such a case these educational pictures are quite a legitimate subject for a lecture. To make them a special feature and the subject of special presentation otherwise would seem to be a mistake, for after all the moving picture theatre is a place of amusement and what instruction is conveyed to the mind must come in the shape of amusement.

Taming An Audience

THERE are two ways of making an audience behave—one is by means of a so-called "bouncer," or special officer, the other is by an appeal to reason and decency. Only in extreme cases is a resort to the first method justified or advisable. The proportion of moving picture theaters that may justly be called dives is negligible—perhaps one in five hundred. A house which depends on the strong arm and rough voice of a uniformed ruffian, does not stand on a sound basis and cannot last very long.

The appeal to reason and decency may be made in many ways. The most effective appeal is the personality of the exhibitor and the general character of the management. The very atmosphere of the right sort of place breathes an air of refinement, inviting desirable and repelling undesirable patronage. A crowd of young men, full of animal spirits, but meaning no harm, or offense, comes into a theater, noisily and perhaps a little bit silly. The quiet of the place, the perfect order in the audience, the business-like appearance of the attendants, the smooth progress of the whole entertainment at once exercises a subduing influence and unconsciously, even perhaps unwillingly, the newcomers yield to all these influences that make for order and decency.

There have been places within the personal knowledge of the writer, where order was brought out of confusion and rowdyism of a vicious type was completely suppressed without resort either to physical violence or the threat of physical violence. As a rule the moving picture audience is orderly and well behaved and needs no guardianship. Where, however, the management is lax or indifferent, it often happens that a few "roughs" will bully the rest of the audience and delight in unseemly noises. Do not shout at your audience in such a case. Of course the majority will be with you and applaud a rebuke to the disorderly few, but there is a far better and more effective method. Have the ushers observe the worst offenders. The really vicious fellows are always few, the rest of the disorderly element is made up of the foolish and thoughtless. As soon as you remove the ringleaders, order will return. Banish the ringleaders from your place and often they will come back, penitent and full of promise of reform.

In a theater, pervaded by an atmosphere of hospitality where every patron feels he is a welcome guest, there will be no disorder. The exhibitor who understands his business must know how to create the necessary atmosphere.

The Future of the Scientific Film

Interesting Interview with Dr. R. T. Jupp.

Dr. R. T. Jupp, a prominent figure in the moving picture field of England, is one of the very few men who at the present, unites scientific knowledge and training with a love and understanding of the moving picture. It is interesting to read what he has to say on a subject, that in due time will become a most important factor in cinematography. Much of what he says is equally true in this country and shows again that the moving picture knows no national or geographical boundaires. Dr. Jupp, speaking on the topic, "How Will Science Benefit by the Cinematograph?" remarks:

"The development of kinematography generally has been delayed by an amount of blind prejudice and unintelligent criticism that probably has been applied to no other scientific invention since the days when Stevenson introduced the steam engine. This, in a great measure, accounts for the fact that practically, in this country at least, no real attempt has yet been made to apply the process to purely scientific subjects, notwithstanding the fact that the kinematograph probably affords opportunities attainable by no other means, for the propogation of scientific knowledge.

"Whilst England has stood aloof, it is noteworthy that in other countries a few, though somewhat isolated, attempts have been made to utilize animated photography in the lecture rooms of various scientific institutions.

Looking at the matter from a purely educational point of view, I suppose it will be generally admitted that things which can be seen make an infinitely deeper impression upon the memory than things which are unseen. Nor can it be doubted that the ordinary methods of teaching by word of mouth, which are in vogue in our schools and colleges today, result in an enormous amount of wasted energy on the part of the teachers and lecturers, much of which would be avoided by the utilization of the kinematograph in the various curriculums.

Let me take, in the first place, the ordinary schools as an example. How much more interesting and comprehensive would such a subject as history become if, periodically, outstanding episodes could be faithfully enacted upon a screen before the scholars, with a true presentment of the costumes and manners of the period. The same might be said of the teaching of geography, which I suppose, is entirely unintelligible to ninety per cent. of all school children.

"And if we turn to the natural sciences, I believe that facts could be brought home in a way that no other method of teaching could accomplish.

You have asked me in this short article to indicate in what directions I consider science will benefit by the motion picture. First and foremost, I believe that the kinematograph is destined to become a recognized factor in the course of surgical instruction. Under the system now in vogue in medical colleges, every student during his period of training is obliged to spend an hour a day in the lecture room listening to discourses on surgery, which embraces, it may be added, far more than mere operating, and includes many other subjects, as for example, fractures, dislocations, diseases like leprosy and glanders, and deformities. In the ordinary course, no matter how interestingly the lecturers may deal with their subjects, it may be said that this one hour per day for two years is to all intents and purposes wasted time. On the other hand, if every salient feature could be demonstrated by the kinematograph as the lecture proceeded, a method which would not be insuperably difficult to carry out, the value of these lectures from a teaching point of view would be immensely increased and the benefits derived by the students would be such as to far outweigh any objection which could be raised on the score of pecuniary expense. The use of the kinematograph would greatly increase the teaching value of any such lectures, and would enable benefits to be derived from them which certainly do not result at present. In addition, the lecturer, whether he be the author of the examples or not, might be expected to give a far more clear and lucid interpretation of the subject.

The students of science in general who are unable to attend the lectures of the better-known professors, as well as those whom fate compels to reside at some distance from the centers of education, the kinematograph in its new functions would come as an incalculable boon, for it would be possible by its aid to repeat the illustrative action of the greatest authority on any given subject, and by means of an accompanying lecture, to give the instruction not only as many times as may be required, but in as many different places. This would enable the poor as well as the wealthy, the country as well as the town, to enjoy the same high advantages.

Some progress has already been made in the direction indicated, several firms having issued valuable scientific and semi-scientific films. Only recently, Professor Eijkman, of Holland, projected kinematograph pictures illustrating the pulse waves upon the screen at a congress at Salzburg. In his method, an apparatus is employed which, placed upon an artery, follows and records exactly the motions of the pulse. This Sphymograph, as it is called, is connected with a sensitive electrical apparatus, which, readily placed at a precisely determined point, conducts an electrical discharge through Rontgen tubes, thereby producing a momentary flash. By the reproduction of these flashes, the pulse tracing can be followed in the manner of an ordinary film.

The Management of a Home is a subject which has been taught by the kinematograph practically to the poor and more ignorant people in crowded centers, and the Care of a Child from birth to its teens as depicted by nurses and workers of experience is a wonderfully instructive course.

The furnishing of a home, the food and clothing necessary, the preparation for school, school life and recreation, can all be depicted here, controlled by experts, and without doubt, the kinematograph is destined to prove a powerful aid in overcoming much of the gross ignorance existing in all walks of life, regarding many branches of domestic economy, and more especially with regard to care and training of children.

The only drawback at present to this general use of the kinematograph in this way is the expense, but that could be overcome, either by co-operation of the authorities to obtain films, or by possible reductions in the cost of manufacture in the future, as the demand increases.

The kinematograph has already brought scenes of national and stirring interest before spectators prevented from seeing the actual occurrences, with a promptitude that made the representation more valuable. In King George's reign, it will enter on a path of usefulness the extent and value of which it is impossible to estimate; for it will be recognized as an unrivalled means of demonstration in cases where the eye and hand require to be educated and trained, and there is unmistakable evidence that before long its application will be widely established.

In one branch of knowledge, ethnography, the kinematograph has made enormous advances. Millions of people have been able to witness faithful portrayal of the habits and customs of numerous foreign races. The scenery, flora and fauna, the cities and villages, modes of transport, the architecture of almost every country in the world have been shown in thousands of theaters, and the educational value of such pictures must be immense.

In the realm of technical knowledge, also, something has been done, but from the purely scientific and teaching point of view, there remains here an immense opportunity for the use of the kinematograph.

Reviews of Notable Films

"THE COURTING OF MARY" (Majestic).

New Picture Company Scores Clean Hit with First Release and Sets a Fast Pace in the Quality Race.

NATURALLY there has been much speculation regarding the quality and character of the product to be released by the several new picture-producing companies that have recently been organized. The returns are now coming in and they are complimentary to the new producers. It was the privilege of the Moving Picture World representative to view the first film of the Majestic Motion Picture Company entitled "The Courting Mary," which is scheduled for release through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company on November 26, and we now desire to record the safe and sane verdict that a clean hit has been scored. Independent exhibitors will take new hope when they get this picture, for it means that their program will be materially strengthened thereby.

This picture belongs to high-class comedy. It is a [illegible] subject, depending entirely upon the personality of the players and they have made the best of their opportunities. Of course, the personality of Mary Pickford dominates the play and quite naturally, for is not "Little Mary" one of the most delightful little photoplayers in the business and, also, this being the first of the Majestic pictures, it is quite natural that the best attraction should be featured. So it is that "Little Mary" trips and scintillates in her most charming manner throughout and throughall a full thousand feet of film, leaving only a regret at the finish that there might not have been more of it.

Mary's part in this picture is that of a "tomboy" summer-girl, with a score of lovers at her heels. She succeeds in dodging them, but only by burying herself in the woods. This is where Owen Moore gets on the job. He is a "woman hater" and has had his own time getting away from an amorous young woman who insists upon fainting on his shoulder at the slightest provocation. He, too, hunts the solitude of the tall timber where he discovers Mary. They quarrel and —get interested in each other.

Mary's Uncle Bill, who has taken a slight interest in the proceedings, because of his greater interest in another girl, helps matters along by forbidding Mary to have anything to do with Owen. Naturally, a wilful girl does the very thing she is told not to do and there is an elopement and a wedding, so Mary and Owen are happy ever afterward.

In telling this little story the Majestic producer has injected many a delightful bit of comedy and has set his players into the most beautiful of Nature's nooks and corners. At no time does the action lag—something doing every moment. The supporting company is excellent; the boys are boys and there are several very beautiful girls. Uncle Bill, who plays no small part in the picture, is impersonated by W. H. Brown, a well-known light opera and musical comedy star.

Photographically the Majestic people have proved that they understand their business. The pictures are clear, sharp and steady and some beautiful effects have been obtained. In this respect the first of the Majestic product will rank along with the best of any make, without exception. If the Majestic's manufacturing department is able to keep up to the high standard there are some others who will have to change their present methods.

To conclude: Manager Cochrane is to be congratulated upon the successful entry of his company in the picture market. He has made good all his promises so far; now let him keep it up and the fortunes of the Majestic Company are secure.

"THE SHERIFF'S SISTERS" (American).

Reviewed by Jas. S. McQuade.

I CAN promise a Western drama of [illegible] interest from start to finish, in "The Sheriff's Sisters," by the American, which will be released Thursday, Nov. 30.

The photography is especially good and possesses fine definition and stereoscopic quality. The camera man has confined himself chiefly to outdoor scenes in making settings for the story, and many of them are of exceptional beauty. But this is only to be expected, when it is remembered that they are taken in the beautiful El Cajon Valley, about 20 miles east of San Diego, in Southern California, where the American plant and studio are located.

An interesting love story is revealed in the plot and during its development the leading characters are capably sustained by Miss Pauline Bush, who appears as the elder of the sheriff's sisters, by Miss Van Tromp, who takes the role of the younger, and by Jack Kerrigan, who assumes the pivotal character—that of the dashing young fellow, who is loved by both sisters, but who bestows all his love and attentions on the younger.

There is jealousy, of course, on the part of the elder sister, and there is a villain and, between the two, the hero is made the scapegoat for a crime committed by the villain. We see the innocent man followed by a crowd of lynchers and overcome, after a very realistic fist contest, and thrown over a bridge. But he emerges safely from impending death and the cloud of suspicion that has settled on him, and wins the girl of his choice.

The weak spot of the filmed story, however, lies in the fact that the villain, who has committed murder, is not even shown as being arrested. This, it must be confessed, is trivial treatment of a commanding incident and character of the story, and decidedly points to a faulty scenario.

The opening scene shows the front of the sheriff's pretty cottage nestling in vines. The villain, George Dalton, is pleading with Gertrude, the sheriff's elder sister, for a return of his love, but we see her refuse him. Then Jack Wilton, handsome of face and light of heart, appears. We see Gertie's face light with something stronger than affection at his approach, but he greets her only as a friend.

Next day the younger sister, Lucy, returns from the East. Jack Wilton is smitten at first sight, and so is Lucy. Gertrude notes this and is seized with jealousy. This jealousy is increased when she discovers the lovers near the great palm tree next day.

George Dalton again presses his suit with Gertrude. Again he fails. Jack approaches Gertrude, as Dalton walks away, and the latter, believing him his rival, inwardly vows vengeance. Jack shortly afterward calls on Lucy's father and asks him for her hand in marriage. He refuses, but Jack firmly insists. There is a quarrel and Jack goes away downcast.

Scene from "The Sheriff's Sisters," by the American Film Manufacturing Co.

Immediately afterwards Dalton approaches the old man and asks for the hand of Gertrude. He is refused with angry words and Dalton replies in kind. The old man then draws his revolver and is shot dead by Dalton, who hurries from the scene.

Jack, who has been engaged in conversation with Gertrude, hears the shot and rushes towards the spot. So does the sheriff, who was in the vicinity at the time. Jack arrives first and is horrified to find the father of his sweetheart lifeless. He is discovered by the sheriff, standing over the dead man with a revolver in his hand. This revolver he had picked up beside the body.

The sheriff accuses Jack of murder and puts him in jail. Lucy pleads with her brother and tells him that her lover is innocent, but he is obdurate. As the sheriff pulls his handkerchief from his pocket, he unconsciously drops his keys. Lucy secures them and releases Jack.

In the meantime Dalton, the real criminal, has gathered a band of lynchers and galloped to the jail. He is desirous to turn all suspicion from himself and put a rival out of his path by having him lynched. The party arrives just as Jack has made his escape and is mounting a horse. They pursue him, wound him, engage in a desperate hand to hand conflict, overpower him and throw him over a bridge, while a freight train is passing.

Jack escapes fatal injury and succeeds in alighting from the train, only to fall into the hands of the sheriff, who takes him back to jail. Just before they arrive, Gertrude has overcome her jealousy, at sight of her sister's agony, and informed her that Jack was with her at the time the shot was fired. The sheriff is also notified of this fact and releases his prisoner, restoring him to the tender attentions of Lucy.

"HANDS ACROSS THE SEA" (Eclair).

American Company Produces Two-Reel Subject of Ambitious Character—Washington in New Guise.

SIGNALIZING its first American production, the Eclair Film Company released a two-reel subject entitled "Hands Across the Sea," on November 21st. Realizing the value of something unusual for the initial American production, the Eclair folks have spared no expense to make this picture notable, not only in proportions but in character and quality. In many respects it comes up to expectations and, while it is above the average, it is not quite up to the Eclair standard of photography.

The story of the picture is too long to relate here. It is a grouping of some of the principal incidents of the Revolutionary War. There is a very good interpretation of the mission of Benjamin Franklin to the Court of France and the enlistment in the cause of American independence of the French noblemen, Lafayette and Rochambeau.

The scenes following are taken from Revolutionary history and, while they are in chronological order, they are rather fragmentary, it being impossible, of course, to cover so extended a period otherwise. The battle of Monmouth is most elaborately staged and costumed, there being some 350 men engaged in that scene. Here the incident related of Moll Pitcher is brought out prominently and with good effect. Other hand to hand encounters and skirmishes between the opposing forces are equally well portrayed. In point of action and realism attained in these scenes, excellent results have been obtained.

In this picture the Eclair Company has given us a new glimpse of General Washington. We have been accustomed to think of him as sitting passively upon his white horse or in some dignified pose. In this subject he is shown as a fighting general with an ever ready sword and an impetuous spirit. This conception may be somewhat startling, though it is on record that Washington was quite handy with his sword and that he did, at one time or another, some real fighting.

Interwoven with the scenes of battle is the thread of the love story of Charlotte Temple, supposed to have been betrayed by a British officer and to have died a miserable death in poverty. A character called Grace Deane is the friend of Charlotte who takes the unfortunate girl under her care. The part of Charlotte is prettily portrayed by Miss Helen Martin and that of Grace Deane by Miss Dorothy Gibson. The latter has had considerable picture experience and is more widely known as the Harrison Fisher girl, having posed for Mr. Fisher for several years. Miss Gibson was given very little opportunity to display her ability in this picture, but she made good use of what chance she had and is a very pretty figure of a Colonial girl.

The picture was produced principally under the direction of Mr. James Slavin, well known in theatrical circles as a writer and producer.

The Eclair Company has, by this production, demonstrated its ability to produce large things, and Independent exhibitors may look for many good pictures from its American players in the future.

"THE POLITICIAN'S DREAM" (Vitagraph).

A notable film and a notable comedy is this hilarious undertaking. It is seldom we look at a comedy that involves a cast of 800 people. Of course, it is true that some of the cast were unconsciously working for the Vitagraph; they form the innocent bystanders in the large political parade that is part of this picture. The entire Vitagraph corps was in action here, not only the regular actors, but all the mechanics, scene painters, property men, wardrobe people, cooks, waiters, watchmen and all, form a part of the great parade that marches in endorsement of Simon Stubbs (John Bunny) for Mayor of New York. There were several hundred extra people engaged for the procession, numerous carriages and a fife and drum corps to lead it. This street parade is one of the best pieces of production work that it has been our pleasure to witness.

Simon Stubbs was a country politician who had his own theories concerning civic government. He disagreed with everybody on matters of state, with the exception of a certain widow lady with whom he agreed on any topic for reasons that lodged around his heart more than they did in his head. The work of Mr. Bunny in this production is perfection. Nobody could ask or expect anything better from that sterling comedian, or anyone else. He is rapidly becoming the most famous comedian the world has ever known, and if the Vitagraph people continue to provide him with vehicles of this sort his fame will know no bounds. "The Politician's Dream" is a very simple story. It is based upon a mere thread; that of a country politician who falls asleep and dreams that he is sent for to come to the Metropolis from a little country town and become Mayor of New York.

It would take some such man as Charles Dickens to properly describe the personality of Mr. Bunny and it is needless to describe it to those who are familiar with his work in moving pictures. But in "The Politician's Dream" he is seen at his best in the role of a country politician, taking himself seriously and being taken seriously by others. According to the dream, a committee from New York calls upon Simon at his simple country domicile and there tender to him marks of appreciation of his great perspicacity and political acumen. Having delivered these sentiments they then deliver a set of resolutions inviting him to come to New York City and accept the office of Mayor. Simon responds in a becoming manner and makes his departure from the village in true presidential style. In the city he is acclaimed on all sides and becomes the man of the hour. The way in which Simon deports himself, and the dignity with which he endeavors to carry his new-found honor, is an exquisite bit of pantomime that will stand the test of time.

The great parade is held in his honor and Simon is elected Mayor by the most overwhelming majority ever known. But meanwhile, back in his country home, a venomous serpent has crept into his garden of bliss. His hated rival, Mr. Binks (Wm. Shea), has made great inroads into the affections of the Widow Merritt (Miss Flora Finch). To what purpose then are empty honors? What profiteth a man though he be elected Mayor of New York if he lose his own soulmate?" Learning the sad news, Simon puts glory behind him and hastens back to the village to intercept the approaching wedding. Arriving there, he finds himself too late and is thumped brutally upon his voluptuous nose by the destroyer of his bliss. This thump upon his well-upholstered proboscis brings about the awakening of Simon Stubbs and in his awakening he perceives the futility of empty honors as compared with the joy of having for a helpmate such a woman as the Widow Merritt.

A simple plot but strongly done and all the stronger for its simplicity. H. F. H.

VITAGRAPH PLAYERS.

Miss Turner has been sick for about two months, but has so far improved that she is rejoining the company this week.

Mr. Arthur Rosson is laid up with ivy poisoning through devotion to duty and doing funny falls in battle scenes.

The Vitagraph Company has started a riding school and has engaged Lieutenant Schiebler, U. S. A., as instructor of riding to the ladies and gentlemen of the company who have the most need of his tuition.

Mr. John Bunny ascribes his ample girth as the result of being a chronic sponger for twenty years on the hospitality of the B. P. O. E.

Mr. James Young, well-known Shakesperian and romantic actor, has rejoined the company after a tour of the South, playing the lead in "Judy O'Hara." Mr. Young is back to stay this time; he is done with the road for keeps and will stick to moving pictures. In other words he "listened to reason," as expounded by his friend, John Bunny. More about James later.

Ralph Ince when not playing Lincoln is busy beating everybody around the place playing checkers.

If Charley Eldridge can get his mind off playing dice he is going to challenge Ince for the championship of Locust Avenue (from the elevated road down to the "yellow" house, inclusive).

Maurice Costello a native Pittsburgher, was presented with a gold ring by members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League recently at a meeting of the organization at 223 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh. Mr. Costello addressed the meeting and made a befitting response. As J. Bunny would say: "He done fine."

The Rev. Robert Gordon, former pastor of the First Baptist church, who accepted a call to the First Baptist church of Topeka several months ago, introduced moving pictures as part of the regular services Nov. 12 and attracted a congregation of 1,200.

THE STUDIO WEDDING.

In our issue of April 29th, 1911, we published an editorial entitled "Moving Pictures in the Home," which was supplemented in the following issue, dated May 6th, by an editorial entitled "The Studio Wedding." In the light of prophesies made at that time, we take a certain satisfaction in recording an account of the wedding of Miss Margaret Marvin to Mr. George V. Schmitt, both of New York City. The ceremony took place in the studio of the American Biograph Co., on 14th Street, New York, on the evening of Nov. 9th. The fact that the bride is the daughter of Mr. H. N. Marvin, vice-president of the Biograph Company, may have had something to do with bringing our prediction to such a quick fulfillment. Be that as it may, we desire to amplify our previous declaration by the following bombast: that within two years studio weddings will be as common as grasshoppers ever were in Kansas.

Among the Chicago Houses

By Charles A. Young.

THE Kimball Theater, at Fullerton and Kimball Avenues, is a very fine example of the better class of neighborhood theater, which is so surely driving the "store show" out of existence. I am very much pleased to present a picture of it herewith. The front, as shown by the cut, is of white enameled brick, with stained glass doors and windows, and gives a pretty effect at night. Its owner and manager, Mr. F. O. Nielson has spent over $12,000 on the house, and his only regret is that he did not build it to seat 500 or 600, as its present seating capacity of 300 is inadequate to accommodate the crowds that come.

The house is well built and fireproof, so well indeed that Mr. Nielson secured an insurance rate on it which is practically the same as the residence rate—a potent testimonial to the thoroughness of its construction. The floor is cement, and has an unusually heavy slope, the pitch being four inches between the rows of seats, enabling one to look over the head of the person in front of him and see all the picture without inconvenience.

The operating room is of good design, not too large, but compact and convenient. When the house was built, Mr. Nielson gave his operator full charge of this part of the house. The walls are of hollow tile of special design, and make it much more fireproof than the average booth with tin or sheet-iron fireproofing. The projection is above criticism. A Power's No. 5 machine is used, which gives as good a picture as can be desired, but Mr. Nielson says that when he buys a new mechanism it will be a Power's Six. Operator Turner showed me a good feature of his lamphouse which I had not seen before on a lamphouse in which the slide-carrier is supported by the condenser mounting; the slide-carrier support was pivoted at the lower corner, and swung out of the way when the machine is in use, allowing the light from the full area of the condensers to reach the film. This arrangement gives at least one-third more light than is possible when the slide-carrier and cone arrangement is placed on the condensers, as they act like a diaphraghm stop and reduce the illumination. I also noticed an excellent feature of the operating room in the form of a twenty-inch exhaust pipe situated above the lamphouse. Mr. Nielson holds out an inducement to his operator to do good work in the shape of a substantial bonus above the union scale.

Mr. Nielson has perfected his own screen, made chiefly of aluminum bronze and shellac on plaster, which gives as brilliant a picture as I have seen anywhere, and, too, without any veil or shadow, or harshness. I have seen no aluminum screen equal to it.

Other features of interest about the Kimball are the ventilation, with two 24-inch fly exhaust fans at the rear of the house, and the heating plant, which is sufficient for a good sized apartment building. Film service is Laemmle and the films are kept enough to be in good condition. The third reel I saw, "Captain Kate," was in very good order, and very well preserved for a feature of its kind.

Mr. Nielson was ridiculed when he went out to this locality somewhat more than a year ago to build a theater, because it was thought that the neighborhood was too young and too thinly populated to support a show, but he has happily disproved such criticisms.

In fact, I have found in the Kimball Theater a house which is pretty nearly ideal in every way, and I would like to suggest to those managers who have become disgruntled because of my criticisms, to visit this house some time and compare their own shows with one which even a critic must call good, and then rectify the conditions in their own shows.

The Central Theater.

The Central Theater, of Fullerton Avenue, near Central Park Avenue, is another pretty photoplay house, and a worthy competitor of the Kimball. A Motiograph machine and Sunlight curtain form the projection equipment, and the result is good pictures, though the operator, John C. Jackson, whose work was otherwise good, did not handle his light quite as well as could be expected, the light showing yellow several times. Film service is Independent, supplied by the Laemmle Film Service. This house is owned by a lady, Mrs. Wilhelmina Trebbin, and it seems to be her policy to give a good show, as she has good pictures and singing.

The Drake Theater.

I dropped in at the Drake Theater, Milwaukee and Drake avenues, and found Manager Harry Lindner with a big smile on his face. He was too busy to talk to me, however, for he had on the Thanhouser three-reel, "David Copperfield," and the people were coming fast. This film is certainly a winner, and the physical condition of the first reels, which were much older than the third, was very fine, the first reel showing no more rain than the third, though two weeks older. How the Laemmle Film Service keeps its reels in such good shape I don't know, but they do—one very good reason for the popularity of Laemmle service. Mr. Lindner has recently added a Power's Six to his operating room equipment, and the three reels were shown with no loss of time by its use, the intermission to change reels being eliminated.

The Crescent Theater.

The Crescent Theater, a vaudeville house, almost next door to the Drake, gave me a real surprise when I saw the picture. I had expected to see the average picture of the vaudeville house, well projected perhaps, but run in absolute silence. It was not so. The Vitagraph, "A Geranium," was on the screen when I entered, and I felt the atmosphere of the photoplay immediately. The music was soft, well played, and perfectly suited to the picture. The orchestra of the Orpheum, for all their long training, could hardly play any better. This film was followed by Essanay's "Millionaire Squatter," equally well accompanied, and then the four vaudeville acts, which were good and well received. The program closed with a Biograph split reel, "Too Many Burglars," and "Mr. Pragg Fugitive." The manager of this house is Bert Goldman, formerly of the Oak Theater and the Kohl & Castle forces, and the program is no doubt the result of his experience. He says that his operator, Monte A. Gloss, is one of the best men in Local Two, and his work on the screen certainly shows that he is a competent man. The light was very good, and the picture steady, but a large amount of free light in the house injured the shadows of the picture, though not enough to take very much from its clearness. The leader of the orchestra is John Miller, who can certainly play the pictures. In fact, this house will bear favorable comparison with any vaudeville house of its class that I have so far seen, and although Manager Goldman said that he was not featuring the pictures, he certainly gives them much better treatment than many a straight picture house I have seen, in both projection and music.

The Elmo Theater.

The Elmo Theater, Van Buren Street and Western Avenue, had been recommended to me as a house having unusually good projection. I must confess, though, after a visit to the place, that it was a disappointment. There is no reason why it should not have an excellent picture, but—the operating room is located at the corner of the house, which is nearly square, necessitating a side-throw of about 35 feet in a throw perhaps 80 feet long. The picture shows a good deal of distortion, of course, and though the outline is square with the screen, due to filing of the aperture plate, the picture on the film is not so accommodating, and shows its lines decidedly distorted.

The picture is nearly killed by some two dozen red lights, on the side walls, and the shadows don't look like shadows at all. Besides, these red side lamps look to me like a real source of danger, inasmuch as in time of panic the audience would seek the red lights, thinking they meant exits, as red lights are required by law to be placed over the exits. Also, the exit signs themselves are often inconspicuous, especially so when printed in red ink and illuminated with red light.

Aside from the bad throw and the red light on the curtain, the picture at the Elmo is good and fairly clear. The light is fairly bright, and well handled, and the pictures fairly steady.

The film showing when I entered the place was a Reliance, "A Mix-Up in Suit Cases." Well named, for it is a mixed-up thing, depending for its comedy on a lot of would-be funny actions, and when these fail, resort is had to the broadest kind of horse-play, verging on indecency, to get a laugh. The second reel on the program was an Imp, "His Dress Shirt," which pleased everybody, and left a clean taste in the mouth, too. The third reel was a special, made by the Industrial Moving Picture Company, of a National Trap Shooting Tournament, "Compliments of the Du Pont Powder Company, and with one very good scene in it, showing the clay "bird" flying through the air and being broken. The fourth reel was a Bison, rather old and a little rainy, but in pretty good order. Films are supplied by the H. & H. Film Service, as I saw their initials punched in nearly every subtitle.

At the beginning of the show about two dozen or so advertising slides were shown, and before they were half over I heard complaints from a party of young men behind me, one of whom said, "Just see the line of dope we've got to look at." This is hardly a way to attract patronage, making people look at things they did not pay their admission to see.

Adelphi Theater.

The Adelphi Theater on Western, just north of Van Buren, has one of the best pictures I have seen lately. A Sunlight curtain is used, and an Edison machine in the hands of Operator Funk, threw about as steady a picture as I ever saw, without the shake of one-eighth of an inch in it, and it was of the average size, too. The program included the Cabin Boy by Vitagraph, Edison's "Maiden of the Pie-Faced Indians," which brought many a laugh, especially from some small boys down front, who appreciated the burlesque as well as the older people, and the Biograph, "The Making of a Man." Manager Bergner certainly has a pleasant show to visit. I mustn't forget to mention the work at the piano of a young lady whose name I did not learn, and the effects supplied by Drummer Kaplan, which made the Edison comedy a "go."

Pastime Theater.

The Pastime Theater on Madison St., downtown, has lately installed the Indirect lighting system. Better pictures and a lighter house are the result, though I would respectfully suggest that the Indirect fixtures be installed in the box floor, as several lights on the wall cast their light on the curtain, which does not improve the picture. This is the only house downtown using a Kinodrome machine on a grind, and it certainly does good work.

NEW PHOTOPLAY HOUSE IN WILMINGTON, DEL.

The latest addition to Wilmington's prominent photoplay circles is the fascinating Majestic Theater, which has recently been constructed and opened its doors to the public at the eminent business section of Market Street, just a few doors above Seventh.

This new house has a seating capacity of 1,000 patrons and an enchanting palace-like appearance which attracts the eye of the numerous amusement seekers. Its proprietors, Messrs. Charles and William Topkis, have spared little money in making it one of the most elaborate and commodious of picture palaces ever established in the State of Delaware. Every convenience possible is extended to its many new patrons.

Since the grand opening of this theater, November 4th, it has been playing to capacity, due to the most excellent program of vaudeville and motion pictures sought out by its experienced promoters.

VITAGRAPH PLAYERS AT COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

Miss Anne Schaefer, Mr. Robert Thornby, Miss Helen Case, Miss Lillian Christy.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

MIGHTY effective indirect advertising is to be credited to Lester H. Williams, of the Unique Theater, Sheboygan, Wis. The Press, of that place, got out an "aviation" number for some reason best known to the editor and Mr. Williams declared in with something more than two pages of text and cuts of the Selig plant and motion pictures in general. It was a smartly written story—the sort of story the layman wants to read, and right at the top of the page, just under the head, comes this line:

> The Press takes pleasure in presenting, in its Aviation number, an article dealing with moving pictures from the pen of Lester H. Williams, the well known manager of the Unique Theater, who made a trip to Chicago to secure the information concerning the great Selig plant, the largest in the country.—The Editor.

It is just an inch and a half, single column, and a lot of people will probably say that it is small pay for a two-page story, since the writer had to rustle the loan of the cuts as well, but take another look at it.

Mr. Williams is running a picture theater right in that town. It is pretty safe to say that there are other houses in the town, but after this it's Williams of the Unique who is going to be thought of when the subject of motion pictures is spoken of. He knows all about them, for didn't The Press select him to write their story, and didn't he go down to Chicago and get a story that let in a lot of light about pictures? Now there are two classes of photoplay managers in Sheboygan—Williams and the other fellows.

The story is written in the first person, but it does not bristle with capital IIIIIIIIIIIs. There is nothing about the theater, but just a good story about the pictures—the sort of story a first-class press man would write. It is clean and effective work and the sort of story that does the whole business good.

Another Good Example.

Another good example of repression comes in the shape of an invitation to attend the opening of the People's Theater, Portland, Ore., November 1st. It is a sheet of gray paper folded to make four pages. The first page is brightened with a gilt P, for the People's Amusement Co., but the rest of the text is in black. There must have been a temptation to use more gold, but more would have spoiled the effect of elegance. Most of the matter is in twelve-point italic, which is plain and easily read and which suggests an intimate message better than would the regular upright face. The text is reproduced:

November First,
Nineteen Eleven

Dear Sir:

You are invited to the Grand Opening of the Peoples Theatre, West Park and Alder Streets, which event will occur Wednesday Evening, November First, Nineteen Eleven, at Seven P.M.

If you will kindly signify your willingness to be our guest on this occasion we shall be pleased to make reservation for you.

Respectfully,
Peoples Amusement Co.

There is something dignified and reserved about that second paragraph that is peculiarly effective if the house is going after the best trade, the sort of clientele that is not to be reached through the medium of free or reduction tickets. The sort of people General Manager Winstock seems to want are not to be baited with the indiscriminate pass, but they will "fall for" the cleverly worded invitation and the house should start with a list of addresses for special advertising that beats the last telephone book or the social register seven sorts of ways.

Gauge Your Clientele.

This sort of advertising might not appeal in some sections, but no advertising is calculated to reach everyone and the clever advertiser is the man who can suit his style of publicity to his house.

If you want to get the swagger crowd you've got to trail with them and get up an advertisement that will look well alongside the wedding announcements and party invitations, but this sort of thing will be wasted in a more popular section where such reserve would be voted "stuck up." Decide upon the crowd you want and plan your campaign accordingly. Do not offer the man who would rather pay a quarter than a dime for his seat a ten-cent ticket for a nickel, but appeal to his vanity with the "reservation" idea and you've got him. On the other hand, some classes of patron will not take the trouble to write, but they will take care to tuck the reduction ticket away and will use it.

And notice that this invitation is printed in clean-cut italic and not in Old English. That is the most common fault of most printers and many managers. At the first hint of the invitation style, there is a cry for "Engraver's Old English," and it takes a man half a day to catch the sense of the phrases. If you want a fancy face use Meriontype, Post Monotone, Camelot, or something that can be read.

More Orpheum Offerings.

From N. E. Chaney, of the Orpheum Theater, Hillsboro, Ohio, comes another lot of programs and this letter:

"We take great pleasure in enclosing under cover, samples of programs we issue each week. These programs are distributed every Saturday for the following week, putting one in each home in the city. We find that it is one of the best advertising means possible in cities the size of ours. We also run displays and locals in every issue of the three local papers each week. We do not claim this program would be profitable in larger cities. We have given the matter a thorough test and expect to keep it up. We are the only Licensed house in this city the other two running the Independent pictures. We run each reel two nights, changing only one per night. Our opposition change every night, one of them using three reels, the other two reels. If our program proposition meets with the approval of any of your readers, we shall feel repaid for making the suggestion. It has a tendency to elevate the business and place it on a more dignified and elevated plane. We are subscribers to your valuable paper and have been for more than three years."

In an earlier letter Mr. Chaney stated that these programs cost him $4.50 a thousand, but that he gets $4 back for advertising. They are printed in one color on good paper with a fine typographical display and impress one favorably with the house. It looks like business and it is business. The folder gives plenty of room for a full description of the subject and offers a complete change of copy.

Kids 25c a Dozen.

Something out of the ordinary is found in this announcement, clipped from the program for the week of October 2nd:

> BARGAIN MATINEE. On Saturday, October 14, we are going to have a big Bargain Matinee for the school children, all grades under the High School. We are going to admit them at the rate of two for a nickel, or 25c per dozen, on that day. Don't forget the date and the place. We want to know how many children read our programs each week and take this means to find out.

Admissions by the dozen should be something new even to the old timers. It will make talk and build up trade at the same time, and talk of that sort helps the house.

Mr. Chaney appears to have solved the problem of having a daily change and yet profiting by the second day business a film of merit can bring. It is one of the silliest things of the exhibiting business that in reasonably large places a film can be seen but a single day, though by all the rules a good offering should last longer than the single showing.

Post Card Advertising.

Lou J. Wittman, of the Star Theater, Hamilton, Ohio, sends some more effective advertising, the best being a postal card which reads:

> I have recently enlarged the interior of the Star and installed the most expensive machine made and arranged for an all new program every day, so you can be assured of the brightest and cleanest pictures in the city, censored by the N. Y. Censorship Board.
> We don't stop for supper—come early.
> LOU J. WITTMAN, Mgr.

The signature is in ink.

These announcements are printed on post cards obtained from the Kalem Company which show Miss Gauntier. They cost more than would common card stock, but for the additional cost Mr. Wittman makes it certain that probably 95% of the advertisements will be retained by the recipients, a perpetual reminder of the Star. It is worth far more than the difference in cost. It might be suggested that the name of the theater should have been set in capital letters that it might stand out more, but this is a detail.

He also sends a card giving a halftone reproduction of Miss Florence Lawrence, which he states he uses to good effect when he has her in the films. It might pay the Lubin Co. to send a fine screen halftone about 2 by 3 to Mr. Wittman, because the picture does small justice to Miss Lawrence's attractive face. Mr. Wittman is also using a small folder with the week's bill when he can get it or as much as he can get, in which he utilizes the names of the players where these are obtainable.

A Six Page Folder.

Mr. E. T. League, of the Crystal Theater, Plymouth, Ind., sends a departure from the usual four-page folder in a six-page sheet, each page 5 x 8½, which gives him plenty of space for his program and three pages for well chosen reading matter relating to the picture.

This is in line with the suggestion made here that where possible something more than the bare announcement be made. There is lots of good material ready to hand which can be employed to increase interest in the pictures and where space permits.

Mr. League states that his field is overcrowded and that for local reasons he has found it impractical to continue the folder, but he sends it on as a suggestion to others. It is pretty safe to say that the patrons miss the sheet, for it is readable and interesting.

The Matter of Advertising.

Mr. League contends that advertising for a theater should be confined to that theater and not carry commercial advertising, but in this the writer is not in agreement. It is unwise to crowd in so much advertising that the house advertising is overshadowed, but advertising in proper proportion to the house announcements cuts down the printer's bills to almost nothing and shows a certain stability in that it carries the tacit approval of the concern's advertising.

The city programs carry more than a profitable line of advertising and some production theaters are paid as much as $10,000 a year for the program privilege in addition to the programs they receive free. Some of these programs are so bulky as to be a nuisance, but where the advertising is held within due bounds, there seems to be no reason why the expense should not be borne in part by some outside concerns. Objectionable advertising has no place anywhere, but the leading drug store, some shoeshop and perhaps a real estate advertisement can do no harm and the checks will help pay the printer.

Purely house advertising, circulars, handbills and similar paper should be held to the house announcements, but these folders are in the nature of programs and there can be no objection to a reasonable amount of foreign advertising. If you can use the space to good advantage yourself, there is a good reason for leaving out the outside advertising, and Mr. League made effective use of his space, but the advertising bills are sometimes serious problems to the small house and the extra advertising the only thing that makes it possible.

INCENTIVE AND DEVELOPMENT.

By Harrison Del Ruth.

I have perused the philosophies of my free-lance contemporaries with both amused and serious thought. And when all is said, the concrete substance of basic argument lies in favor of those who contend that their efforts are underpaid.

It is not my intention to deal in personalities, but constructive principles. And after proving that scenarios cannot (under our present system of exploitation), bring the author full economic, or commercial value, without conflicting with the accepted principles of capitalism, I will deal with a creative force called "incentive."

All industries are maintained by either rent, interest or profit. The value of any commodity is determined by the amount of labor power necessary in its production, whether mental, physical, or both. The price (a monetary expression of value), is determined by supply and demand.

But let us specialize: you and I are dealing in scenarios, and as exponents of the silent drama, must weigh each phase of reason, to try and find the cause for low prices, and a legitimate remedy as well. We are in the field to supply the demand, competing with our dramatic merchandise for markets. To you and me, as representatives of individual wares, the cry must be uncompromisingly, "The Survival of the Fittest." While clerks, newspaper men, mechanics, and actors, competed out of their own specialized lines of work, by greater supply than demand, are entering our field, and since ideas can be bought for ten dollars ($10), and rebuilded to numerous versions, by the purchasing company, how can you as an intelligent thinker, expect more than they choose to give you?

Nothing is produced for use, the typewriter you use was not made for use, but for PROFIT. Profit is the return upon invested capital. The difference between that which you produce in wealth, and receive for your commodity, is the return interest upon investment, and goes to the stockholders. When a company no longer pays dividends the capital is withdrawn, the actors cease to act, and your scenarios would not sell at even $14.85. All of which is right and just, under the present system.

The evolution of the silent drama, during the last five years, has marked the epoch and decay of slap-stick comedy, cheap stagy acting and melodrama. Our audience, the highest of criterions whose instinctive consciousness of right and wrong, good and evil, has been nourished and keenly developed by observation and training, has demanded a higher class in comedy and dramatic production.

In the next few years, the poor technique of present day production, will have passed; the scenario writer, gifted with natural dramatic instinct and constructive ability, will come into his own. Nothing was ever produced by man greater than the mind that conceived it, and the scenario dramatist has an equal part to play in the uplifting of the picture drama with the directors and actors, who weave his plot into action. And in proportion to the fineness in production must the future day moving picture play show fineness in construction. The scenario writer will become a specialized artist, and the schooling through which he is struggling at present, will make possible his success, if he is the real artist.

It will be a repetition of the weeding process, the survival of the fittest. The clerk, newspaper man, or what not, lacking the finish and dramatic conception necessary to higher production, will go to the discard, and at that time, and not until then, will the scenario writer receive the recognition due his efforts.

At present, generally speaking, the scenario writer is a novice, his plots are crude and unfinished, while the word "technique" is an unknown quality; he does not know either the power of limitations of the camera, nor the proportion of a scenario, in order to begin and tell the story, with a logical sequence, in a thousand foot reel.

Because of this scenario dissecting, or editorial departments, are maintained. And when you, by a conscientious study of your subjects and the possibilities as well as methods of production, are able to turn out a class of work prepared for production without rebuilding, you will be an artist in your line, and by the scarcity of your work, create a demand which will bring you a proportionately larger remuneration.

No worthy effort for the uplifting of society, nor anything within its realm, has ever been accomplished by money alone. The higher and most inspiring incentive has been the satisfaction of man's ego, personal pride and love of worthy appreciation. Money is secondary and only acts as incentive to the point where it is no longer needed; would Kubelic choose the wilderness as audience to his genius, or the harmony of human hearts, the answer is obvious.

But there being no danger of you, as a scenario writer becoming a Kubelic, or reaching a point where money is secondary. The dollar ($) mark, must of necessity be the predominating and material incentive. But the flash of your name upon the screen, will thrill you to new endeavor and the approbation of others, by creating pride and arousing your ego, will reflect its power and influence in your future work.

Since the tendency to organize the forces of the producing classes is today the popular vogue, one might speculate upon the advisability of launching a similar movement among the scenario writers, and by direct action compel recognition, which our vanity deems just, and at the same time elevate the price of the commodity. But a moment's thought dispels such a dream as too utopian for serious consideration. The producing companies would immediately buy the services of the capable writers, create their own scenario department, write their own stories and send the scenario trust to the junk heap. The method alone lies in your work and not in action.

As a free-lance writer, I have averaged $21.40 per scenario—the lowest price being $15 for my first story. I am doing better now, thank you. And if my present work, as a free-lance, did not command a better average, I would turn my misdirected footsteps back to the soil and not tell a single soul about it.

The National Film Distributing Company —Its Programme and Outlook.

THIRD movements in the moving picture field have been talked and written about, as World readers know, a great deal during the past fifteen months. Attention has been attracted to more or less abortive organizations, having for their object the acquisition of that overflow of business which unquestionably exists in connection with the picture. It is not necessary to trouble the reader with any history of dead and gone organizations which have started for the purpose of complying with the requirements of the situation. The World's pages for the early part of this year's and former volumes sufficiently tell the story.

There is a considerable number of exhibitors throughout the country who desire, rightly or wrongly, to make a choice of their own market. This is not a point that we intend to discuss; we are merely concerned with the fact. To meet this demand, there was formed some time ago a National Film Distributing and Leasing Company which, however, was unable for various reasons to live up to the promises of its programme. This company failed chiefly on financial grounds. Into the vacancy thus created, the National Film Distributing Company has stepped.

So far, little has been told the reader about this company except what appears in the published advertisements and a brief article in the issue of Oct. 28th. It became someone's duty, in order that the facts in regard to the company should be made as public as possible, to institute a number of inquiries as to the company's plans and outlook, going straight to headquarters for that purpose. "Headquarters" are the commodious new offices of the company which occupy the whole second floor of the building at 145 W. 45th St., New York.

Rightly or wrongly the National Company has been somewhat under suspicion of having a programme which has nothing more than a paper value. In fact, it has been stated over and over again within hearing in the moving picture field for weeks past that the company was a negligible factor in the film situation. The strength of the organization would alone tend to show that the reverse is the case.

The promoters of the National Film Distributing Co. claim that it is a live organization backed up by real money, and that the National Company does not suffer from lack of capital. Then again, it has secured the American agency for the European-made pictures that it advertises, and the allied American companies of the National are actually making the pictures which are advertised.

The National Company has applications for its pictures from hundreds of exhibitors all over the country. Of this fact there is satisfactory ocular evidence; in other words, there are large numbers of letters calling for the National pictures and the National programme.

How does the National propose to satisfy this unquestioned demand on the part of exhibitors for its programme? It is establishing its own exchanges, which are given exclusive territorial rights. The qualification of a National exchange is, chiefly, adequate capital. A National exchange must be in a position, before it starts business with the company, to satisfy the officers of the concern that it is fully able to buy and pay for the pictures required. Great progress in this direction is being made and the National Co. is said to have a number of exchanges handling its pictures. Probably by the time this article appears, a New York exchange will have been opened.

In reply to the question put to President I. W. Ullman as to whether the National Company duped any of the foreign films, a rumor to that effect having been circulated, we were met with an emphatic denial. Both Mr. Ullman and Mr. C. E. Kimball, secretary of the company, affirmed that the Custom House records would show that all of the positives were imported.

The completeness of the National organization and its programme were emphasized by the officers of the company. They feel and have planned their campaign with the idea that any new movement to be a success must rely upon the possession of a full programme and its dissemination on the basis of exclusive territorial exchange system.

Now, as to the National pictures, for the picture, like the play, is the thing. All the money in the world, all the organizing in the world won't make a film distributing company a success unless it has good pictures to back it up. In this respect it is claimed that the National, especially as regards its foreign productions, stands a very great chance of achieving a marked success. There were shown innumerable sample prints from the programme. As to this programme, many were curious to know whether "Plantation," "Rose," etc., were actually being made. They are not only actually made, and are being made, but they have been shown. All anyone can say of these American-made pictures is that they constitute a very strong part of the programme: To be exact, the National program will be one-half American and one-half European.

Then there were shown samples of the English, French German and Italian pictures advertised by the company. These as has been said, must be conceded to be the stronger part of the programme. Still, as time goes on, improvement in the quality of the American-made pictures may be looked for.

One of the most active members of the organization is B. E. Clements, who had just returned from a long trip through the country in the interests of the National Company. Mr. Clements took with him a large variety of subjects. He found in his travels an enthusiastic reception wherever he went, his experience being that exhibitors came many hundreds of miles in order to see the pictures. Since our inspection of the pictures Mr. Clements has departed on another trip on the same purpose in order to familiarize exhibitors with the quality of the National product.

The Boston Invasion.

Welcome to our city! Or words to that effect. And then some. All of which feebly expresses our sentiments towards the finest looking assemblage of moving picture exhibitors that ever stepped off a train in New York City last Wednesday evening.

On the invitation of the Vitagraph Company, forty-five real live American exhibitors from Boston and other New England towns, came down to New York to inspect the Vitagraph plant. As their arrival was so near to our time of going to press, we considered it better not to spoil a good story by hasty preparation and will therefore hold it over until our next issue in order that we may give a complete report of this very interesting event as well as illustrations thereof. Be sure to read it.

The party consisted of the following managers:

F. J. Howard, Olympia Amusement Co., Boston; McCue & Cahill, Brocton, Mass.; John E. Koen, Theatre Comique, Salem, Mass.; N. Harris Ware, Beverly, Mass.; A. H. Davis, Nashua, N. H.; Ernest H. Horstmann, Olympia, Lynn, Mass.; Joe Mack, Hub Theater, Boston; M. J. Senna, Pastime, New Bedford, Mass.; Joseph Lablas, National, New Bedford, Mass.; N. L. Demara, New Nickel, Lawrence, Mass.; Geo. Accompanying the party was Mr. John M. Casey, secretary to Mayor Fitzgerald, of Boston. Mr. Casey has to do with the issuing of all show licenses in Boston. He is a fair minded man and evinces a disposition to learn things from the viewpoint of the showman. The Boston Transcript was also represented by a special correspondent and photographer.

WALTER H. GUNBY MARRIES.

Walter H. Gunby, of the firm of Gunby Brothers, celebrated his birthday, Nov. 3rd, by getting married. The ceremony was attended by a number of his friends among the picture people.

Observations by our Man About Town

There was a time when the young men crowded about the stage door, either awaiting the arrival or exit of the dazzling damsel, or an opportunity to fill the smallest part the footlights afforded. But things have changed since then—reversed you may say. The Johnnie has disappeared and now we find the young girl in his place. She cultivates the acquaintance of everyone in presumed authority in connection with a motion picture theater and seizes every opportunity to show what a hit she would be upon the screen. That accounts for the supply of people for the pictures being in excess of the demand. Between the two species, the decision is in favor of the old-time Johnnie. He never claimed he could act.

It must be conceded, that as an incentive to grit, the motion picture stage surpasses the other. Girls would sit and rave over the performance of an actress in the speaking drama and not dare to ask an opportunity to do the same thing. In the picture drama field it is altogether different. Stripped of the speaking part, the acting is looked upon as the simplest thing in the world and the girls are just crazy to show how much better they can perform than those who appear upon the screen.

Perhaps the girls, themselves, are not to blame. The key-chopper at the piano, or his able lieutenant who sings about "She'ssmaLove," or the high-collared youth who shouts, "Gents, remove your hats," are to some extent responsible for the many short-skirted maidens who appear at the studios and say they are recommended by the manager of this or that nickelodeon as big hits in the posing line.

One studio manager told me last week that he felt obliged to notify a certain picture theatric manager to desist in sending applicants to his studio and was surprised to receive an answer that none had been sent. Investigation showed that one of his ushers had obtained a position of more importance in connection with his house than himself on account of boasted influence with the people who make the pictures. Every girl he liked he promised to put on the picture stage and followed it up with instructions to the unsuspecting to present themselves at the respective studios and say Manager So-and-so sent them there. "Why," say the misguided applicants, "Manager ——— uses your pictures and he will not be pleased if you do not give me some consideration." And the strangest part of it is that the dupes do not call the culprits to account.

* * *

The moral is that every manager should supervise all his employees as all other managers do in every well-regulated business. The young man who plays the piano, or sings the songs, or the youth who plays the no small important part of usher, when it is played well, or the candy butcher, should have it firmly impressed upon their minds that they are paid for and are expected to work in the interest of the house, and under no circumstances are they to act as booking agents. Unfortunately, most managers have not given this matter their attention. Their business will increase when they do. It is quite annoying to one who pays admission to spend a few quiet moments in seeing a picture to be obliged to listen to the wax-haired young man in a three-dollar suit megaphone to a youthful girl at a distant point, telling her how well he knows this actor, or that actress, and how often they have been after him to join the company. Even when he takes hold of the fumigator and passes up and down the aisle he fails to lose his assurance. One would think he was spreading flowers before a queen, if it were not for the fact that when he goes to hang up his instrument he asks the nearest touch for a cigarette.

* * *

All eyes are upon the master workmen to see what they will produce in the nature of an ordinance governing the motion pictures. Is there anything in the oppressive line that can be promulgated to improve or strengthen what has already been enacted? The Women's Municipal League now appear upon the field and their opening act is a charge that the Board of Censorship is influenced by the fact that the non-voting secretaries are paid with money obtained partially from the trade. They are remarkably silent about the action of the Board in co-operating in the suppression of a certain picture and have not accounted for their negligence to attempt to suppress, or even condemn, the presentation of those pictures in their own bailiwick, notwithstanding they have been condemned by the Board they criticise and prohibited by the Mayor of the city. The purpose of the Women's Municipal League may be a very laudable one, but its operations should be started in the most decisive direction.

* * *

It is a well-established fact that no matter what the standing of the sterner sex may be, woman commands his respect. This is so indelibly imbedded in the nature of man that woman is frequently allowed to proceed with some innovation without a question. But it should not be forgotten that woman is not infallible and there is a certain percentage of them who are not as far-seeing as she, as a whole, received credit. We have now a Board of Censors who are acting upon, what might be termed, purely philanthropic principles—without pay and for the moral welfare of the community. What more could be asked? How many members of the Women's Municipal League know of the monotonous hours that are spent in viewing reel after reel of pictures and in the discussion of their merits? Suppose some non-voting secretaries are being paid? How many of this league know of the volume of circular matter and correspondence that is issued to inform the various agencies interested in the business as to its work?

* * *

Movements of women, when properly directed and guided, have been valuable assets in the destiny of this country and all such steps should receive hearty support. I think, however, that a mistake has been made in attacking the Board of Censors when they have so much work to do outside to correct evils which the Board has not the power to control. The trouble with the movements of most women's organizations that aspire to public discipline is that they are used as cloaks. I have in mind a certain woman who has recently appeared as a champion of the votes for women movements. She has succeeded in gaining columns of publicity in the newspapers, and each article studiously notes that her husband is a prominent ex-prizefighter and keeps a saloon at a certain place. Later accounts record the fact that she has made a convert and that the mother of the convert keeps a hotel, with the location duly noted. Now, I do not wish to intimate that any of the members of the Women's Municipal League, or any of their husbands, keep saloons or hotels. I mention the case simply to indicate the trend of some parts of the public mind.

An effort is being made to increase the seating capacity of picture houses to six hundred. I sincerely trust it will prevail. It will result in a general advancement and uplifting of the business. An increased seating capacity will mean an increased revenue to the exhibitors and that increase will enable them to expend more money in the improvement of their places for the better satisfaction of the public. With the present limit, in certain localities, the managers are obliged to adhere to the five-cent admission. It is well known that, no matter how well regulated a house may be, or how good the show, personal pride keeps many people away from the half-dime house. If the relief asked for is granted that patronage can be secured. There are other houses in better localities that get better prices, but with the increased seating capacity they would be able to get still better prices and secure a patronage of a still better class without destroying the "people's entertainment." The motion pictures have become the popular—the people's—source of entertainment and ample room should be given it.

American flag-waving in pictures has been barred in Canada. What an awful calamity that would be to some film makers if it were barred in the United States.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

THE Western Vitagraph stock company, that recently passed through this city for Colorado Springs, is now at Grand Cañon. The recent blizzard must have been a Tartar for the Easterners who have been engaged in producing Western pictures there, using the magnificent scenery for backgrounds. The intention was to remain three weeks in Colorado and, as the time is nearly up, sighs of relief, when the train departs for Los Angeles, will be heard as far East as New York.

Twenty people made the journey West, in charge of R. S. Sturgeon. Fred D. Burns, the famous lasso king, his brother Robert and his wife, the celebrated buster equestrienne, were among the party. So was Eagle Eye, the halfbreed Indian who took the leading part in "The Halfbreed's Daughter," which will be released Wednesday, Nov. 22. Miss Christie, who took the titular role in the film mentioned, Miss Helen Case and Miss Anne Schaeffer are the prominent lady actors on the Western trip. Mr. Thornby, leading man of the company, will be remembered in "Beyond the Law," and as the Indian in "The Indian Flute," both fine Western pictures. Tom Fortune is assistant director of the company and Mr. Stradling is camera man.

During the winter the company will be engaged chiefly in producing Western pictures, in many of which Indian types will be prominently featured.

Mr. Hutchinson Returns from California.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Mfg. Co., returned to the city after a three weeks' stay in El Cajon Valley, Calif., where the Western company, factory and studio are located. Mr. Hutchinson stated that all the members of the old company are still in the American's employ and that the producing end is at present better than ever. The studio and the developing and printing plant are in fine shape, and the facilities afforded are such that all the positives can be printed there, if necessary.

The present policy of the American is to add to their list of cowboy films some good typical Western dramas, and important steps have already been made towards the production of several unique educational films, the particulars of which will be given in the near future.

Advantage is being taken of the nearby location of several magnificent ranches to secure outdoor settings of great artistic merit for the American pictures. The factory and studio are about 11 miles east of San Diego and in that vicinity, or near it, are the beautiful residence and large olive ranch of Bancroft, the historian. Permission has already been granted to use some of the fine views in a Western drama that will be produced soon. The horse and ranch of General Miles, formerly in command of the U. S. Army, are also near. The fine outdoor settings of "An Eastern Comedy" were obtained here, by kind consent of the general.

"I have never felt happier, nor more confident of the future of the American," said Mr. Hutchinson. "Henceforth the duties of general manager and president shall be performed by me."

Wm. H. Bell Off for Australia.

Wm. H. Bell, manager of the General Film Company's branch at 435 N. Clark Street, has tendered his resignation to the New York office, which will take effect Saturday, Nov. 18. General Manager Percy L. Waters has accepted Mr. Bell's resignation, although he highly appreciates the services rendered by him.

It has all come about because of Mr. Bell's desire to become an Antipodean. He has never seen the jewels of the Southern Cross flash, nor the hike of the kangaroo in his native haunts. Now J. D. Williams, the sweet-tongued president of the J. D. Williams Amusement Company, of Sydney, Australia, has lured Mr. Bell into seeing all these and, incidentally, into becoming general manager of the company mentioned, on most attractive terms.

Mr. and Mrs. Bell, who have a wide circle of friends in Chicago and Spokane, Wash., will sail with the Williams party from Vancouver, B. C., on Tuesday, Nov. 28. Mr. Bell's associates in business here wish him God speed and success in his new field, and the World heartily joins in good wishes for himself and wife.

A Fake "Athletics vs. Giants" Film.

I have been informed by S. R. Day, manager of the Essanay city office, that a film was released by the Sales Company, on Nov. 2, bearing neither the name nor brand of the manufacturer, and represented as showing the recent contest between the Athletics and Giants for the world's pennant.

Mr. Day alleges that this film contains at least three scenes of last year's contest between the Athletics and the Cubs, at West Side park, this city, as shown in the Essanay film of that event, and that the said portion of the Essanay film has been duped by the maker of the film, entitled "Athletics vs. Giants," recently released by the Sales Company. "The tell-tale advertising signs in the West Side park grounds, Chicago, show that the pictures were not taken in the East," says Mr. Day.

"The Essanay poster for the film, 'Athletics vs. Giants,' although not duplicated by the unknown maker of the film released by the Sales Company, has clearly been imitated," says Mr. Day. "This is very apparent on comparing the well known home-plate scene, which appears on the Essanay poster, with the scene on the poster gotten out for the film released by the Sales Company."

I have learned that with one exception the leading Independent exchanges of Chicago have refused to take their prints of the duped film out of the express office, after having viewed the one which had been taken out of the express office by the exchange referred to.

Cardinal Gibbons Sees "Coming of Columbus."

The local chapter of the Knights of Columbus, in Baltimore, had as their guest, on October 26, that venerable prince of the Church, His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons. The occasion was marked by a special exhibition of the "Coming of Columbus," which had been conveyed from Chicago by two Knights of Columbus, of the Chicago chapter, and a Selig representative.

During the production of this great three-reel subject by the Selig Company, which occupied many weeks, Cardinal Gibbons expressed the wish to see it. Mr. Selig, in accordance therewith, saw to it that the privilege of being the first to witness its projection on a screen should be reserved for His Eminence.

The committee from Chicago called upon the Cardinal on October 26, at one o'clock in the afternoon, and was ushered into the Cardinal's presence, where they explained at some length the manner in which the picture had been produced. His Eminence was surprised when the total of the expenditures in its production was given him.

His Eminence then was conducted to the hall which had been equipped for the special exhibition. The presentation delighted His Eminence extremely and he was lavish in his praise for the energies put forth by William N. Selig and the Knights of Columbus in the production of this great picture subject, which will, in all probability, prove to be the most widely exhibited moving picture yet produced. Indeed, there is no doubt that the films will have a world-wide exhibition, not only where Christianity is known, but in all climes.

After the exhibition, the films were carefully packed, in readiness for shipment to Spain, where they will be shown before King Alfonso, the lineal descendant of Ferdinand and Isabella.

Chicago Film Brevities.

William N. Selig is still in Los Angeles, at the latest advice, and visited the studio several times last week. He is regaining his strength rapidly, and, although nothing is known of his immediate movements, it is expected that he will drop in at his general Chicago office, unexpectedly some day in the near future.

Mark M. Dintenfass, president of the Champion Film Company, of New York, was in the city last Friday. He came direct from New York to Cleveland to attend the wedding ceremony of his friend, Arthur Schmidt, to Miss Murphy, of Cleveland. Mr. Schmidt is the Cleveland and Buffalo manager for the Victor Company and also the Albany manager for Rex. After leaving Cleveland, Mr. Dintenfass proceeded to Toledo and Detroit and thence to Chicago. Mr. Dintenfass expressed himself as being highly pleased with the conditions of the film business during his travels.

Harry Raver, general manager of Eclair Company, of New York, was in the city Tuesday, Nov. 7. During his short stay here he created considerable interest in Eclair's feature film subject, "Hands Across the Sea." Every Independent exchange in the city is boosting it.

Mr. Walker, representative of the Nestor Film Company, was a visitor on Monday, Nov. 6. He was advancing the interests of "Desperate Desmond" and other feature films of his company.

During the few moments that I conversed with Mr. Dintenfass he was enthused over his great feature film, "Mother Goose," which is to be released Monday, Nov. 27. Mr. Dintenfass has gotten out some very artistic and attractive advance advertising matter to herald this film. I noticed especially a fine quarter-sheet bulletin with half-tone illustrations that can't fail to prove effective.

"Big Otto," the head animal trainer of the Selig Polyscope Company's menagerie, and W. N. Foster, expert camera operator, left recently for the Los Angeles branch. Mr. Foster goes to assume the duties of his new position in connection with the Western productions, while "Big Otto" went to make arrangements for the transportation of the menagerie from the Selig plant in Chicago to the Western plant. These preparations are advance signs of the production of another great series of startling animal film subjects.

During his tour, President Taft was accorded the honor of tasting the first mouthful to be taken from the gigantic six-ton cheese made by N. Simon, the Appleton cheese man. Mr. Simon presented President Taft with a solid silver cheese spoon, with which the President scooped out a morsel and, after partaking of it, handed the spoon to the committee in attendance, to be presented to William N. Selig as a souvenir of the occasion. It will be remembered that the Selig Company released a film some time ago showing the manufacture of this enormous cheese.

J. Bobeng, manager of a new theater situated on Armitage and Hancock Avenues, was seen last week and stated that the house would be opened November 20 with Licensed service furnished by the G. F. Company's office, at 17-19 S. Wabash. N. M. Rothschild is the owner. It will seat 300 people.

Clarence Krieger, owner of the Lyric Theater, Valparaiso, Ind., has purchased the Vaudette Theater from its former owner, Mr. Noyes. Both theaters use Licensed service.

The old Bijou, in Valparaiso, Ind., has just been re-opened by its owner, Mr. Williams, under the new name, the Star. This is an Independent house.

William H. Murphy opened the Federal Theater, a new house, at 218 E. 61st Street, last week and reports a nice business. Mr. Murphy is engaged in other business, but it is his intention to purchase a string of houses in case he makes a success of the Federal. His service is furnished by the G. F. Company's office, at 117 N. Dearborn Street.

Mrs. M. Peache and L. Webber, manager and assistant manager, respectively, of the Neighborhood Theater, 1544 West 63d Street, were among the recent callers at the World office. Mrs. Peache is a very enterprising lady and opened the Neighborhood about two years ago and has been running Licensed pictures in it ever since. She reported excellent business. "The Two Orphans," complete in three reels, was shown to most successful business at 10 cents admission. The house seats only 278 people, which rather handicaps Mrs. Peache, so she is now looking for a good location in Chicago, where she can put up a much larger house.

That successful feature film, "The Crusaders," was presented at the Arcadia Hall, November 7, as the chief feature of the entertainment in aid of the building fund for St. Mary's of the Lake Church. Tickets were 50 cents each, and nearly 3,000 people attended. Abe Stern, who owns the Illinois rights for "The Crusaders," furnished the films. Tom Quill, the manager of the World's Best Film Company, and the promoter of "The Crusaders," was seen for a moment last week and stated that state's rights have nearly all been sold. He has had great success with this film.

In my recent article on St. Louis moving picture conditions, through an oversight I gave the name of the organist at the Grand Central Theater as D. S. De Carlisle. This surname is incorrect, as it should be "De Lisle."

Minneapolis Situation.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

MY visit to Minneapolis last week was made at a time when moving picture exhibitors were suffering from two adverse influences—the recent attack of the Tribune on picture theaters in the city, and a sudden cold snap that caused residents to keep indoors or wrap themselves in winter garments. But just as the weather conditions improved before I left, so will the interval of a few weeks restore the confidence of picture theater frequenters in the safety of such places of entertainment.

The motive of the Tribune in opening and sustaining its campaign against pictures has not yet been discovered; but many interested in the film business in the city believe that it will be revealed in the near future. That the motive was not based on a real concern for public safety or good health has been demonstrated beyond a doubt, as will be shown.

That the Tribune, whose morning and evening issues are the most widely read in the city, and whose publishers also own the Pioneer Press, the leading morning daily in St. Paul, and the Evening Dispatch, another influential journal, in the latter city, should use its great influence and that of its associates against moving pictures on groundless charges—for groundless they have been proved—is a challenge to the perpetuity of a free press. It may be stated here that the Pioneer Press and the Dispatch began a similar campaign in St. Paul a few days ago before my arrival in Minneapolis.

To combat the unfounded Tribune charges, the Exhibitors' League of Minneapolis met and appointed 13 of their members as a committee of investigation. This committee called on the Board of Aldermen and requested that a delegation be selected from the Board to accompany them to every picture theater in the city on a tour of inspection. They were also accompanied by the building inspector, the fire marshal and the electric inspector.

After making a thorough inspection of every picture house, both downtown and in the suburbs, these gentlemen discovered only one picture theater—the Elite, a small house in the suburbs—that was considered unsafe in case of fire. It was immediately closed until improvements shall have been made.

Now, there are 47 picture theaters in Minneapolis, 30 Licensed and 17 Independent. The Tribune had charged that all were unsafe or unsanitary. The ratio of 46 to 1 in favor of safe and sanitary houses showed that the paper had greatly erred in publishing the charges. But did it retract these false charges? Not so. It continued to assail the picture theaters even after the committee of aldermen, the building inspector, the fire marshal and the electric inspector had drawn up and signed a statement declaring picture theaters in Minneapolis to be "as safe, as sanitary, and as well safeguarded against fire as any class of public buildings in the city."

From this fact it is clear that there was animus back of the campaign. That the animus existed is true, in the ratio of 46 to 1; that the ignorance of the investigating reporter must be a fact is also true, in the ratio of 46 to 1. Such long shots are dangerous when you haven't a chance to hedge!

A curious incident connected with the Tribune's malicious campaign was a published interview with Manager Raymond of the Orpheum, a high-class vaudeville house. This interview appeared in the first article of the campaign, on the first page of the Tribune. In it Mr. Raymond was represented to have stated that there were two classes of films, non-inflammable and inflammable. Furthermore, that he used the No. 1 and paid $50 per reel for it, while moving picture houses used the inflammable, which cost only $5 a reel. He was also quoted as having stated that the No. 1 product could be secured by moving picture exhibitors if they were willing to pay the increased price.

Mr. Van Duzee, owner of the Twin City Calcium & Film Co., a Licensed Exchange that furnishes service to the Orpheum and many other houses in the city, confronted Mr. Raymond with the article, but he denied it in toto. He did not, however, secure a retraction from the Tribune, nor is there any evidence that he asked for it.

Does it not look as if there is a concerted movement among leading vaudeville as well as dramatic houses to stab the moving picture in the dark when chance offers? And may not these big interests be allied with the big interests of the press to stem the fast growing popularity of the moving picture theater, which, so far, has been unable to contribute anything to the support of the press? Is not commercialism back of it all?

Several suits for libel have been entered against the Tribune by Minneapolis exhibitors and exchanges. It is hoped that this injurious and malicious attack on the property of good citizens by unbridled newspapers will be punished by the imposing of heavy fines. Several exhibitors who have their all invested in small theaters, told me that their business had fallen off 40 per cent., and others named still higher losses as the results of the Tribune's rampage.

Minneapolis Exchanges.

There is one Licensed and one Independent exchange in Minneapolis. C. E. Van Duzee owns the Twin City Calcium & Film Co., a Licensed concern at 709 Hennepin Ave., opposite the Lyric Theater, and J. V. Bryson manages the Laemmle exchange in the Sykes block at 256 Hennepin Ave. Mr. Bryson was only recently established there and informed me that he was doing a good medium business. He seemed satisfied with the outlook and was pleased to announce that all his customers charge 10 cents admission for their picture programs.

Mr. Van Duzee is one of the old timers in the exchange business and numbers his friends by the score throughout this section. He was satisfied with the progress made during the year past by moving pictures, against the opposition of other forms of entertainment considered popular in Minneapolis. Mr. Van Duzee is to be complimented for the fine condition of the films rented by him. After six months service, or twice as long, they are still in good condition, showing fine inspection and cleanliness. Mr. Van Duzee informed me that films rented by him were thoroughly cleaned every month by the Speers Film-Cleaning Machine, which was installed by him about a year ago, at a cost of $1,000. It is a duplicate of the Speers Chicago plant. I saw a special educational subject which was released three years ago projected during my stay, and it gave fine definition, sharpness and few or no rain marks.

Minnesota Exhibitors' League.

The Minnesota Exhibitors' League was formed by Minneapolis exhibitors last September and has 42 members at present. The members advocated and supported the movement for a ten-cent admission to all houses, both downtown and in the suburbs.

As a result, all downtown houses, with the exception of the Cyril, a small theater in the slum district, charge ten cents. About 75 per cent. of the suburban theaters also charge ten cents.

The League did good work recently in their effort to offset the Tribune's campaign of villification which they believe was an attempt to wreck picture theaters in Minneapolis. The League raised a sum to pay for two full-page ads. in the Tribune's rivals, the Journal and the Daily News, and in this space was published a signed statement made by the committee of aldermen, the building and electric inspectors, and the fire marshal. The good work accomplished by the local league is worthy of great praise, and Minnesota exhibitors generally should join at once.

Minneapolis M. P. Operators' Union.

The Minneapolis M. P. Operators' Union was organized about two weeks ago and received their charter about a week ago. The members are moving for a city examination and a city license and also for an examination by the organization. The Union's examination questions are being taken from union examinations in the East and in Cincinnati. H. M. Peterson, secretary of the union, is operator at the Mazda Theater. I met him there and found him a genial and intelligent man.

The Mazda Theater.

The Mazda Theater, an Independent house at 246 Hennepin Ave., and owned by C. W. Castritius, is showing to good business. It was one of the theaters that has suffered by the ordinance passed in January, 1911, being opened after that ordinance took effect, and thus prohibited from projecting its pictures from the front. As a result, they are projected at the rear of the house behind the screen. This screen is a heavy glass plate ground on the face toward the operator and smooth on the face exposed to the audience. One can easily imagine, who has never seen a picture projected on one of these glass curtains, how the pictures are distorted and many of their values lost. There is no such thing as perspective, and there are no half-tones. Besides, the operator cannot see his pictures and is ignorant whether he is in focus or not, or how his picture is lighted. Three first reels are run here daily, service being furnished by the Western Film Exchange of Milwaukee. Changes are made three times a week, on Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday.

The other houses in the city using glass screens are the Seville, the Cyril, Oddy, the Crown and the Palace, the last two mentioned being Independent.

The Crystal Theater.

The largest straight moving picture theater in Minneapolis, excluding the Lyric, is the Crystal on Hennepin Avenue and Third Street. It is a fine house and seats 525 people comfortably. It is owned by LaBar & Green. George D. Strong, the veteran moving picture operator, has charge of the operators' room. Both owners were out when I called and so I got a word in endways, once in a while, as Mr. Strong was turning the crank. It may be of interest to many readers to know that this fine old gentleman with his 70 years, is as keen as a boy with his first toy, on the projection of pictures. He uses many devices of his own invention among his equipment, and would give one of the finest pictures in the city, were it not that he is handicapped by an aluminum smirch curtain, which ruins his skies, his perspective and the softer details. He made no complaint, however. Mr. Strong was the first moving picture operator in Minneapolis. He was also Barnum's original Giovanni, the bird trainer, who went around the world with a Tom Thumb troupe under Barnum's management. Mr. Strong has watched the evolution of optics, as connected with magic lanterns and projecting machines, from the very outset. He remembers when twigs of certain trees were used as carbons, and many other archaic things connected with film exhibitions and stereopticon views.

The Crystal uses three reels daily and changes three times a week, the Laemmle film exchange furnishing the service. Mr. Strong informed me that Ambrosio, Italia, Lux and Eclair were the most popular of the foreign makes with Crystal patrons, and that the most popular of the domestic were the Imp, Thanhouser, the American and the Champion. Business has been prosperous at the Crystal.

The Seville.

The Seville Theater, owned by E. O. Freedman, is located at 413 Hennepin Avenue. The location is excellent, but the capacity of the theater is only 311, besides it is handicapped by being obliged to use a glass curtain. Mr. Freedman was seen and informed me that he had been using three reels daily with three changes per week, up to that time, but that he would make a change Sunday, November 5th, and use 21 reels per week. This means three new reels daily.

Mr. Freedman stated that his business fell off fully forty per cent. since the Tribune agitation. He also owns the Oddy, the Milo, and the Maine, in the suburbs, all using Licensed service.

'FRISCO EXHIBITORS APPROVE GENERAL FILM COMPANY.

The Moving Picture World is in receipt of a set of resolutions adopted by the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of San Francisco, Cal., approving the action of the General Film Company in regulating the distribution of licensed pictures in that city. According to the communication, theaters charging five cents admission may not run vaudeville, and all vaudeville theaters must charge ten cents admission and are restricted to three reels changed twice weekly. The large houses have been limited to 10 reels weekly. It has also been arranged that sufficient advance notice regarding pictures can be given by the exchange to enable the exibitor to advertise properly. The resolutions conclude: "Be It Resolved, That the business has been put on a sane, sensible and healthful basis, both for the exhibitors and the General Film Company, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to Mr. W. W. Hodkinson, manager of the General Film Co., in San Francisco, and the New York office."

The resolutions are signed by Charles Rothschild, president, and N. K. Herzog, secretary.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS ON THE JOB.

We are in receipt of a copy of the Cleveland Leader of Sunday, Nov. 5th, which contains a full-page write-up covering all, or nearly all, of the photoplay houses in Cleveland. Around the four sides are halftone cuts of the various theaters, and in the center are scenes from the latest photoplays. Interspersed among these are paragraphs dealing with each house individually, thirty-two being represented and pictured.

The Moving Picture World extends congratulations to the exhibitors of Cleveland for their enterprising spirit and is pleased to note that this form of consolidated advertising is being followed up by exhibitors in other cities. The splendid result in Cleveland points to the benefits to be obtained if exhibitors are wise enough to put aside bickering and competition and wage a general publicity campaign for the benefit of all.

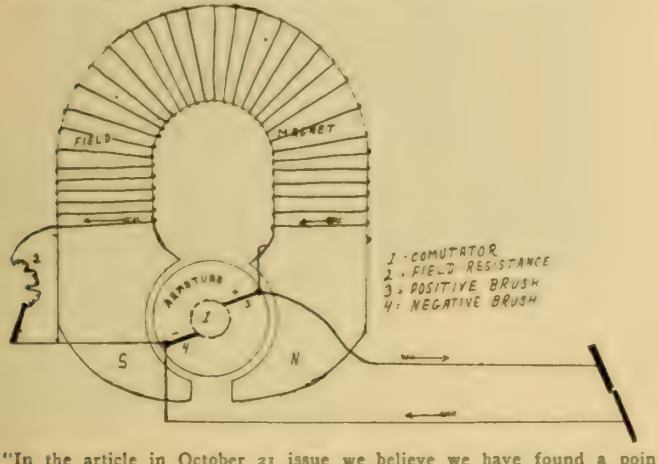
MOVING PICTURE MAN DIES SUDDENLY.

George F. Bowne, identified with the moving picture business in Middleboro, Mass., expired suddenly during the night of Nov. 2 at his home in that city. The deceased was 35 years of age and is survived by a wife.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON.

INTERESTING LETTER.—Messrs. C. A. Brown and E. H. Dowell, San Diego, Calif., write: "We of San Diego have been greatly interested in the Motor Generator discussion, and have devoted a little of our own time to a study of the subject. Up to the present the argument seems to hinge on the ability to use M. G. sets without resistance other than that of the arc and that furnished by the generator itself, supplying a steady and approximately uniform amperage at the arc. This is a fact which has been recognized ever since shunt wound generators have been manufactured. Only quite recently, however, has the knowledge been applied to projection. For the benefit of brother operators who may be interested, as were we, we will endeavor to make this matter clear, even though not ourselves using M. G. sets. The houses in this city are supplied with D. C., which, though not the best, gives generally very satisfactory results. After much experimenting, the local operators have devised a system of resistance coils with cut-outs so arranged that control of the amperage at the arc is almost perfect. [A description of those coils, with sketch, is in order.—Ed.] Projection in San Diego is on a higher plane than in any other part of the United States visited to date (and we have several coast to coast "one-night stands" to our credit). Managers here demand a greater degree of proficiency than elsewhere. We are organized. Our union is Branch Local I. A. T. S. E. No. 13. It has a membership of high-class men. Wage scale is $25.00 per week; hours, eight or less. We might be worse off.



"In the article in October 21 issue we believe we have found a point which may get yourself and Leadville a little closer together. Leadville is discussing M. G. sets which average 50 volts. Overlooking this point has made Brother Richardson not a little difficulty through attempting to reconcile Leadville's results with those which might come from experimenting with feeding mains charged at from 110 to 220 volts. We do not believe successful results could be obtained for projection with sets generating more than 50 volts. Please understand the article following is merely the result of our own study, and as such is offered for what it may be worth to others who are likewise interested in projection. We will welcome any argument or criticism which will correct us in any point, or make the matter more clear.

"Leadville's description of the generating of current by an electrical conductor revolving on an armature (October 21 issue), cutting lines of magnetic force, is so complete that we will dispense with its repetition. We will take matters up from that point, endeavoring to give a complete description of the connections, the actual relations of the different values, etc. The magnetizing coils of a shunt wound generator form a separate circuit, independent of the external or main distribution circuit. This circuit is connected directly to the brush terminals, or in shunt to the main distribution circuit. That is to say, one end of the circuit attaches to one brush terminal, and the other end, after passing many times around the field magnet, attaches to the other brush terminal.

"By reference to the sketch, which portrays the connections and circuits of a shunt wound generator, it will be seen that the magnetizing (shunt) circuit is in large measure independent of the external circuit, it being at all times exposed to the full voltage existing between the positive and negative brushes of the generator. From this it follows that changes in current flow in the external circuit will not affect the magnetizing force acting on the field, except as it may change the voltage between the brushes. However, changes in the external circuit current do affect the field in several ways, two of which are by variation of drop due to the resistance of the armature winding and by varying the counter magnetic force of the armature winding. These two things require careful consideration when it comes to the designing of dynamos. In a shunt wound motor the conditions are different. The magnetizing (shunt) circuit being supplied directly from the mains, the magnetizing force depends only upon the voltage between the mains, usually a pretty constant factor. Thus a shunt wound motor may be considered as having a constant magnetizing force acting on its field. In the case of the shunt wound generator there are two characteristic curves drawn, commonly used to illustrate the the actual performance of the machine. One of these is termned the "internal characteristic," showing the relation between the voltage at the brushes and the current in the field wires (shunt circuit), or, expressed otherwise, the ampere turns on the field. In order to obtain this curve the machine is run at constant speed without load and its field excited from some outside source, in order that the current may be varied from a small amount up to or exceeding the dynamo's full load. The voltage at the brushes, under this test, will at first increase in almost direct proportion to the increase of the field current. However, as the iron of the magnets becomes saturated the increase in E. M. F. for a given increase of field ampere turns will gradually become less. The internal characteristic curve therefore indicates at what current flow the field magnets become saturated. The 'external characteristic curve' of a shunt wound generator is quite different from that of a series-wound dynamo, for the reason that the field current of the former is to a certain extent independent of the current flow of the external circuit. A drop of about one-fifth of the normal voltage represents the actual working range of the machine. Assuming that 35 amperes represents the full load current, at no load (zero current) the voltage at the brushes would be about 55. This is the maximum pressure the machine is capable of producing with a given field excitation, for the reason that the pressure on the field coils is a maximum. As soon as current is taken from the armature the pressure across the field decreases, and there is also a decrease in the armature, hence the voltage decreases. [That is a little mixed, I'm afraid.—Ed.] It is evident that a shunt wound machine can generate its full voltage if the external circuit is open, because the path through the field coils is not interrupted as it is with the series dynamo. As the current is increased from no load to full load the terminal voltage drops from 55 to nearly 44 volts. In this respect a shunt wound generator behaves somewhat similar to a separately excited machine, but the drop in voltage with a given machine would be greater with a shunt excitation than with separate excitation, for the reason that with the latter the field pressure is constant, whereas with a shunt dynamo every falling off in terminal pressure causes a corresponding decrease in field excitation. If the external resistance is made low enough the current will reach about 45 amperes, at which point pressure across the shunt becomes so low that the magnetization of the field becomes unstable. Any further decrease in terminal voltage causes the machine to drop its pressure entirely. In well designed shunt machines this point is not reached until current is produced considerably in excess of the rated capacity of the dynamo. A peculiarity of the shunt wound machine, therefore, is that the external resistance must be above a certain critical value in order for the machine to generate. For example: a shunt wound generator, if short-circuited, will drop its voltage. This is precisely the opposite of the action of a series wound machine, with which the external resistance must be below a certain cricitcal value in order for the machine to raise pressure. In case of a short-circuit on the lines of a series wound dynamo the voltage rises very rapidly. If the armature of a shunt wound machine has a very low resistance and the shunt circuit a high resistance, the machine will hold its voltage fairly constant within the working range. The less the drop the greater must be the external current before voltage becomes unstable.

"Now if the voltage across an ordinary arc lamp be measured, it will be found usually to be between 40 and 50, depending on the length of the arc; 45 may be taken as a fair average. This total voltage may be considered as made up of three parts: (1) That necessary to overcome the resistance of the carbons, wires and carbon arms through which the current must flow. (2) That necessary to overcome the resistance of the carbon vapor between the tips of the carbons. (3) That which multiplied by the current represents the energy necessary to votalize the carbon. The first quantity is quite small, usually not exceeding a drop of 5 or 6 volts, of which 3 to 3.5 volts may be credited to the drop in carbons themselves. The E. M. F. necessary to overcome the resistance of the arc proper is also small, but to a certain extent depends on the length of the arc. It is usually between 5 and 6 volts. [????—Ed.] Altogether the E. M. F. necessary to overcome the total resistance is between 10 and 12 volts. The above values are fair averages for lamps operated with D. C. The actual voltage across the arc is constantly varying when the arc is in operation, but if the lamp be well handled the variation should not be through wide limits. The falling off of voltage can be compensated for by cutting out some of the shunt circuit resistance. It therefore follows that by resorting to field (shunt circuit) resistance the voltage can be controlled and made normal, or even to rise to a certain amount as the load comes on. The controller for the field resistance is usually mounted within convenient reach of the operator. This method of regulation is feasible when the load is not subject to sudden variations. However, where a constant pressure is desired it is now customary to use a compound wound machine.

"As regards the arc lamps in general, our understanding of their action is as follows: If the carbons be touched together and then drawn apart about 1/8 inch, current will flow between the points. The carbon is heated to high temperature. An "electric arc" is formed between the points; so called by reason of the fact that instead of being straight it bends out in the form of a bow, or arc. The flame, or arc, consists of incandescent carbon vapor which acts as a conductor for the current from carbon tip to carbon tip. If a magnet be brought in close proximity to the arc it will be forced to one side. If strong enough and close enough, the arc will be bowed out by the magnetic force until it is broken. Under ordinary conditions the arc is surrounded by a magnetic field, which doubtless accounts for its bow shape. In the crater of the positive electrode the carbon is votalized and the vapor thus formed acts as conductor for the current between the carbons. While the temperature of the negative carbon is very high, it still is not so high as that of the vapor from the positive crater, therefore a portion of the vapor is condensed on the tip of the negative carbon, the rest combining with the oxygen of the air. This burning mixture may be seen surrounding the arc in an envelope of bluish flame. In the ordinary arc lamp the arc itself gives off very little light, the illumination coming almost wholly from the craters. The exact temperature of the electric arc is difficult to ascertain, but is estimated at about 3,500 degrees Centigrade. An increase in amperage does not materially increase the arc temperature, but does enlarge the crater area, hence the amount of light given out. A cored carbon is desirable, particularly above, for the reason that the core, being of much softer material than the surrounding carbon, hence votalizing more readily, furnishes a supply of vapor which increases the stability of the arc. Also it prevents much shifting around of the arc, or flame. The cored carbons, top and bottom, are particularly useful with A. C., since the arc is liable to be flickering and unsteady at best. The cored carbons reduce the voltage for a given arc length, thus allowing a much longer arc than would be possible with solid carbons. Impurities in carbons may interfere seriously with the quality of light. They are bad, for the reason that they usually votalize at much lower temperature than does the carbon, thus lowering the crater temperature, hence its light-giving qualities. Carbons that are too soft are apt to flame badly. We have found that Bio carbons, with Powers 6, should be set in exact alignment, since this allows of much higher amperage and forms a crater practically facing the condenser, therefore giving much more light. This set is, however, hard to handle at times, as in case of sudden variation of voltage.

"We are using about 45 amperes at the arc; 17-foot pictures at 78 feet. Two 7½ condensers. With exception of set named, we agree with you in the settings you have advocated in the department. Please take note of the fact that no theory has been mentioned. Each statement is made as the result of known facts. They are, of course, open to argument. We only trust they may prove of value."

I have given unusual space to the foregoing, for the double reason that the showing of what two operators have accomplished in the way of knowledge, through study, may induce others to pursue the same course; and for the further reason that, while I feel some points are open to question, there is much valuable knowledge contained in the article. I shall not myself discuss the points raised at this time, further than to remark that if only 10 to 12 volts are required to overcome the resistance of the arc and its circuit (not including the rheostat), then I most decidedly have something to learn on that point. Also the theory that the core reduces arc resistance by supplying large volume of vapor is new to me, though I must say it seems reasonable. I had never considered the matter in that light. We thank the Brothers for the article and invite criticism thereon from our readers. Such a letter ought to bring out much valuable discussion.

WAGE SCALE ENFORCEMENT.—Auxiliary M. P. O. No. 35, New York City, has notified all exhibitors of Greater New York of the new wage scale and made demand for reply within two weeks. For the first time there is a decided determination to make a square issue of the matter and enforce the scale and its requirements, one of which is that no operator be required to return or get reels from the exchange. This latter is entirely reasonable. As has been pointed out in this department, the fetching and carrying of reels is absolutely no part or portion of the operator's duty. It never should have been done at all. It is high time the practice be stopped. The scale itself cannot be called anything but reasonable. Boston and practically every large city in the country is paying a scale as high or higher. In some cities it is very much higher. Better salaries and better conditions will attract better men, and the exhibitor will himself be the gainer in the long run. It is therefore to be hoped that there will be no trouble over the adoption of the scale generally on the part of the exhibitors.

It might be added that the Union will give a grand ball in Tammany Hall, Friday evening, January 26. Preparations are already being made and a really splendid time is assured. Look out for some startling effects and new stunts as the dance goes on.

REPORTORIAL IGNORANCE.—Mr. D. E. Rothschild, Sec. M. P. O. Union Auxiliary 3, Stockton, Calif., writes enclosing clipping from a Stockton daily paper. In commenting on the opening of the new Orpheum Theatre the paper says: "The pictures to be shown are known as daylight pictures, and it will be unnecessary to darken the house, the films being light." Brother Rothschild wants to know what I think of it. Says they have had little experience with daylight pictures there, aside from shading the house lights so that rays won't strike the screen.

The newspaper clipping merely displays the usual dense ignorance of the newspaper reporter about motion picture affairs. The reporter, however, is not a good reporter if he allows a little thing like total ignorance of his subject to interfere with his writing in any degree. So-called daylight pictures are merely the ordinary pictures either projected on some patent screen, by some patent process, or by a shading of the light rays so that the picture is not affected, even when there is considerable light in the auditorium. The Pat Casey process, formerly the Herbst process, is an example of daylight pictures by a patent process of projection. Rather surprising results were attained. Some patent screens, notably the Morelight screen, have given remarkable results, enabling the projection of a really good picture with a surprising amount of light shining directly on the screen.

TROUBLE.—Washington (name of town suppressed) writes: "Am again in trouble with my Powers 6. Following your instructions, I procured a two-wing shutter. It seemed to do no good as regards the flicker, though it took out the flashing of the light due to synchronism of shutter with alternations. Does it make any difference whether the shutter bracket is up as far as it will go or not? Why do I have to put my shutter out on the shaft to run faster? How is a Kimble motor started; by switch, starting box or with speed regulator?"

At ordinary speed the Powers three-wing shutter gives no flicker at all, but may produce a flashing of the light, if the machine is run at about 70, when working with 60 cycle A. C. The two-wing shutter obviates this, and gives more light than the three-wing, but produces more flicker. Shutter spindle should be raised as far as it will go, though if it goes a little higher than horizontal there will be no ill effect from setting it horizontal. It really makes no difference at all. If, however, you change its position you will probably have to reset the shutter. There is, or should be, no necessity for moving the shutter out on the shaft at any speed. The closer it is to the lens the better. Explain what effect obliges you to move it out. I have not yet personally inspected a Kimble, but understand they are started merely by throwing in the switch. Starting boxes are not used on small motors. I do not believe it is necessary to move the speed regulator in starting the motor.

SUFFRAGETTE?—Kansas City, Mo., writes: "While we are at it, let's find out how many lady operators there are in the country. My wife, like the Wichita lady, can sing and play. She has acted as manager of some of the best theaters and moving picture houses in the State of Iowa. There are some mighty handsome houses there, too."

"She is experienced on Powers, Edison, Standard, Motiograph, Edengraph and the old Kinedrome, the Geo. K. Spoor machine. She can and has made repairs on these machines, and I don't know where a more difficult mechanism would be found to repair than the last named. While I was on the sick list two years ago, she kept two electric pianos in working order, did all the electric repair work, besides attending to the household duties. And let me tell you, Mr. Richardson, she is some pie-baker, too. If ever you come to K. C., just give us a call and you'll get some cooking like Mother used to brew."

We will remember that invite, Kansas City. We've got a "like-mother-used-to" side-partner at home, too, though. Next!

SLIDE CABINET.—Lexington, Ky., writes: "Have made a cabinet holding about thirty slides. It has a shelf and drawer. It keeps the slides in shape, so that they are in no danger of breakage and are at hand and in place when wanted. Do you think such a thing would sell?"

That is a question nothing but experiment would answer, Lexington. However, I very much doubt if you would sell enough to make it pay.

UNION MEETING.—Local No. 164 I. A. T. S. E., M. P. O., Milwaukee, Wis., meets every second and fourth Friday at Shubert Hall, Milwaukee Street. Fred C. Lower, Sec., 175 Howell Avenue.

SPOTS.—Atlanta, Ga., writes: "In October 14 issue appears picture of The Vaudette operating room of Atlanta. I have been trying to reason out what those spots under Mr. Henderson's machine are. If he will enlighten me I will appreciate it. Have my own idea, but am charitable until I know for certain."

Those spots certainly do look suspicious. We wouldn't for the world intimate that oil is cheap in Atlanta, but—it is up to Mr. Henderson.

SPOTLIGHT.—Lima, O., writes: "Answering California regarding spotlight, will say that I am using an old Edison lamp, and tried it with the regular lamphouse, but, as you say, it was not satisfactory. I then had a tinner make me one 11 inches high, 7 wide and 13 long. Thirteen inches high would be better, on account of being able to use longer carbons. I use a bottom board on which I have the lamp mounted stationary. The cover described above has no bottom, but on its lower side edges are two flanges which fit in metal grooves fastened to the bottom board, so that the whole top slides back and forth in relation to the lamp. On front (back end is open) I riveted a metal clip like the pieces that hold the lenses in a Powers Six lamphouse. In this I use a 6½-inch condensing lens. By sliding the top back or ahead I get a spot or flood instantly. Have used this arrangement for six months. Have 76-foot throw, vaudeville acts—always get results. Hope this will aid the brother, as I have been helped by the department many times."

The brother also sends a sketch, but the description is plain enough that I believe sketch hardly necessary. The board could be so mounted as to swing sidewise and tip, and thus excellent results could no doubt be had. The top side of the bottom board should be covered with heavy asbestos, however. We are obliged to Lima for the contribution.

NEW YORK CARD.—New Jersey (name of town suppressed) writes: "I carry a Jersey license and have for the past two years. I now wish to obtain New York card. Do the New York examiners give out a list of rules to study before taking the examination? What are the days to obtain a license?"

Evidently you are somewhat lazy as to license matters. No, the examiners do not give out anything at all to study. You are expected to possess all requisite knowledge necessary to the operation of a motion picture machine before appearing for examination. You go to Park Row in person and make application for examination. You will then be notified by mail when to appear for examination. The time is entirely optional with the Board. It might be three days or three weeks from time of making application. That is all there is to it, except the examination itself, concerning which I cannot give you any information whatever, except that it is not such as will be hard for the capable man. Many men fail simply for the reason that they are so excited and scared when they appear that they actually forget the greater part of what they do know.

CHARLES W. SHEPPARD

LOCAL 171, I. A. T. S. E., M. P. O., Union, Pittsburg, Pa., was organized July, 1909. It has grown from a small handful of men into one of the best locals of the craft in the country. The local has representation in the City Central Trades Council and the State Federation of Labor. The present year has been the banner year for the organization. Charles W. Sheppard, its President, whose picture appears, has worked hard for the organization since its inception. To him much credit is due for the excellent standing the operators enjoy in the labor movement of the city. He is ably assisted by other earnest officials, and very soon it is expected that the entire craft of the city will be unionized. Prior to November 1st, the charter was opened for a time and any operator could join, without an examination, for a fee of $4.00, provided he had a city license. The officers are C. W. Sheppard, President; H. Katz, Vice-President; Fred Lacy, Financial Secretary and Treasurer; Fred Fulgora, Recording Secretary; Andy Camora, Business Agent; G. Miller, Sergeant at Arms. The union meets first and third Sundays at Labor Temple.

We are pleased indeed to hear of the progress being made by the Pittsburg brothers. Let the good work go on. We hope to be able to visit you some of these days. Better handle that "no examination" proposition carefully, or you may get some mighty questionable material in.

BUNDLE OF QUESTIONS.—Brooklyn, N. Y., asks: "(1) What is best way to clean projection lenses? (2) Does a half-size lens let through more light than a quarter size? (3) If a projection lens be stopped down will it let through less light? Would the picture be clearer? (4) Is there any difference in the light from juice through a rheostat and an operating room transformer, for a given amperage? (5) What causes a film to buckle in and out—to jump in and out of focus on the screen? (6) What would cause the film to continually jump out of frame, the upper loop getting longer and the lower one smaller? (7) Would it be possible to pull an arc from a 50-volt, 4-ampere generator?"

(1) Wash with wood alcohol, polishing quickly with clean, soft cloth. If glass is cold, breathing on it and polishing is as good as anything, unless there be oil on the lens. (2) Certainly a half-size lens lets through more light than a quarter size. As applied to the projection lens, however, there seems to be some question as to this applying, owing to concentration of light by the condensers. (3) Yes, it would give less light, though not very much less, unless the stopping be considerable. If there is spherical aberration, stopping would relieve it and improve the definition, since the aberration is usually mostly at the edges of the lens. (4) That is too big a question to answer intelligently here. Yes, there is generally a difference. (5) Excessive dryness of the film. Worn aperture plate tracks. Loose tension springs. (6) Film climbing intermittent sprocket, due probably to intermittent sprocket idler set too far away; possibly assisted also by too tight a tension; weak intermittent roller bracket spring. (7) Never tried it. Presume it would. It wouldn't outrival the sun in brilliance though.

INCOMPETENCY.—President W. G. Woods, M. P. O. Union No. 162, I. A. T. S. E., San Francisco, Calif., writes: "I respectfully solicit your opinion as to whether or not you consider the enclosed examination questions to have been answered in a manner entitling the applicant to admission to this union as a competent, journeyman operator. Would this examination, if given by the city authorities of New York, and answered thus, entitle him to license as an operator there? Do you consider any [illegible] questions asked to be [illegible] in any way? Do you think them to be [illegible] to the average experienced operator to answer properly? There is no city examination here and this union must protect itself. I would be operator in stage position, before an examination of above nature, but I do not like to refuse all applicants unknown to me—that is to say, not known, to be competent, experienced men."

The questions presented are certainly simple enough, but are they in any way misleading or disconcerting? Any competent operator should be able to answer them readily. The examiner ought to get his info, however. A cursory glance at the answers given by the applicant in question is sufficient to determine his almost total lack of knowledge of the action of electric current. His knowledge of the optical end is also absurdly weak. His idea of the function of the shutter is decidedly hazy. His answers on rheostats and handling them up is a joke. He is most probably one of those who have picked up a smattering of knowledge concerning operating. There is an army of such men. They are not competent. They should be kept out of organizations. They should be eliminated from the business entirely unless they are willing to serve an apprenticeship and learn the profession right. Local Union No. 162 has a high standing. This cannot long be said, however, if it admits to membership men who cannot successfully pass such an examination as the one presented. Keep them out, Brother Woods, is my advice. You will surely regret it if you don't.

RESISTANCE-SPOTLIGHT.—Ohio writes: "Am using 220 D. C. through adjustable rheostat. Want to increase amperage. To do this do I merely move adjustment handle? Am now using rheostat to capacity, i. e., it is at the limit of its adjustment. And now let me ask you concerning what is to me a puzzling thing. As I understand it, when you increase the voltage you lower the amperage, and vice versa. For instance: on high tension lines carrying 5,000 volts the amperage is increased by stepping down the voltage. Please straighten this out for me as applied to projection work.

"In November 11 issue California asks about using Edison lamphouse for spotlight. I use that very thing. Accompanying sketch will, I believe, require very little explanation. Fasten flange at bottom, which is an ordinary floor-flange, securely to the floor. Smaller pipe telescopes into larger and may be raised to suitable height. Collar clamps on smaller pipe, resting on top of larger one. This allows top of stand to revolve, supplying the side motion. Raising or lowering the lamp with the proper adjustment screw throws spot up or down. I use mine with a 4½-inch condenser. Remove cone from lamphouse and replace condenser mount with one lens in it, convex side toward the screen. Replace forward and back adjustment screw with a rod and you have the same quick change from spot to flood as with regular spotlight.

With an adjustable rheostat you raise or lower the amperage merely by moving the adjusting handle one way or the other. If the rheostat is now working to capacity—the handle so set that all adjusting resistance is cut out—you will have to have a different rheostat or cut another one in multiple to further increase amperage. Power is figured in, and represented by watts. When taking current through a transformer the watts on each side are equal, less any slight loss in the transformer itself. Thus: Three amperes at 2,000 volts equals (2,000 × 3) 6,000 watts. Sixty amperes at 110 volts equals (110 × 60) 6,600 watts. Hence three amperes at 2,000 volts will appear as about 60 amperes at 110 volts on the secondary side of the transformer. Through a rheostat the proposition is entirely different. The amperage ahead of and behind the rheostat is the same, but the difference between the line pressure and the arc voltage must be consumed in the rheostat, appearing in the form of heat. We are obliged to you for the excellent description of the spotlight. I would, however, recommend use of larger pipe for stand.

PANAMA OPERATORS.—New York City writes: "Perhaps a few lines concerning the conditions in the Panama Canal Zone may be of general interest. The current there is 110 volts, 60 cycle, generated by the P. & A. Corporation. It is as steady and reliable as I have encountered in my travels anywhere. The City of Panama has a somewhat changeable population of about 65,000, and supports eight straight picture houses. These theatres are as pretty as ever you laid your eyes on. On my arrival in that city I found the machines were set up right among the audience. I called the attention of the Acalda, who corresponds to our Mayor, to the danger of such a proposition. I volunteered my services, and they were accepted, to superintend the construction of suitable operating room. These rooms I planed 12 x 18 feet for one machine, with a 3 x 5-foot vent in the top for ventilation. The exhibitors made some protest, but after being shown the added safety to their audience and the house itself they finally accepted, and the rooms were built. Operators' hours are 6 to 11.30, continuous. Salaries are $35.00, Panamanian money, which is equal to $17.50 U. S., or, as they have it down there, $17.50 gold. They don't carry any reels either. They have a little union among themselves and are well treated."

IMPOSSIBLE.—Lately I have had quite a number of inquiries as to how various effects in certain films are produced. To answer such inquiries it would be necessary that I visit an exchange and have the reel in question run off, as I get little time to go to shows, moving picture or otherwise, just now. This would take more time than I can possibly spare, therefore I am obliged to ask [illegible] to refrain from [illegible] information.

WHY PAY from 25c to $2.00 per sq. ft. for patent theatre screens when you can make one yourself equal to the best for 7c. per sq. ft.? Write

"THE LUCK OF RECKLESS REDDY" (Kalem), November 4.—If ever a young man was misunderstood, and the misunderstanding led to difficulties, it was poor Reddy. First he had to explain the presence of a milk bottle in his pocket to his girl. Reluctantly she overlooked the suspicious circumstances when he produced a dog. But when she discovered him holding a baby, which its mother had just left with him, she refused to listen to reason. Reddy did the next best thing, tossed the youngster into her arms and ran. She ran after him, and there was a lively race until a ranchman, believing Reddy was endeavoring to desert his family, stopped them. Soon after the half-crazed mother appeared and claimed her offspring, and Reddy's luck took a turn.

"OLD BILLY" (Selig), November 9.—The most attractive portion of this film is the story of the old fire-horse. He was sold and doomed to do duty on a milk wagon. But when the engine goes tearing past him he cannot resist the old impulse and starts after it, leaving a trail of milk cans behind. The captain of the steamer rescues his sweetheart, and, recognizing his faithful horse, buys him from the disturbed milkman. A wedding follows. That scene is one which cannot fail to rouse enthusiasm. Such stories have often been told of fire-horses, but this is the first time that one has been visualized.

"JACK'S UMBRELLA" (Lubin), November 9.—Here is an umbrella story which will keep audiences laughing. First, the man loses his umbrella in his hurry to get to a saloon. An advertisement declaring that the thief is known brings a shower of umbrellas to his front porch. There is a complication at the police station resulting from Jack's attempts to carry some of his surplus umbrellas to the office. The parties interested all meet at the police station, and after their friends are called to identifiy them they are released, more firmly convinced than ever that the umbrella is the root of much difficulty.

"THE TERMS OF THE WILL" (Pathe), November 9.—It seemed at first that this picture purposed showing how a clever scheme to gain control of a large estate in Mexico was foiled. It took, however, a more commonplace and conventional path, and although it was interesting, was not so interesting as expectation promised. The former owner of the estate left it to his nephew, provided he married within thirty days. A Mexican conspired with his sister, who was a pretty senoritta, with the purpose of forcing a marriage on him. The man and this girl were wed in the next act at the point of the brother's pistol. The girl was now secure, but the story still continued leading us to suspect that legal complications would separate the two. But all that happened after the arrival of the man's American sweetheart was an attempt on the part of the Mexican to abduct her. This was foiled by American cowboys, and in the midst of the firing, a shot from the brother's pistol kills the Mexican girl. Then the American and his sweetheart are married. The acting and the settings of the picture are pleasing. Another picture, "The Review of the Paris Garrison," is on the same film.

"SHOWING UNCLE" (Essanay), November 9.—Uncle was from the country, and while walking with nephew wondered why the city men stared at him. Nephew said he would show him what city curiosity was. Uncle crossed the street and watched; nephew laid himself out on the sidewalk. What happened came soon and uncle followed the ambulance. It is not a very funny film, but it is short.

"GEE WHIZ" (Essanay), November 9.—It surely was a case of "Gee Whiz." Soucer's wife had been in the country, and suddenly one morning, after a big night before, he got a telegram saying that she was on her way home. It was certainly "up to" Soucer all over the house. His hustling around to make things right was amusing, but the film is not a very funny one.

"THE SPUR OF NECESSITY" (Melies), November 9.—The sober young miner and his wife had a drunken neighbor whom they didn't highly respect. The miner was stung by a snake and his wife had to ride to this neighbor's and then manoeuver craftily before she could get the jug. The man followed her on her way back to the cabin. The run sobered him and he helped in the cure of the poisoned man. Next morning he promised to drink no more. It is dramatically pictured, but the incident lacks that grip on truth that makes a convincing, human picture.

"THE TRAIL OF BOOKS" (Biograph), November 9.—A little family tragedy with a happy ending. A new child player has a prominent part in it and the pretty, naturalness of her work adds much to the picture's charm. The first subtitle thrown on the screen tells us that the child's parents are disagreeing over trifles. This title is more trite than the picture of the fact, and its absence would have been an improvement. The mother, in a few very competently acted scenes, gets ready to go home; her trunk is packed, and the expressman called. Meanwhile the little girl, left to her own devices, has determined to go to school, and with an armful from the library bookcase has started out. The mother, now looking for her, finds her gone. She and the expressman follow her, guided by the books that she drops one by one. The father has come home and found the house empty. When the child is brought back to the house, the man and woman make up. It is a very well acted and commendable film.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY" (Pathe), November 13.—This topical is too well known to need an encomium every week, although it deserves it. Some weeks it probably will not be quite so interesting as at other times; but this week it seems to be as remarkable as ever.

"LUDWIG FROM GERMANY" (Edison), November 14.—A very pleasing romantic comedy telling how Ludwig left his sweetheart in the Fatherland and came to America. A year or so later, the girl and her father followed and for some reason not shown lost track of Ludwig. Ludwig grew prosperous, but his letters to the sweetheart were returned from the dead-letter office and he was very unhappy. The girl's father meanwhile began to feel the pinch of poverty in the New World, but it was this very fact that brought about an accidental meeting between the lovers. The picture has a tender sentiment and some hearty laughs.

"JIMMIE AND HIS COUNTRY UNCLE" (Gaumont), November 14.—A rich and truly delightful comedy, in which Jimmie plays counselor and guide to a country uncle who, he perceives, has fallen in love with a widow. It is a thoroughly enjoyable part that he plays, full of allusion to the earnest doing of older people that one has seen in other pictures, plays and novels—yes, and in real life, too. Jimmie can do this sort of thing to perfection. It is a picture to please everybody. Someone in the audience shouted out, "It makes me laugh."

"THE OUTSKIRTS OF PARIS" (Gaumont), November 14.—This is not so good a picture as the best of Gaumont releases, but it is interesting and it is pretty.

"THE BOOTLEGGER" (Selig), November 14.—A story of California at a time when Indians were numerous and dangerous. The bootlegger was a man who smuggled liquor to Indians. This villainous character incited the Indians to attack an old inn in which were two white women and several men. The building is set on fire; the Americans escape by a subterranean passage and, most unexpectedly, arrive at the fort to accuse the bootlegger, who gets his just deserts. The picture has some very interesting backgrounds; but the story is not very dramatic at any point, and is also obscure.

"DOOLEY'S SCHEME" (Biograph), November 13.—Dooley was an Irish cop on the beat and he was in love with the pretty cook, who preferred the plumber. She was wearing the plumber's ring and the day was set for the wedding, but Dooley wasn't the Irish cop to give anything he wanted up merely because he was invited to. He waited till the plumber was on his way to the wedding, then he barred his way and insulted him. The plumber struck Dooley, who was in uniform. That was what he wanted. Dooley at once took him up and put him behind the bars. How Dooley then supplanted the plumber in the girl's affections and led her as far as the church, and how the plumber, with the aid of a friend in politics, saved the day, makes a very amusing comedy. The picture has a very funny and laughable situation and is well acted.

"WON THROUGH A MEDIUM" (Biograph), November 13.—This comedy, on the same reel with the above, is full of laughs. It doesn't touch real life quite so often as the other picture, and therefore it isn't quite so funny, but it is good and very amusing.

"WHEN CALIFORNIA WAS WON" (Kalem), November 13.—The qualities of Kalem pictures dealing with the early days in California are well known. This has an interesting love story. It lacks the picturesque background that some of the series have had. But, although a few minor faults might be pointed out, it gets across effectively and has some of the elements of popularity.

"IN THE DAYS OF GOLD" (Selig), November 13.—A romance, it tells the love story of a girl who was made friendless by a band of Indians who, attacking her family suddenly, wiped it out. She fled in man's clothing and, because she had no friends, kept up the disguise, and, as a boy, keeps house for a miner who rescued her from the Indians. She grows to love him; then seeing his regard for a photograph of another woman (it was his sister), grows jealous and leaves him. Her letter of farewell makes him suspect that she was not a boy. He follows her and in the end marries her. It is a well-acted Western picture.

"HIS CHORUS-GIRL WIFE" (Lubin), November 13.—A very much alive and very interesting situation makes this picture affecting. We have seen this situation before, many times, when it was dead. It is this: A young man marries a chorus girl whom his father distrusts, and because of it is disinherited. Slowly the older and younger people are reunited. Just by itself, few care for that story any longer; nearly everycne knows how it will end. Yet this is different and we are deeply interested. Why? Simply because this chorus girl isn't a formular; she's a real, live human being, just like ourselves, and we can't help being interested. Whenever, in any kind of art, characters become real truly, the spectator lives the story in himself by imagination. That's why we are interested. It's a worthy picture.

"SUFFER LITTLE CHILDREN" (Vitagraph), November 13.—This story gives a portrait of a man rather than a typical life-portrayal, if one may be allowed the distinction. This man is a New Englander, a crusty, old hard-shell. The hard conditions that met pioneers in New England for several generous made some strong and beautiful characters but they also had a chilling [illegible] and on many a heart that otherwise would have been soft. Such a hardened man was the children's grandfather in the picture. He went through the world with a bible in his pocket, but [illegible] others for little hearts. Such a man as is here pictured is quite common in his regard. It is like a story tragedy inside of him, starving his hunger for love and sympathy. Longing to be kind, but compelled to be rough, he was just such a man as would break down utterly at the end and weep at his grandchildren's crib. It is a very interesting and commendable picture.

"THE EMPTY SADDLE" (Essanay), November 10.—A war picture. John goes to the front, leaving his sweetheart behind. She gives him a locket, which saves his life once, but afterward he is mortally wounded in battle. With his last strength he fastens the locket to the horse's bridle and tells him to go to Mary. He goes, and to Mary the empty saddle and the scarred locket tell the story. It would be difficult to devise a picture which would tell the story more forcibly than this. The story, as shown, rouses the emotions.

"LIEUTENANT GREY" (Selig), November 10.—A war story which is designed to exhibit the kindliness of President Lincoln. He pardons a Confederate spy upon the request of his sweetheart, but the spy is forced to remain a prisoner until the close of the war. There are two or three interesting and thrilling scenes, but as a whole the picture does not rise above mediocre. Any picture which has Lincoln in it appeals to a large number of people, and this one is no exception. It exhibits his kindliness in the best light, but beyond that it does not possess anything out of the ordinary.

"THE BANDIT'S BRIDE" (Pathe), November 10.—A rather novel feature is introduced in this picture in having the girl forced to marry a bandit, and then allowing her lover to capture the outlaw and win the reward and herself at the same time. Such a situation offers possibilities which are carefully worked out. The series of scenes in which the young man accomplishes this are brilliant and cannot fail to hold the attention of any audience. Moreover, they are photographed with the ability which characterizes all Pathe pictures. The settings are harmonious and picturesque.

"THE BLACK ARROW" (Edison), November 10.—Here is Robert Louis Stevenson's story visualized. It is scarcely necessary to repeat the story itself. Everyone familiar with English literature knows it is a tale of the wars of the Roses and has a pretty love story running through it. There is plenty of action and considerable vigorous fighting, all of which assist in maintaining the interest of the audience. Reviewed at length under "Notable Films," page 192.

"THE ENGINEER'S DAUGHTER" (Kalem), November 10.—The central point of interest in this film is a landslide which covers the railroad behind a handcar and ahead of a pursuing locomotive. A pair of elopers are on the handcar, and the girl's father is pursuing on his engine. But for the unexpected landslide he would have overtaken them. Because of this they reach the next town and are married. A reconciliation follows. To see a landslide dash across the track in the path of a flying locomotive is sensational enough to satisfy the most exacting. It is, too, a novelty in motion picture production.

"WHO'S WHO" (Vitagraph), November 10.—A young man (Costello takes the part) bets he can remain disguised until the end of the summer and no one will discover him. A young woman dresses as a man. They meet at the same resort and for a time each thinks the other is fooled. Eventually they both discover the deception. They are engaged immediately, and while Bertie admits he lost his wager he boasts that he won a wife, which he thinks is of much more importance.

"THE ASTIS" (Pathe), November 10.—A film showing some interesting acrobatic performances by trained actors. A few of the acts are remarkable and the reproduction is excellent.

"LOVE'S RENUNCIATION" (Pathe), November 11.—A highly emotional drama which tells the story of one girl who gives up her lover for her sister, purposely aggravating a dangerous illness so she will be out of the way, and with her dying breath joining their hands and wishing them well. Some of the scenes, notably those by the seashore, are very beautiful.

"THE GIRL BACK EAST" (Essanay), November 11.—An unusually dramatic picture of an affection, seemingly as strong as that between Damon and Pythias, against which a jealousy lifted up its head so venomously fanged that it prompted one of the characters to murder the other. The attempt was not successful. As a picture of character drawing, it is worthy of the highest praise. In fact, such films as this keep motion pictures as a whole on a high artistic plane, in spite of the amount of trash that is shown. The two men were Western miners, bunkies, and lived in the same cabin. Both were dreaming of the same woman, the girl back East. She wrote saying that she was in need and asking that one come to help her, promising her love to the one who came. This criticises the girl harshly, but the scenario writer didn't take time to be interested in her. The two men toss a coin to see who will go. The one who loses takes his hat and goes out. It would have been better to have made the result of the toss plainer. The one who wins, after thinking, decides to let the other go, and writes telling him so. He then prepares to leave the country. On his

"THE HOUSE THAT JACK BUILT" (Gaumont), November 11.—A story of a woman [illegible] for a home [illegible] She didn't [illegible] enough, so [illegible] to bring in the flying machine again and again, has sacrificed very nearly all its dramatic interest. There are a few effectively dramatic incidents, as, for instance, when the girl, whose father disliked aviator sons-in-law, is seen walking over country meadows. She looks up and sees her lover flying among the clouds; but we don't see him. She waves, and he throws her a message asking her to meet him at the hangar and proposing a scheme to get ahead of papa. Later, we see the two start off on their flying elopement. Papa attempts to follow in another aeroplane, but it breaks down. Then he gets an automobile, then takes a train, then continues in a fast motor boat. This chase isn't dramatic at all, because it isn't at all convincing. An aeroplane can go anywhere, at least in a story, and the only dramatic way of following would have been another aeroplane. The film has some very interesting scenes.

"WILLIE WISE AND HIS MOTOR BOAT" (Edison), November 11.—The Thousand Islands serve as background for this picture. It is a comedy and has a good many laughs, which come from the antics of "Wise Willie's" motor boat. What he knew about machinery didn't count for much. The fact that he owned the boat helped him to cut out the girl's sweetheart; but when he took her for a ride he couldn't even get the boat started, till a youngster rowing past explained it to him. He got it started, then he couldn't steer it. It jumped over a rocky island, did the corkscrew turn like a merry-go-round, and spilled the girl overboard. She was happily rescued by her sweetheart. The boat, after a while, landed, bounded up the road and threw Willie out in front of the hotel veranda.

"ICEBERGS OFF THE COAST OF LABRADOR" (Edison), November 11.—There pictures are very interesting. Some of the bergs shown are of large size and one is marvelously beautiful. It is a quiet picture.

"THE STORY OF THE TYPEWRITER" (Pathe), November 8.—An industrial picture and story beginning with the invention, the inventor's introduction to a capitalist and the development of the machine. An interval of forty years allows time for the perfection of the mechanism as well as the machines which make it, and the realization of the inventor's dream after a generation, the typewriter in the public schools. It is an industrial worked out upon a new plan, one that is unusual and attractive.

"WHO OWNS THE BABY?" (Lubin), November 8.—The story of a baby left on a press agent's doorstep and how it was the means of bringing crowds to a practically deserted theater. The discovery of the baby in the theater after a performance and the columns of newspaper space bolstered up the theater's business, and in the end the innocent foundling was the means of making many hearts glad. The picture is interesting.

"LOGAN'S BABIES" (Edison), November 8.—Friday, the 13th, proved a hoodoo for poor Logan. He got mixed up with a brace of babies, one of which is black, and they both turn up just as Logan is being married. The bride caps the climax by falling in a faint and Logan's perturbation is very funny.

"WHITE BRAVE'S HERITAGE" (Kalem), November 7.—An Indian story, presenting the adventures of a boy stolen and brought up by Indians, and his meeting with Agnes, the only one left of a party of whites whom the Indians annihilate. Through a misunderstanding with the chief, who is determined to force the girl to marry him, White Brave is made a prisoner. He escapes, taking Agnes with him. There is a flight, but White Brave's own father rescues him and the girl from the pursuing Indians. By means of his [illegible] identity [illegible] and a deal of happiness [illegible] them.

THE FILM WITH THE INDIAN HEAD

Synopses of this Week's productions in this paper

INDISPUTABLE ORIGINATORS OF COWBOY FILMS.

WE CONTINUE TO OFFER EACH WEEK MR. G. M. ANDERSON, (POPULARLY KNOWN AS "BRONCHO BILLY") IN THRILLING STORIES OF EARLY DAYS IN WESTERN AMERICA. STAGED UNDER THE PERSONAL SUPERVISION OF MR. ANDERSON, ASSISTED BY A CAREFULLY TRAINED COMPANY

"THE GIRL AND THE SHERIFF" (Vitagraph), November 14.—A more or less conventional picture of a fugitive, his sweetheart, and a sheriff. It is not a true life-portrayal, and although at its climax, which is very near the end of the film, it wakes up and has some dramatic interest, it is tiresomely slow in getting started. The man sitting next to the reviewer volunteered the opinion that actors in the picture moved very slowly. It wasn't the fault of the operator. It is well acted and has a flash or two of fresh humor.

"THE BIRTH OF A FLOWER" (C. G. P. C.), November 14.—The chrysanthemum is pictured on this film. It shows how the cuttings, slips, are made early in the winter and then carries the culture of the plant, making plain how the florist gets those gorgeous blooms. It is colored.

"THE VENDETTA" (C. G. P. C.), November 14.—A Sicilian picture, astonishingly tense and effective. It is brightly colored, competently conducted and acted. It pictures very violent events. It deals with passion and abduction that was foiled. No one will be likely to leave the theatre while it is on the screen.

"THE HINDU JEWEL MYSTERY" (Eclipse), November 15.—A story like "The Moonstone." The jewel is stolen from the Hindu idol, is carried to England and found only after a long search. The mystery portion is very well sustained, and the actors who take the part of the priests are clever. The story is well told, and the situations are well handled.

"SOME MOTHER-IN-LAW" (Lubin), November 15.—Again the mother-in-law joke performs its "stunt." Willie had no use for her, or he thought he hadn't. But one evil day he was so charmed by a lady that he invited her to lunch. And then imagine his consternation when he discovered it was his much-dreaded mother-in-law. The old joke is thus given an attractive new dress.

"THE LIVING PEACH" (Edison), November 15.—A pretty love tale with an objecting parent to furnish zest. The father says, however, that the young man is welcome to anything which falls on his side of the fence. When the daughter falls while picking peaches, the young man takes advantage of the father's assertion and picks her up. The judge is pleased at the young man's quick wit and admits the validity of the claim.

"THE Y. M. C. A. SCHOOL, SILVER BAY, LAKE GEORGE, N. Y., AUGUST, 1911" (Edison), November 15.—A typical day at the training school for employed officers. The audience gets a clear idea of what is required in preparing for the position of employed officer in one of these institutions. It shows how careful they are to train men to hold positions in the various Y. M. C. A. institutions throughout the country.

"THE DESERT WELL" (Kalem), November 15.—A Western subject, with a sheriff chasing a fugitive cattle rustler through the desert as the principal event. Almost a tragedy occurs at the well, but the sheriff effects a capture and marches his prisoner back over the burning sands.

"A BROTHER IN ARMS" (Pathe), November 15.—The features of this film, which is a war story, the scene of which is laid on the Mexican border, are the illustrations of the destructive effects of jobite, the new explosive, the building of a bridge across a chasm by military methods, and the explosion of a land mine, which prevents the advance of the enemy.

"THE MOONSHINERS" (Reliance), November 15.—A very tragic story, but clear as can be in every part, and excellently acted. The moonshiners have a still up on the hilltop. The revenue men find them and after wounding one man, capture the other. The wounded man, who escapes, suspects that his sweetheart has betrayed them, while in fact it was the other man's wife. This wounded moonshiner is played by William Walthall, and his sweetheart's part is taken by Miss Ruth Robinson, and both do very praiseworthy work. The woman who showed the officers where the still was located repents of her foolishness and confesses, reuniting the two lovers. There are some good things in the picture and it makes a pleasing and worthy film.

"THE INJUSTICE OF MAN" (Reliance), November 18.—A pathetic and tragic picture of a respectable young man unjustly accused of theft and sent to prison. After serving his term, he can find no honest work. Only his mother remains his friend; his brothers and sisters think him quilty and treat him very coldly. In despair, he is about to kill himself, his mind plainly being unbalanced by his troubles. He is saved by a little child who, finding him so downcast, makes friends with him and brings him to her Sunday school. The minister of that church receives him kindly. Just then a message is brought to him from the real thief, who is dying. The minister and he go together to the deathbed and hear the confession. The leading part is taken by Mr. Walthall, and the child who made friends with him by Baby Rosanna. Mr. Walthall's acting "makes" the picture, which is a commendable one; it is also well photographed and interesting.

"THE REDEMPTION OF A COWARD" (Champion), November 13.—A war story, human and dignified in the idea that it pictures, and with a directness and simplicity that will make it popular. It is a very good picture for Southern exhibitors, but has nothing in it to displease anyone. The man, a C. S. A. solider, was no coward. He ran away when under fire for the first time. Was it not one of Kipling's British officers who gave a man permission to do it twice, but not a third time? This man, shortly afterward, proved himself a brave man and died to protect a young lady whom he loved from Union soldiers. It is well acted for the most part. The reviewer took pleasure in it and the audience seemed to like it.

"THE PASSING OF SAL" (Champion), Novmber 13.—Not all of this tragic romance is clear. The confusion seems to come from the peculiar lay of the land. The heroine has a hard, all-night climb over rocky crags; but we see no reason why it was necessary. Two men loved her and she chose the better favored one, whom later she found was not true to her. The hard journey was made with the object of intercepting the faithless lover and the other girl. She had intended to kill both, but as they passed her hiding place, she fainted. The other lover finds her. It is not a very well acted picture. It gives only fair entertainment.

"BABY NEEDS MEDICINE" (Solax), November 13.—A comedy-farce in which a clever little player has the leading role. The action is exaggerated, as is to be expected in plays of this character, but the central situation is true comedy and amusing. Baby had been eating jam, and next morning needed medicine. His nurse, mother and father tried in vain to get it down him, but he wouldn't take it. The father had invited a great financier to call on business and stay to lunch. This financier also tried, without success, to make the kid take his dose. Then they tried the old "gag" of one glass of cold water, one of medicine and the old folks drinking "some like it" out of the other glass. Baby changes the glasses when no one is looking. The result is unpleasant for the old folks. The picture is entertaining, but although well acted it is not as effective as were some recent Solax comedies.

"THE RETURN" (Rex), November 16.—A very pretty picture telling a complicated and very melodramatic story. Betty's parents insist that she go to boarding school, but she likes ranch life and is reluctant. The day before she leaves, while out on the hills saying good-by to the rocks and meadows, a fast character of the neighborhood walks up and insults her. In self-defense she shoots him. Horrified, she gallops home to tell her brother, and together they hide the supposedly dead body. Later, at school Betty is invited by a classmate to pay her a visit. She falls in love with her friend's brother and promises to marry him. Seeing a photograph, she finds that the man she had shot was her sweetheart's brother. She leaves a note and runs away from the house. The man, however, didn't die. He recovered from his wound, but had no memory of the past; didn't know who he was. The day the girl's sweetheart reached her home to ask for an explanation of her flight, a storm comes up and the older brother, passing, seeks refuge there. There is a mutual recognition, followed by an explanation, forgiveness and a loving embrace. It is acted acceptably for a melodrama, and the pretty heroine is very pleasing in this part.

"THE WHITE MEDICINE MAN" (Nestor), November 15.—An interesting picture of an Indian wooing opens this film. The young brave, Morning Plume, is accepted by Katana, daughter of a chief. Just before the marriage, Morning Plume is stricken with fever. A white medical doctor chances to be passing the camp on his way to the gold fields and cures him. Before he departs the girl's father also falls sick and the doctor cures him. In very interested, very Indian generosity, the chief decides to give his daughter to the white medicine man. This brings about an exciting climax which is very cleverly handled. The father of Morning Plume, by a crafty ruse, gets the other chief and his adherents out of the way, then frees the white medicine man from his predicament and lets Morning Plume marry Katana, as was just and right. It is a pretty and acceptable film.

"MUTT AND JEFF AND THE UNLUCKY STAR" (Nestor), November 18.—The unlucky star was a sheriff's badge that Mutt found. They tried to get a good meal apiece, one eating and the other arresting him so that he wouldn't have to pay. Jeff got his turkey, but when Mutt needed to be arrested, Jeff had fallen asleep. It is as good as most of the series and has some good laughs.

"THE KID FROM THE EAST" (Nestor), November 18.—A picture of villain work and grand heroics set in prettily photographed, but not very wild scenes. The Kid from the East had no show against the big bully of a puncher on the ranch. The Kid and the ranch owner's daughter were good friends, but her father had other ideas. When the Indians on the war path make trouble, the Kid proves the hero. It is the kind of story the small boy likes, the kind that sells very well at five cents the copy. It is a conventional "thriller" with snap and incidents to keep it up to the mark.

"GAAS GRUND" (Lux), November 17.—A marvelously beautiful scenic of Switzerland. There have been two or three scenics that equaled this; but not one that has surpassed it. There are several pictures of waterfalls, small in volume, but falling from heights. These pictures are full of poetic mystery. It also shows something of country life in this Alpine village. Such pictures are a joy forever.

"THE MYSTERY OF BEAUFORT GRANGE" (Lux), November 17.—An eerie impression of mystery is maintained pretty well by this picture. It is a story of a thrilling adventure with the secret of a very ghostly place, but no ghosts appear. Some young people were playing hide and seek among the old ruins. One young lady entered a hole in the wall and followed a passage into a room under the castle. She accidentally turned a peculiar spring and a door opened behind her. She entered, and at once it closed upon her, making her a prisoner. Her friends missed her, but she couldn't be found. Lord Beaufort also took up the search. He didn't know the secret, but discovered it, and he, too, was caught. Later, a detective also found it, and freed them. Some of the photographs of the film are very poor, but for the most part it is good and interesting.

"BREAKING THE SEVENTH COMMANDMENT" (Imp), November 16.—Pictures of this kind are pleasing, but they are not very uncommon. The orphan grandchild in this picture has a fine bulldog which she loves so much that she won't sell it to rich man who is willing to pay well for it. The grandfather is a carpenter in this rich man's factory, and in a few days, with other old men, is laid off. That very night, on reaching home, he finds the child sick. To buy medicine and pay for a doctor, the old man sells the dog; but when the child finds her pet gone, she is inconsolable, and to soothe her the old man steals back the dog. This brings the manufacturer to his house, where, on discovering the conditions there, he gives the carpenter his job again. It is a well-acted picture and probably will be popular.

"THE FALLING OUT" (Imp), November 13.—A picture of sentiment suggested, apparently, by Will Carlton's poem, "Betsy and I Are Out." Two old, long-married people on an unfortunate day had a serious quarrel. The old man childishly went to a lawyer and got a divorce (it was handed over to him on application); but on his way home fell asleep in the carriage and dreamed pictures that told him how much his wife had been to him through all the years. When he reaches home she has a good dinner for him. The divorce is still in his pocket, but craftily he gets his wife to burn it. She knows nothing about it. It makes a very pleasing picture.

"THE WAYS OF THE WEST" (American), November 16.—The ways of the West are independent ways. Two old fogies, flighty with their success, attempt to make the son of one marry the daughter of the other. The situation makes a good comedy. The son, to investigate for himself, asks the girl's father for a job, using a fictitious name. There is some pretty lovemaking, some pretty natural scenery, a joke played on the old man, who is made to think a drunken puncher is his friend's son, and the usual acceptable ending. It is a light-hearted, pleasant picture.

"THE EASTERN COWBOY" (American), November 14.—A very pretty ranch comedy, fresh as to its plot and acted with a pleasing sprightliness. The lovers had a bit of a tiff, and the boy in pique ran away to the West. Not knowing it, he got a job as cowboy on the ranch of the girl's uncle. She was of course invited out on a visit and there is an unexpected meeting. The charm of the piece comes largely from the characters. There are three girls, and each is very pleasing in her part. The ranch owner is a character well known in other pictures, as is the "American" leading man in romantic parts.

"THE LEGEND OF THE EAGLE" (Eclair), November 13.—A Napoleonic story that is interesting, although it has no great dramatic strength. It is very prettily set and has much poetry. It bears a good deal of outward resemblance to a picture recently released by this same company, "A Just General." It is a bit more tragic and more effective. By Napoleon's order, any soldier found drunk or abusive to women in an enemy's country was to be shot. The soldier, hero of this picture, was both. A peasant knocked him senseless. He claimed that it was an unprovoked assault, and the peasant was about to be shot when the French soldier confessed. We see his execution. The peasants pile flowers over the body.

"FOOLSHEAD, A PROTECTOR OF INNOCENCE" (Itala), November 18.—Never was this character more worthy of his name or more ridiculous. It is a vulgar picture and a part of it is hardly decent.

"THE LIFE OF BEES" (Itala), November 18.—A very instructive and valuable nature film giving a remarkably clear idea of what goes on in the hive. Nearly everyone is interested in bees. This is an exceptionally fine picture.

"THE HIGHER THE FEWER" (Thanhouser), November 14.—If a man can only get his girl in an areoplane and get high up enough ,there will likely be less competition in romance making. That is what "London Kid" did. It worked. He and the girl were engaged when the third man caught up with them. The "Kid" had been a prize fighter and had seen the girl and fallen hopelessly in love with her. He learned that he was heir to a fortune and a title. After that he met her in society, and he and the third man took her to an aviation meet. When this third man catches up with him after the flight, the "Kid" knocks him down, much to the delight of the girl, but the necessity for it was not quite clear. The picture has elements that are popular and is interesting, but it isn't a great picture.

"THE WINNING OF WONEGA" (Bison), November 14.—Wonega was a pretty Crow squaw whom Lone Wolf, a Crow warrior, loved. She fell into the river, and Swift Arrow, a Sioux, passing in his canoe, saved her. She regains consciousness in Swift Arrow's tepee. Meanwhile her friends, the Crows, have missed her, and Lone Wolf has found the lone tepee and taken the news back to the tribe, which, finding the Sioux's tepee unguarded, take it by surprise. Swift Arrow is condemned to death by burning. Wonega sets him free in a thrilling scene and they escape together. Many of the scenes are badly photographed; there is in them too little detail and too much shadow. The story is exciting.

"THE OLD LEADER" (Powers), November 18.- The idea behind this picture is somewhat like that behind a recent Nestor film, "Let Us Smooth the Way." The character portrayed, an old musician, is very different. His skill, as he plays on his violin at the noon hour, near the new building where, after he has lost his position as leader of the orchestra, he got a job, won him friends and he is given a position as leader of a much more important orchestra. The old man is very well pictured indeed, and the film has the qualities that will make it popular.

"WHEN FIRST WE MET" (Powers), November 14.—A thoroughly delightful little picture; it is full of poetry and human sentiment. Farmer Brown drives a few small boys out of his apple orchard. His wife, kindly faced and grandmotherly, recalls a picture to his mind of what once happened when he was caught apple-stealing and she saved him. This kind of picture recalls to one the delights of childhood.

"A TELL-TALE PARASOL" (Powers), November 14.—A lively picture, but it has many improbabilities. Most of it is amusing, but none of it is very funny. It was indiscreet on the deacon's part to leave his horse and carriage unattended at the grocer's. The horse walked off and in the carriage was the parasol of a woman whom his wife suspected of flirting with him. The picture was cleverly handled, a slight love story being used to hold it together. This complicates the picture and leaves loose ends unexplained for a time. It is acceptable.

"INTO THE LIGHT" (Yankee), November 13.—It is very hard to make a picture of a burglar's conversion convincing. It takes very skilful acting at the best, and in most pictures of this kind there are improbabilities and contradictions that make the action seem almost grotesque. This picture of the conversion of a burglar by a young lady whom he loved is very pleasing. It is made so by the players, in spite of a rather heavy load of such improbabilities which it forces them to carry. These players succeed in getting the greater part of the picture over and effectively. The burglar, after he is brought into the light and gets a job as buttler, dies of joy. It is interesting, but it is not a vital picture.

"THE TWO ROOMS" (Yankee), November 17.—A tenement-house story. The two rooms were in adjoining flats. One was occupied by a settlement worker, a "minister of the Gospel," plainly not a Methodist. This man was a good angel to the little girl next door, whose mother took in sewing, and whose father was in prison. The father conveniently escapes from prison, makes trouble for the woman for a while, but is killed trying to get away from the police. The minister's mother proposes for her son to the little girl's mother and is accepted as a mother-in-law. It is a pleasing film, because of its human interest, but not a very reasonable one. One of its faults is that it showed us a rent collector in an early scene and let us suppose that he was the woman's husband. This left a rather unpleasant impression, which the average spectator will be sure to get. It is well acted, and the photographs are very good.

"A MOTHER'S FAITH" (Thanhouser), November 17.—In this story, a rich man's prodigal son gets the grand bounce by his dad. A little later the father [illegible]

Joseph Mack, Hub Theater, Boston, Mass.

There is probably no better-known boy in the moving picture business today than Joe Mack, of the Hub Theater in Boston, born and brought up in the town and who has been in all branches of the show business from ushering up. For some three years he was connected with the Belasco Theater in New York City, and one of the souvenirs of that association is a silver cigarette case, given him by Mrs. Leslie Carter on Christmas, 1903. After severing his connections with the Belasco Theater he was associated with Shepard, handling a road show through the New England states. After that the Britt-Nelson fight pictures, and then the San Francisco earthquake pictures. Joe, as everybody seems bound to call him, then boasts that he was one of the very few men that ever made any money with the San Francisco earthquake pictures, as lecturer and manager. After this, he came back to Boston, his home town, starting at the Grand Opera House, giving Sunday night concerts. This lasted for a period of twelve weeks, and then he took on the Hub Theater, acting at that time, not only as manager of the Hub Theater, but as local representative of Miles Bros. Film Exchange. Despite all competition and constantly-changing conditions, Joe Mack is still positive that the moving picture business is advancing rapidly.

NEW AMERICAN FACTORY.

Work is going forward on the new factory now in course of construction by the American Film Mfg. Co. and promises to live up to the expectations of its architect in being ready for occupancy by January 1. The realty secured for the factory lies in the heart of the exclusive residence district of the lake shore. It is believed to be a good speculation if property continues to treble in value in that section as it has during the past five years.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE COWBOY PUGILIST" (Nestor).

A Nestor picture, "The Cowboy Pugilist," which was released this week, November 22nd, has very interesting and sensational features. One of these is a very lively bout in the squared ring and with gloves, between a cowboy who was an artistic and peppery sparrer, and a champion prize-fighter. The cowboy at first didn't want to fight. He was very much in love with a pretty girl who lived in the community. This girl was a ladylike young woman and the cowboy, who had once been very fond of boxing, had turned over a new leaf and was trying to live up to gentler ideals. She considered fighting brutal.

The boys wanted their amateur champion to accept the professional pugilist's challenge. They knew he could win the $200 that was offered to any who would stand up before the challenger through four rounds and still be on his feet at the end. But the cowboy wouldn't hear of it. He would have enjoyed the attempt, but he wasn't running any risks with that girl. He happened, however, to find out that the girl's grandad was in arrears with his rent. A villainous man owned the cottage, and he was going to eject the old man and the girl if the money wasn't forthcoming. So the cowboy went in for the money prize and he won it. He didn't win it easily. He worked very hard to get it, though neither he nor his opponent acted like a ruffian. It was a spicy, but very sportsmanlike bout.

This speedy bout was only the star feature of the evening. A very amusing contest was on the bill and it was pulled off just before the contest for the purse. It was called a "battle royal," and was fought by four negroes. They didn't fight two by two; all four fought together. If three well-filled mitts happened to alight on one poor coon's head at the same instant, the joke was very clearly on that coon for the moment. His turn came next, when the other two helped him to punish the third. It was well-named a battle royal, for its was royally good-natured and amusing, seemingly as much for the four coons as for the spectators. It must have been a real match, for the spectators in the picture were photographed in roars of laughter. It is very well worth seeing.

Following the example set by a more enterprising contemporary, not to say rival, the St. Louis Republic, which has always been "conservative," has thawed out to the extent of a column on Sunday devoted to moving picturedom. The enterprising contemporary is the St. Louis Times, which has recognized the moving picture for more than a year and has been on the exchange list of the Moving Picture World for the same length of time.

"EXECUTIVE CLEMENCY" (Imp).

"Executive Clemency" is a drama of Thanksgiving and what the holiday brought to a persecuted man. It is a story of the kindness of the daughter of the chief executive of the state and is a satisfying drama that will not fail to please. A young mechanic is ill and the rent collector calls. He is something of a masher and, as the wife of the tenant is quite a prepossessing-looking woman, he makes improper advances which she repulses. Becoming bolder he tries to take her in his arms, when her screams reach the ears of her husband. He comes to her assistance and indignation lends him strength. He grapples with his wife's assailant and in the struggle the visitor is treated rather roughly. The fight attracts the attention of the policeman on the beat and he interferes. As the rent collector has influence he charges the husband with assaulting him without cause. The story of the wife is not believed and the husband is sent to prison. He is a model prisoner and is recommended for pardon, the governor intending to send him home on Thanksgiving Day.

A few weeks before the holiday the prisoner receives a letter announcing that he is a father. He is obsessed with but one idea—to see his wife and child—and manages to make his escape, eluding the vigilance of his guards. He visits his home in the night, kisses his wife and babe while they sleep, and returns to the yard of the prison and voluntarily gives himself up. His escape reaches the ear of the governor and the order for his pardon is revoked. The daughter of the governor reads an account of his escape and the reason for his violations of prison rules and she prevails on her father to adhere to his original decision to grant the pardon, which he does. The girl visits the home of the prisoner in advance, laden with good things for the dinner and instead of beef and cabbage the young mother and the returned husband have turkey with all the trimmings for a substantial repast. They are happy in being reunited and the daughter of the governor is quite well pleased with her efforts in their behalf.

"A HEAD FOR BUSINESS" (Lubin).

When the head of business and the heart of love conflict, business is sure to get the worst of it and that fact is deliciously illustrated in a cleverly-acted love comedy soon to be released by the Lubin Company entitled, "A Head for Business."

John and Harold Watson were conducting the business established by their deceased father. John found all his interests in stocks and bonds and railroads, but Harold did not. He was an amateur painter of considerable ability and was accustomed to slip away whenever he could to the studio of two girl artists, Agnes and Phyllis Moore.

One day a very important matter in connection with a big railroad contract came up at the office. John sent a blue-print map to his brother's office for his immediate attention. It happened that Harold was in the studio at that particular minute, more interested in paints and pigments than in railroads. John guessed he was there and quickly went and gave him some very sound advice about the result of neglecting business. On another day Harold telephoned Phyllis to come to his office. She did so and Harold showed her an idea he had for a painting, using instead of canvas the blue-print map of the railroad extension. Suddenly John burst into the room, having need to consult his brother. He was disgusted to find how he was "frittering away" his time. They had a warm argument which ended in John offering to buy Harold's share of the business, which he did, giving a check for $10,000.

After John had gone out Phyllis looked at the map. She noticed one piece of ground which had not yet been acquired for the proposed railroad. She pointed out to Harold how they could do a neat little stroke of business, even though they were artists.

In as short a time as possible they had found the owner of this land and after some negotiations they purchased it, using John's check for the purpose. John's agents appeared directly afterward but, of course, could not buy it. They returned and told John and he decided to see what he could do personally to buy the land.

In the meantime Harold, Phyllis and her older sister, Agnes, had determined to stay on the place for a few days. When John arrived he met Agnes, whom he had never seen before and she finally concluded a bargain to sell the property for $50,000. He wrote a check for that amount and then he noticed his brother's name on the deed. Then his brother and Phyllis entered the room and John admitted as gracefully as he could that Phyllic, at least, had a head for business.

The decidedly up-to-date plot is intelligently and convincingly portrayed by Lubin's leading players.

HIGH PRAISE FOR AMERICAN FILMS.

The Wm. H. Swanson Company, of Denver, Colo., is high in its praise of American releases. This exchange handles both the Monday and Thursday Americans and finds them more than satisfactory from the exchange-man's standpoint. An interesting excerpt from one of the recent "reports on new releases" issued by this company, comments on "The Eastern Cowboy," an American picture of November 13th, in the following language:

"This picture is a very high-class comedy, with a very interesting life-story intermingled, illustrating the well-known fact that "the course of true love never runs smoothly." The opening scene of this picture at a lotus pond is very realistic and beautiful.

"The first scenes of this picture are taken in the Eastern end of our country and then swing to the orange groves of Southern California, giving us at the same time scenes of a typical Western ranch. This photoplay is without doubt one of the very best comedies ever told and an exceptional addition to any program. Beautiful scenery, excellent photography and splendid acting. Right up to the minute in every detail. The 'Flying A' people are to be congratulated on issuing so valuable a film."

Scene from "A Head for Business," by Lubin Mfg. Co.

A CHAMPION FEATURE.

"National Guardsmen and Regulars at Fort Riley, Kans." Champion's release of Monday, Nov. 27th, 1911, is the last and third reel of "The Fort Riley Manoeuvres," the first and second releases of which have already been exhibited with universal success wherever shown. This is an extensive subject divided into three distinct releases, and from the two scenes shown here, can be gathered a slight idea of the realism and interesting events contained therein.

SNAPPY ESSANAY COMEDIES COMING.

"Too Much Turkey" is a feature comedy attraction soon to be released by the Essanay Company, which exploits very interesting and unusually humorous sidelights on the Turko-Italian War (in this country). In this comedy concoction the Essanay recipe reads something like this: Two young lovers and a fortune teller, stir slowly, add a great idea in a Turkish "pasha" and three "wives." Let stand for five minutes, then drop in one Italian music teacher, stir again until frothy, then sift in an Italian organ grinder, his dancing girl and a monkey. Spices and flavor to suit. It is a real delicacy.

Scene from "Too Much Turkey" (Essanay).

The story of "Too Much Turkey" is of a young man and girl who are very much in love with each other. Trouble comes, however, when the girl, upon having her fortune told, learns she is to marry a Turkish pasha. She is very impressionable, this girl, and sees no way of outwitting destiny, so she hands back Jack his ring and goes home to await the arrival of the pasha.

Jack is in despair, but finally hits upon a plan to induce Mabel to change her mind. It is a daring scheme, but it turns Mabel against the idea of being one of the Pasha's wives and lands her in Jack's arms, which happen to be ready to receive her at the critical moment. It is in the working out of Jack's plan that the picture develops its strong features and there are many laughs that will be uncorked as the plan works out.

"THE HACK AND SCHMIDT BOUT."

This is some comedy for a 600-foot picture. Hack is skinny, Schmidt is fat. They sign articles for a great wrestling match. While Hack is faithfully training, Schmidt is enjoying life, and when the big match is about to come off, the skinny man is in the best trim, while Schmidt is sure he, himself, will win. In the match Schmidt wins the first fall, Hack the second. Schmidt is almost a winner in the third but Hack turns the trick in an unusually clever way. The picture will prove productive of many good laughs.

Scene from "Hack and Schmidt" (Essanay).

LICENSED INTERESTS FAVOR PICTURE REFORM.

The activity of the New York World in discussing the moving picture situation has brought out a statement from Mr. Frank J. Marion, of the Kalem Company, which may be taken as a fair expression of the attitude of the licensed picture interests towards the proposed picture ordinance for New York City. The zeal of the New York World in its crusade has led it to exaggerate some of Mr. Marion's remarks. For example: The New York World caused Mr. Marion to say that "conditions in New York are the worst in the country by an enormous per cent." Mr. Marion did not make the statement quite so strong as concerning picture theaters, his criticism being directed against the so-called vaudeville, which is presented in some houses where pictures are shown. What Mr. Marion did say was that there were better picture theaters in the West than there were in New York and that the farther West one went, even to Australia, the better the picture theaters seemed to be.

On the question of admitting children into theaters, Mr. Marion was asked the question by the New York World man if he would be in favor of admitting children if the pictures were properly censored. Mr. Marion expressed the opinion that the picture manufacturers and exhibitors were as anxious as the New York World, or any of the reform or civic societies, to improve the conditions in New York City, and cited as an evidence of the fact that the licensed manufacturers had decided unanimously to co-operate with the National Board of Censorship to an unlimited degree that objectionable pictures, if any, might be eliminated.

AN EPIDEMIC OF ELOPEMENTS.

Is there a keen competition between the film makers as to who can procure the most thrilling elopement, or is there an epidemic of these ill-timed romantic events? Whatever may be the cause, it is certain that an injurious number of these subjects is flooding the picture theaters at the present time. Youth loves the romantic, the dare spirit, and to shake off shackles of authority in a way injurious to their own welfare, and calling for proper restraint; to portray these events as successful so frequently is to court a response in actual life which will prove harmful. It is hoped that the epidemic will not only not spread but positively cease.

WINNERS OF THE PRIZE NAME CONTEST.

Some weeks ago there appeared in the Moving Picture World an ad. announcing that $50.00 in prizes would be awarded for the best name of a brand of Independent films to be placed upon the market. The prizes were to be distributed as follows: $25.00 to the first, $17.00 to the second, $10.00 to the third.

The three winners were selected from a batch of 1,863 letters, many of which contained splendid suggestions for names. The advertisers were the Republic Film Company, 145 W. 145th St., New York City, and the prizes have been awarded as follows:

First prize: F. C. Bockenheuser, Muskogee, Okla., $25.00.
Second prize: Mrs. H. C. Wilbur, The Register, New Haven, Conn., $15.00.
Third prize: Elton Mack, 46 Wellington St., Everett, Mass., $10.00.

The Moving Picture World wishes to acknowledge the receipt of the correspondence with the prize winners of the above mentioned contest and regrets that lack of space prevents its publication.

SUCCESS OF THE NATIONAL FILM BROKERS.

About two weeks ago the National Film Brokers opened their office at 186 No. LaSalle Street, Chicago. Mr. A. G. Spencer, under whose management the entire business was organized, states that business is already flourishing and future prospects very bright.

Mr. Spencer's ability is well known among the trade, having previously been very active in the service of the General, Standard and Anti-Trust companies. "I am endeavoring to serve the Independent trade with the best the market affords and I have the stock to do it," says Mr. Spencer.

This exchange will also handle a number of special releases.

ANNOUNCEMENT TO THE TRADE.

The Chicago Song Slide Exchange wishes to announce to the trade that there is no foundation whatever to the widespread rumor and belief that their concern is in any way identified or affiliated with certain large film interests.

"A thorough inspection of our books is invited at our offices or banks," said Mr. Honeck, the general manager, in an interview with a representative of this paper, "to absolutely confirm our denial and which will show that at no time have any checks, drafts or other mediums of exchange been drawn in favor of said film interests."

The Chicago Song Slide Exchange is still operated and owned by R. Chas. Honeck, one of the original founders, and will continue to serve those exhibitors who are in the market for a high grade slide service, regardless of where they may procure their film service, Licensed or Independent.

"THE LADY FROM THE SEA" (Thanhouser).

With Ibsen's "Lady from the Sea" enjoying a stage revival just now at the hands of the fashionable Drama Players, it is very fitting that a company of film players, the Thanhouser, should try their hand at the play. As the piece is a psychological study, with neat lines to carry its meaning, the players of the spoken word possessed the advantage over their silent contemporaries; still, to one who has seen both the stage and the film productions, it is a question as to just which is the more impressive.

The film revision scores a point on the play plot in its detailed depiction of how the man of the sea's fascination over Ellida (the Lady) came into being. The original play, unwisely to many, starts with Ellida as the wife of Dr. Wangel and devotes little to her earlier affair with the sea man when she conceived her admiration-fear of him.

Scene from "The Lady from the Sea" (Thanhouser).

The film story, on the other hand, goes right into the matter and shows how the sailor came to dominate the Lady, until finally he has her go through the impressive ceremony of joining the rings and casting them into the sea—she binds herself to wait his return from a voyage, when they will wed. Now, then, we have a fine understanding of the fear that is Elulida's when, happily married to Dr. Wangel, she receives the letter from the sailor saying he is coming back to claim her. And so the film takes a difficult story and, through a clever beginning, tells it well. The scene of the choosing between husband and sailor by Ellida is a powerful one, and some of the sea scapes are very effective.

BARROWS RETURNS FROM EUROPE.

Mr. G. L. Barrows, who presides over the photographic supply department of the Berlin Anilin Works, has returned from a visit to the Berlin factory where the "Agfa" products are made. The large sales of Agfa Metol and Agfa Hydrochinon to the moving picture laboratories proves that these developers are pre-eminently suitable for motion picture films. Mr. Barrows informs us that his firm is now supplying the leading film producers of Europe with Agfa positive and negative film, and that the film coating plant is running to full capacity. Until certain extensions which are now under way are completed they are not in a position to supply American trade, as the output is contracted for by French and Italian producers. One of the things that Mr. Barrows accomplished while abroad was to get his firm to ship Agfa Metol in 50-lb. kegs, thereby reducing the cost and adding to the convenience of the motion picture trade. It is also still supplied in 10-lb. cartons.

THE REX CROWN POSTER.

The invasion of Europe, the rise of Rex to royal supremacy, and the coronation of king of all American film, is a tale old and repeated. But it may come as news to many that the crown on the Rex poster was actually contributed by the Royalty of England. Indeed, it was this very design that heralded the procession at the Coronation. Royal lithographers reproduced it, and Rex has it! They had to give it to Rex—and we've got to. The posters were imported into this country in spite of the healthy duty—and it is our duty to again commend the enterprise of this galloping concern. Take one look at the cut reproduced above; then doff you chapeau—toupee—get us?—to REX! A supply of these posters has been shipped to all the Independent film exchanges for distribution. Ask your exchange for one.

GLEICHMAN BOOMING CADILLAC EXCHANGE.

Several years of experience in the exchange business, which is the priceless possession of Mr. Phillip Gleichman, manager of the Cadillac Film Company, of Detroit Mich., is beginning to count. Judicious buying has put the Cadillac in possession of a fine line of subjects and the enterprise and energy of the Cadillac manager is increasing the business of the exchange with great rapidity and in large proportions.

REPUBLIC GETS SAVANNAH AUTO RACES.

The newly formed Republic Film Company has jumped into the fight with a vim. Among their first announcements is that the exclusive rights to picture the International Automobile Road Race, to be held under the auspices of the Savannah Automobile Club, for the Grand Prize of the Automobile Club of America. This event will be run at Savannah on Thursday, Nov. 30, 1911, and will be the big automobile event of the year. Other events of this meet will be the Vanderbilt Cup contest on Nov. 27; the Tiedman Trophy Race and the Savannah Challenge Trophy Race, also on Nov. 27. Many of the greatest drivers in the world will contest and the Republic is sure to have a thrilling picture.

S. S. HUTCHINSON TO ERECT MANSION.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president, the American Film Mfg. Co., Chicago, has purchased of Edward Hines, the millionaire lumber magnate, an exceptionally fine piece of Chicago property on which he expects to erect a magnificent home. Chicago daily papers, commenting on the big deal, have called it one of the really big purchases of the year.

Mr. Hutchinson, it is said, will erect a residence costing in excess of $50,000, and which is expected to be one of the show places of the famous Chicago lake shore. The property has a West frontage and a ground area of 50 by 250 feet to the lake.

U. S. SUPREME COURT DEFINES STATUS OF PHOTOPLAY.

A decision has been handed down by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Harper & Brothers and others against the Kalem Company which will be of great importance to the manufacturers of motion pictures. The suit was started upon the allegation that the Kalem Company infringed upon the copyrights of Gen. Lew Wallace's famous book, "Ben Hur," by making a picture based upon the incidents related therein. Klaw & Erlanger, the theatrical producers, appeared as plaintiffs through their ownership of the dramatic rights of the book.

It was contended by the petitioners that the moving picture was in fact a dramatic production. The case has been in the various courts for two years and the decision now rendered sustains that contention, affirming the decision of the lower court which granted an injunction against the Kalem Company, prohibiting it from making or selling the picture in question, entitled "A Roman Spectacle."

By thus defining the status of the motion picture, the Supreme Court has performed a distinct service for the picture manufacturers of the country since it places their productions in the same class with other dramatic productions and entitles them to the same protection under the copyright laws.

Scenario writers will also find the decision of aid to them and those among them who are turning out original work will be benefitted. To those who have made a practice of adapting stories published in the current magazines, this decision is a warning to them to cease operations.

ORGANIZATION MOVEMENT IN NEW JERSEY.

An effort is being made by exhibitors of Trenton, N. J., to form a state organization of exhibitors to affiliate with the National League. Already the exhibitors of Trenton have formed an organization, which is called the Mercer County Exhibitors' Association and at present includes all exhibitors in the city of Trenton. The officers of this association are Charles Hildinger, president; Philip Papier, secretary; Michael Crowe, treasurer.

A committee of the Mercer County Exhibitors' Association, consisting of President Hildinger, Secretary Papier, William Lamont and Philip Blaustein, called at the offices of the Moving Picture World last week to enlist the assistance of the World in the work of organization. President Hildinger informs us that a committee has been appointed to visit the different cities in New Jersey for the purpose of urging exhibitors to organize and join the Mercer County Exhibitors' Association in the formation of a state organization. The work will be prosecuted actively by the Mercer County Committee and it is hoped that large results will soon be obtained.

Just at present the Trenton exhibitors are facing a rather strenuous crusade against moving pictures in that city and realize the necessity of organization and a strong representation of their interest before the city government.

The Archbishop of Lyons, France, has been one of the most persistent foes of the moving picture. He is urging his clergy to assist him in his warfare against what he considers the demoralizing influences of the cinematograph. It has even been suggested that a special corps of hissers be sent to alleged objectionable shows and the tearing down of unsuitable lithographic posters has also been commended. There are all kinds of people in this world.

INQUIRIES

Correspondents are advised that no attention will be paid inquiries which do not give the name and address of the writers. For the purpose of reply, initials or noms de plume may be used.

Inquiry as to the private affairs of photoplayers will not be answered. This includes the question as to whether or not they are married.

No inquiries of a general nature will hereafter be answered by mail and only in special cases when a stamped self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Many correspondents ask the same question and we have initiated this department to save our own time and yet help out our readers when we can.

W. F.—Miss Edith Storey played the name part in Melies' "Bessie's Ride." She is now with the Vitagraph company. Thanks for the bouquet.

A. D. M.—This is a rather belated answer to your inquiry, for the Western contingent of the Vitagraph company. They are to have headquarters in Los Angeles, and a company, fully equipped, even to a scenario editor; the same who planned some capital things last summer, is now at work.

IRA L. F.—Your question reached the department too late to be replied to before the release of "The Lost Freight Car," but it doesn't matter, as the releases are now divided between the Keith and Proctor houses, three going to each. There appears to be no established system of distribution between the two, and from a distance, it looks as though the booking clerk shook dice to see how the day's run goes. There used to be a fixed schedule, but that was in the days of Keith & Proctor, and before it became Keith and Proctor. (2) Harry Ogden Crane played the part of the railroad president.

ELEANOR.—It is all too true that William Garwood is no longer with the Thanhouser company. (2) Jack, in "Their Burglar," is Harry Benham.

MRS. P.—The question has been answered before, but it cannot too often be said that New York is the only important point in the country that has no house that does not muss up good pictures with cheap and nasty vaudeville. Some of the smaller theaters have first-runs, and good projection, but you'll have to hunt one in your own territory. We are waiting for a man from Jacksonville, Fla., to come up and teach the others that there are a lot of people who prefer pictures to fifteen-cent vaudeville.

E. C.—Harry T. Morey was the Tom Evans in Vitagraph's "The Price of Gold." (2) James Morrison played the Classmate in the same company's "Cherry Blossoms."

BILL.—There are two reasons why more trick pictures are not shown—because the manager thinks that the public does not want them, and (2nd), because the manufacturer agrees with him. It may interest you to know that George Melies "A Trip to the Moon" is enjoying new vogue in England this season, but trick work is difficult and photodrama is cheaper to produce and more steadily profitable.

N. A. T.—You phrase your question differently, but it amounts to the same inquiry as to how to get a position in a photoplay stock company. About the only answer is, that you prove your previous experience with a picture company or on the dramatic stage.

L. D. I.—The Vitagraph's "Auld Lang Syne" is both a regular and special release. The first part is the regular release for the day of issue, and the second is a special, issued at the same time.

F. G. H.—We know of no picture company issuing stock for sale, although many of the companies are stock companies. Shares in some of the English companies is quoted, but there is no flotation of stock over here, although the Kinemacolor is a stock corporation. No prices have been quoted and no stock is sold on the curb market.

N. E. D.—Both the Vitagraph and Edison had companies working in the field on Lake Champlain last summer.

R. T. E.—Be more definite, please. There have been three films titled "For Her Brother's Sake," released since last May. Imp, Vitagraph, and Kalem have all used the title. Which one do you mean? (2) Mr. Kirkwood is still with the Reliance company. (3) So is Henry Walthall.

D. C.—It is King Baggot and not Mr. King. Many of the Imp releases call him Mr. King, but that does not mean that King is his "real" name.

G. K.—Harry Myers is now with the Solax company. (2) Biograph players class with the unknown assailant of Billy Patterson, so far as names go. (3) Most companies have several leading men and women, although in theory, all photoplay companies are stock organizations and the player is supposed to take any part assigned.

A. H. F.—The "best way" to get your story back from a manufacturer is to send along a stamped envelope addressed to yourself. Don't look for an answer by return mail. Wait a month before thinking you'll not get your story back. Picture readers show a better average than magazine readers. (2) If you want to keep posted on the pictures produced there is no better way than to read the stories of the films in this paper. It is the only way you can be sure of getting them all, Licensed and Independent.

E. B. S.—Carlyle Blackwell has not joined the Vitagraph company, but he was once with the winged-V, and you probably saw an old film in which he appeared before going to the Kalem company. It should be old enough by now to be recognized as an old timer.

MISS J. P.—Guy Oliver is no longer with the Lubin company, and we have no record of his present connection. Howard Mitchell was with the company when last heard from.

JEAN.—Address the player in care of the company with which he is connected. Mark the letter "Personal" and it will reach him. We have nothing to do with the personal addresses of the players.

INTERESTED.—We suppose that the Majestic company will have photographs of Miss Pickford. Why not write and ask them about it, enclosing a stamped envelope for reply?

A. J.—Bette Harte was the Mabel in Selig's "The Coquette," and Tom Santschi the Hugh. (2) Mr. Santschi was also the fireman in "Through Fire and Smoke." (3) Paul Panzer was the servant in Pathe's "Crazy Dope."

D. C. V.—Miss Hazel Neason was formerly an Imp player before going to the Vitagraph. (2) Miss Pickford was originally a Biograph player.

V. T. M.—The Selig company operates from Los Angeles, but it has a studio in Chicago. None of the companies today confine their efforts to one city or section.

A SIDE-SPLITTING GREAT NORTHERN COMEDY.

Carl Alstrup, the Great Northern Film Company's new comedian, is rapidly becoming very popular. His irresistible and fascinating humor is largely responsible for this, it being of the contagious sort, and as a consequence he has the audience with him from the very start. Within the next two or three weeks he will appear in "Butttons and Hooks," in which feature comedy production he has the opportunity to show his very best. He is cleverly assisted by capable performers, who take delight in working with him. These comedy films will, no doubt, fill a long-felt want and meet with the hearty welcome of all exhibitors.

Scene from "Buttons and Hooks" (Great Northern).

In "Buttons and Hooks" Mr. Alstrup takes the part of Mr. Durand, a solicitor, who is preparing for a dinner party when he has trouble with his collar button. At the same time his wife is having trouble with her hooks. There are serious doings in consequence in which the Life Saving Corps eventually takes a hand before order is restored and the Durands reconciled.

HALLBERG AN EDISON JOBBER.

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," advises us that he has been appointed wholesale jobber of Edison Moving Picture Machines by the Thomas A. Edison Co., Inc., and is in position to make immediate shipments of latest model machines with improved large lamphouse, etc. He also reports the sale of two Model B Edison M. P. Machines with Hallberg Economizers to A. Schurman, Asheville, N. C., and one Edison Model B with Hallberg Economizer to C. E. Jourdan, Durham, N. C.

BENEFIT ENTERTAINMENT.

The moving picture operators of Brooklyn, N. Y., will give a package party and dance at Wisbauer's Columbia Hall, 292 Hamburg Avenue, corner of Ralph Street, Brooklyn, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 29. The proceeds will be donated to the widow and children of the late Frank A. Owens, a former member. It is hoped that there will be a large attendance. Gentlemen's ticket, 25c; ladies furnish package.

It has come to our notice, that there is a widespread rumor and belief among the Moving Picture trade, that we, the Chicago Song Slide Exchange, are identified and affiliated with certain large film interests.

This rumor no doubt is due to the fact that a majority of the film exchanges of Chicago have eliminated free slides and abandoned their slide departments. We wish to emphatically and rigidly deny any such connection. We also wish to emphasize the fact that since our exchange was organized, some five years ago, we have maintained an absolutely neutral position.

We know of a slide exchange that is affiliated with the Independents and another with the Licensed interests, hence the assumption that we were identified with these same film interests in a like manner. A thorough inspection of our books is invited at our headquarters and at our banks, and will absolutely confirm our denial, and will also show that at no time have any drafts, checks or other mediums of exchange been drawn in favor of said film interests.

This exchange is still operated and owned solely by R. Chas. Honeck, one of the original founders, and will continue to serve those exhibitors who are in the market for a high grade slide service, regardless of where they may procure their film. We ship your week's supply of slides in one consignment, and wire or mail orders are promptly honored.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

The Lyric Theater has been opened on West State Street, Jacksonville, Ill.

Three society girls were arrested at Des Moines, Iowa, it is reported, for throwing Japanese snuff upon a stage, and breaking up the performance at a moving picture show.

Charles Yates has called his new moving picture theater at Taylorville, Ill., the Jewel.

The Majestic Theater, at Rock Island, Ill., has quit the vaudeville field and under the management of Harry A. Sodini will give four reels of pictures and some vaudeville. The price has been dropped to 5 cents.

All the larger motion picture theaters in St. Paul, Minn., had ample exits and were in good condition, declared Assistant Fire Marshal A. M. Wallace, after an inspection. Some changes were recommended in the Star.

Gale Craig, who has sung at the Majestic Theater at Belvidere, Ill., for the last two years, has accepted a position as traveling salesman for the National Cash Register Company, of Dayton, Ohio, with headquarters at Bloomington, Ill.

The Bell Theater Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., will erect a one-story veneer moving picture theater, at 1415 Fourth Street, S. E. It will be 32 x 85, with concrete foundation. Cost, $2,700.

The Duvall building, at Lewistown, Ill., is said to have been leased by two young men from Peoria, Ill., who will conduct a moving picture theater.

The City Council, at Champaign, Ill., is said to have ordered the Orpheum Theater to be rebuilt with fireproof material. The building is of wood, having been designed originally for a roller skating rink.

James Fuggitt has sold his moving picture show in Georgetown, Ill., to a Mr. Baum, of Danville, Ill.

G. C. Hamilton has moved his moving picture show, at Assumption, Ill., to the Hight building, on Front Street.

The Dawn, at Streator, Ill., has introduced some vaudeville.

Earl Cotton, owner of the Variety Theater, at Allegan, Mich., has sold his interests to J. O. Ellenberger, of Sturgis, and has purchased the Star Theater from William McClelland.

The Sheldon, Ill., fire department has leased the electric theater of Waity & Sampson for five months and will conduct it in hope of liquidating the indebtedness on their building.

Michael Gerrib, who has been conducting an airdome at Westville, Ill., will erect a building in which to conduct a moving picture and vaudeville house.

George Myers, former manager of the Gem Theater at Clinton, Ill., has gone to San Francisco, where he will make his home.

Health authorities of Moline, Ill., are said to have announced a general inspection of all theaters in that city in order to determine their sanitary condition.

An ordinance providing for a board of five censors who are to serve without pay and whose duties will be to pass upon all pictures shown in Oklahoma City, Okla., has been introduced before the board of commissioners. A fine of not less than $25 and not more than $100 is provided. Members must be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by the commissioners.

The Crystal Theater, at Waterloo, Iowa, has taken over the Majestic, in that city. The Crystal will be a high class moving picture show, while the Majestic will be used exclusively for vaudeville.

The new Princess Theater, M. H. Harris and E. E. Nicholson, owners and managers, has been opened at Beardstown, Ill.

"Minneapolis, Minn., theaters are safer and ordinances stricter than those in any other city in the country." This statement was made by James G. Houghton, city building inspector, before the City Council. Ordinance amendments providing for the licensing of operators and control of lighting systems elsewhere than in the operating room, were suggested to the city officials.

Herbert Lamb, of Jerseyville, Ill., has disposed of his moving picture theater, at Roodhouse, Ill.

The Chicago Film Exchange, of Chicago, has certified to the Secretary of State that it has changed its name to the Exhibitors' Film Exchange.

The Chicago Hippodrome Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with capital stock of $2,500, to do a general amusement business. The incorporators are Anthony J. Schmidt, Edward J. McArdle and Francis P. Bradchulis.

The Moline Mail says there is a probability that an ordinance will be introduced into the City Council providing for a "censureship" which will prohibit not only immoral or "lewd" pictures, but such films as the "James Boys," which started the talk.

Miss Ethel Moore, of Burlington, Iowa, is the singer at the newly opened Princess Theater, in Beardstown, Ill.

St. Catharine's Guild of Emmanuel Episcopal Church, at Champaign, Ill., recently had charge of the Campus Theater, in that city, for two nights and called attention to the educational value that could be found in the regular program of films.

A special committee consisting of the fire marshal, the city electrician and the city building inspector, paid a visit to all the theaters in the city and the findings were given publicity in a full-page advertisement in the Sunday Minneapolis Journal.

The Ada Opera House Company has been incorporated at Ada, Okla., with a capital stock of $7,500. The incorporators are G. M. Ransey, C. G. Rives, B. N. Stall, H. A. Sprague and A. H. Constant, all of Ada.

Edward Haas, of Lincoln, Ill., has started a moving picture show at Elkhart, Ind.

The Parent-Teacher Association of the James Stephen Hogg school in Oak Cliff, Dallas, Tex., recently appointed a committee to negotiate with picture show managers for obtaining dates upon which teachers and parents could be shown educational films.

L. H. Goodspeed has begun the erection of a $15,000 vaudeville theater on West Elm Street, Urbana, Ill., which will be occupied by the Illinois Amusement Company, which is composed of Sidney Cohen and Patrick Hanrohan. The building, which will be of brick and concrete will have a seating capacity of 1,050. Four vaudeville acts and moving pictures will be given. The firm already has a moving picture show in Urbana.

Lester Habberkorn has resigned his position as singer at the Empress Theater, in Fairbury, Ill., to join the Hallowell Concert Company as a baritone soloist.

The greatest objection to closing the shows on Sunday came from the working men, who have little opportunity during the week to attend these shows. This was pointed out by the Peoria Star. "Moline is a city where the main industry is manufacturing agricultural implements and vehicles of all kinds. An army of men is employed and the only time they really have for amusement is on Sunday, when the shops are closed. Besides the price is so low that a man's whole family can go and not put them on a financial 'ragged edge' all the rest of the week. It seems that a movement is being made at Moline to close these shows on Sunday and thus deprive the laboring man of the only amusement he has in the entire week. But the workers there are so greatly in the majority that their judgment must be listened to and that verdict is they cannot afford to pay high prices for seats at a play and on Sundays only have they time to go. They and their families must have some kind of recreations and the only kind left is moving pictures and vaudeville."

The Savoy Theater, Springfield, Ill., announced during the State Fair that it changed pictures twice a day. Why?

NEW ENGLAND.

There seems to be considerable agitation in Massachusetts regarding the Kinemacolor moving picture machines. The law has just stepped in, and has issued an edict to the effect that Kinemacolor machines must not be driven by motor. Furthermore, the licenses issued to operate these special machines have been canceled by the State. The machines now in use at the Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., for the exhibition of the Kinemacolor pictures of the coronation in England, have been geared considerably higher than before, in order to obtain the same rate of speed as had been obtained with a motor-drive. The cause for this action is a Massachusetts law, which states that no moving picture machine shall be driven by motor. The State had issued four Kinemacolor licenses only before the cancellation had been made.

Saturday night, October 28, saw the final reel of pictures exhibited at the Central Theater, Cambridge, Mass. The F. W. Woolworth Company, running five and ten cent stores, have bought the land on which the Central Theater stands. Manager S. M. Moscow states that his company cannot be forced out of Cambridge so easily, and hints about a new location, on which a house seating 1,000 people is to be built. The Central is the oldest theater in Cambridge, and has done many a big day's business.

The Twentieth Century Amusement Company, of Portland, Me., has just been incorporated at Augusta, Me. The capital stock of this company is something extraordinary. $3,000,000 common, and $2,000,000 preferred stock, has been authorized.

The Star Theater, Dover, N. H., has added vaudeville to its regular program of pictures, and seems to be thriving under this policy.

Mr. J. J. Cahill, of the firm of McCue & Cahill, operating a string of vaudeville and picture theaters, was recently presented with a bouncing baby daughter. Mr. Cahill was the recipient of about 20 telegrams from New England picture managers, who wanted to congratulate Mr. Cahill, one of the most popular New England picture men. Mr. Cahill already had one daughter, and thought it a good joke when he received a telegram stating, "Will book your sister act for next week," signed by a well-known manager.

H. E. Streeter has decided to convert the First Baptist Church of Greenfield, Mass., into a theater, and will present vaudeville and pictures. New England has a large number of photoplay houses that were formerly places of worship, and, in almost every instance they are a big success. Mr. William Bradstreet, who operates a large number of photoplay theaters, has been unusually successful with the use of old churches, and was the one who originated the idea in New England.

Mr. Charles Rose, stage manager of the Idle Hour Theater, New Bedford, Mass., was tendered a surprise party in honor of his birthday. The affair was held at the house of Mr. and Mrs. H. J. McDonald, and lasted until the wee small hours. Manager Julius Sylvia, of the Idle Hour Theater, and many of the attachees of the theater were present, and felicitated Mr. Rose with gifts and congratulatory speeches.

November 16 was the date set for the first entertainment and general "blow-out" of the I. A. T. S. E., Local 186, of the moving picture operators' union, Springfield, Mass. A committee was appointed to complete the needed arrangements, and a successful time was had.

Manager George S. Wiley, of the Academy Theater, Fall River, Mass., has recovered from his recent illness, and is once more back at his post.

Mr. Frank Vine, who for a long while was one of the main lieutenants of the General Film Company's Boston office, has left, and is now with the W. E. Greene Film Exchange, Boston. Mr. Vine has many friends in his line, and will be a big boost for the Independent service in New England.

LOUISVILLE.

Four new shows are to be opened in the next three months between Second and Fourth Streets, on Market Street, one of the most important trade avenues in the city. Many prominent business men who have for years been connected with some other trade are dropping the livelihood of their younger days and entering amusement circles. In one case, especially, a company of well-known clothing men have sold their stock of outfittings, and are making arrangements to have the old building remodeled into an up-to-date picture show. The approximate cost of the change will be about $7,000.

Derr Brothers, formerly operators of a local ten-cent store, are remodeling a building on Market Street, between Third and Fourth Avenues, at an approximate cost of $5,000, to open in about two months. The new house will seat about 350 people and will be part of a well-known circuit.

Work on the new Hippodrome, which will open as an up-to-date picture show, is progressing rapidly and the management hopes to open the new amusement center to the public about November 20. The show is located on the southwest corner of Second and Market Street, and will have an entrance on both streets. The seating capacity will be about 450.

The same amusement company which will have charge of the Hippodrome, has recently opened the Olympic picture show to the public and so far it has been doing a very good business. The interior is one of the prettiest in the city and the exterior also presents a very pleasing appearance. E. B. Stern, who has charge of the show for the company, is also secretary and treasurer. They are on Market Street near Floyd.

This is the first show in the city which has installed a set of the new electric bells, which are advertised very widely by J. C. Deagan, of Chicago, Ill. Mr. Stern said that they in themselves afforded a big attraction to the crowd and that the effect when played to accompany a sad scene in a picture, was unusually effective. The set consists of sixteen bells, forming the two octaves from C to C. They are electrically connected to a keyboard, which is played just like a piano by some member of the orchestra. The idea is not only a novel one, but the music is also very pretty. After hearing the effect at the new show, Mr. Stern said that many of the older establishments are making arrangements for sets of the instruments.

Moses Bass has completed arrangements with the owners of a building on Market Street between Seventh and Eighth, to have the structure remodeled as a picture show, the cost of the alterations to be about $9,000. The name of the new theater will be the Star and will open for its first performance about November 25.

Jake Greenberg, who at present operates a well-known loan establishment on Market Street, and who owns the Victoria, a prominent picture show, will erect another theater near his present location and will put a competent manager in charge of it. The show will be one of a small capacity, but will show pictures which will come direct from one of the eastern cities.

Articles of incorporation were recently filed by the Preston Theater Company, with a capital stock of $5,100. The company intends to operate a moving picture show on Preston Street, near Camp, and will start work on the building in a short time. The approximate cost of the structure will be about $10,000 and the maximum indebtedness at any one time is fixed at $5,000. Among the principal incorporators and stockholders are E. J. Tobe, T. B. Doppleman, and Adam Eigelbach.

The Broadway Amusement Company, of which Fred J. Dolle is president, has recently taken over the management of the Globe Theater, which is situated on a prominent street in Portland, one of the outlying sections of Louisville. Mr. Dolle reports that the attendance at the theater has been very satisfactory and that every member of the company was well pleased with the present condition.

The Broadway Amusement Company is considering the installation of a new mirror screen for the production of daylight pictures, but as yet they have not arrived at any definite decision.

John P. Schere, formerly connected with the Alliance Film Company, of Davenport, Ohio, has recently taken charge of the local branch of the Globe Film Service Company. Mr. Schere conducted the business in 1910, when he was offered a position by a prominent Chicago company, and then turned the business over to another manager. About two months ago the Globe Company asked him to take charge of the branch again. Mr. Schere has but a few local customers, but most of his trade comes from the little towns out in the State, which are enterprising enough to support a picture show.

B. F. Burdie, of Versailles, Ky., advanced one step in his business a short time ago when he sold a moving picture tent outfit, which he had been operating in his home town, to a man in Georgia, and bought a popular moving picture show of M. R. Roberts, who had been operating the show for a number of years. Mr. Burdie took immediate possession and started the ball to rolling under the new management without intimation of any change whatever.

J. Taylor Day, of Hazel Green, Ky., recently bought a moving picture show outfit and electric piano and will establish an up-to-date show in that town.

Although boxing contests are legalized in the State of Tennessee, many of the picture show men of Memphis, in that State, are interested in the fact that the films of prizefights have been prohibited in picture shows of that city. The judge, who ruled them out, said that they were indecent unless shown before a stag gathering. Some of the amusement men who are interested in motion picture establishments are taking steps to have them shown after the regular show for the men of the audience only, when they will also be used as an added attraction. Whether the law will permit this is not known, but it is sincerely hoped for by many of the proprietors of the Memphis shows.

The Crystal Theater, often called the Brightest Spot in Knoxville, at Knoxville, Tenn., has one of the most attractive entrances of the many shows in that city. The front of the entire building is brightly illuminated, the lower part being painted white, with some very profuse decorations. A huge electric butterfly extends from the upper wall and when the myriad electric lights, which are on it are lighted, the effect is unusually striking. The interior of the house is also very handsomely decorated and well ventilated.

C. E. Hampson, of the Fall Cities Amusement Company, said that the new Novelty Theater, which they opened recently on Fourth Avenue, had opened up with a bigger rush than any other show which they had ever had anything to do with. They are experiencing a fine attendance every day, morning, noon and night.

Charles Sherr, manager of the Globe Film Exchange Company, of this city, said that at present he was doing almost three times the business which he had been doing two months ago. Mr. Sherr is now furnishing some of the most prominent shows of the city with pictures and getting new customers every day.

A short time ago, the Boston Amusement Company secured a permit to erect a new motion picture show at 1251 Preston Street. The building will be a one-story structure made of brick and will cost about $5,000. Work will be started immediately, and it is thought that it will be opened to the public patronage by the middle of November.

Two men were slightly burned and losses to the extent of five thousand dollars were sustained a few days ago when a fire broke out in the motion picture show at Nineteenth and Market Streets. The place is called the Lyric Theater, operated by P. C. Buckner.

G. D. CRAIN, JR.

PITTSBURG.

Mr. Chester A. Marlow has sold his theater, the Collonna, to Mr. Carl Kimling. The Collona is a neat little theater at Winebiddle and Penn Avenues. It has a seating capacity of 150 to the performance. The projection equipment consists of a one-pin Edison machine.

The quick-witted and heroic action of a lady piano player, Miss Maud Harvey, averted a serious panic at the Elite Theater, on 8th Street, Homestead. A confectionery store adjoining the theater caught fire, filling the theater with smoke. The piano player at once struck up a march and every one of the audience marched out in good order.

The Lyric Theater, on Fifth Avenue, McKeesport, with a seating capacity of 300 persons to the performance, is considered one of the neatest and best paying houses in that town. It is owned and managed by Apollo Bros. The projection is extremely good.

Mr. Ben Fields, who has been connected with a number of high class musical productions on the road, has sung illustrated songs for various photoplay houses of high-class character, both in this town and in Youngstown, and all that have employed him speak very highly about him. He is at present singing illustrated songs at the Family Theater, the only low-priced vaudeville and picture house in the downtown section.

The Nic Theater, at Arlington and Sterling Streets, has been dark for a couple of weeks to undergo alterations. This house prides itself in being the first Independent house in the city. Two new poster frames have been purchased from the Photoplay Adv. & Spec. Company for display purposes. It is expected to open in about a week.

Mr. Ted Boisdon is managing the Duquesne branch of the Photoplay Adv. & Spec. Company. He has just taken possession of his new residence, on Curtiss Avenue, Beechview.

Mr. Rothstein, the progressive manager for Harry Davis's Lyric Theater, has again come into the moving picture limelight, through his masterly work. The Lyric seems to be literally packed all through the week. The Lyric employs a piano player who knows how to play pictures.

The name of a new film exchange is the United Film & Supply Company, handling Independent films. This firm is well equipped to handle a considerable amount of business in this section. Mr. M. B. Teplitz, a young man of wide experience, is the general manager, and expects to make an active campaign for business in this territory. The United Film & Supply Company is located at 402 Ferry Street.

Mr. John M. Fitzgerald, a lecturer of repute in this neighborhood, has been lecturing on many subjects at the Cameraphone lately and is giving much satisfaction.

A new movement inaugurated by the Episcopalian Church will add a number of formerly benighted individuals to the army of Photoplay fans. The first of a series of exhibitions was begun recently at the Epiphany Auditorium, on Epiphany Street. The admission price is very reasonable and the money derived from the movement will be used by the priests and charitable organizations of the Epiphany parish in relief work among the poor.

The Consolidated Moving Picture Company, of this city, have purchased the Geyer Opera House, at Scottdale, Pa., for $15,000. They have also purchased the Lyric Theater, at Coraopolis, Star Family, at Tarentum, and the Arcade Building, at McKeesport. This building is 50 x 156 feet and will be shortly remodeled into an up-to-date photoplay palace.

Mr. P. V. Wiloughby has been appointed manager of the Cameraphone Theater, Fifth Avenue, at Mr Brennan's death. Grant L. Rigby, the always smiling head usher, has become assistant manager.

EDDIE WHEELER.

YOUNGSTOWN, O.

Youngstown, Ohio.—Taking the photoplay theaters of this town as a whole, one must admit that they are certainly as well-ordered and neat-looking theaters than can be found anywhere. One or two, that are, for a wonder, allowed by the inspectors to keep open, are a disgrace to their more respectable contemporaries. For two whole blocks along West Federal Street there are at present six theaters, with three more in contemplation. As it is there's enough brain-racking work for each house to keep away of not using pictures that have already been run by their opposition.

The first and foremost theater is the Rex, at 135 W. Federal Street. The Rex has just opened recently. The lobby is very artistically constructed a nddenotes not only good architecture, but also very good taste. The name Rex in large electric letters can be seen for several blocks. The floor is paved with small, square, white tiles, with a reproduction of a crown and the name Rex, paved in brown tile, at the very entrance to the lobby. The ticket office is built in white marble, as is the rest of the lobby. In fact, it may be said that marble of beautiful white seems to be here, there, and everywhere. This theater has a seating capacity of about 299 to the performance. There's an odd rule in Youngstown that all theaters seating more than exactly 299 will either have to shut down altogether or operate under a license of a large theater and pay an exhorbitant sum for the privilege. The owners are Messrs. David M. Robbins and Harry Warner. Mr. Harry Warner is well known in the moving picture circles throughout Pennsylvania, Ohio and West Virginia as at one time one of the owners of the erstwhile Duquesne Amusement & Supply Co., of Pittsburgh, Pa. The manager of the Rex is Mr. Morris Levenson, formerly the manager of the Duquesne Amusement & Supply Co. The projection at this theater is beyond criticism. About 500 globes are used to light this house. The floor slopes toward the curtain and the curtain itself is built about six feet from the floor, insuring a perfect view of the picture on the screen to everyone. An orchestra of six pieces is used at night. Latest illustrated songs are sung by a real good singer, Mrs. George Tougas.

The Orpheum Theater is located at 213 W. Federal Street, on the same side as the Rex. The seating capacity is 299 and has a standing room of about 200. The manager and proprietor is Mr. Pierre B. Atselas. Over 800 globes are used in the lighting of this theater. The projection at this theater is exceptionally good; operators, Mr. Albert Weiser and Mr. George Dophler. Two Edisons, latest model machines are used. First-run, licensed pictures constitute the program for a nickel.

The Star Theater is about a block away from the Orpheum. It is at 269 W. Federal Street This house is owned and managed by Wagner Bros. Three licensed films compose the program.

The Lyric Theater is two doors above the Star. Mr. Harry B. Walters is the manager. The seating capacity is about 225. An independent program is given for an admission of two cents on week days, and ten cents on Sundays, when an extra feature is exhibited. The Lyric uses about 350 lights. The projection was not so bad, although the films themselves were a little scratched and one was without a title.

The Dome Theater is located at 208 W. Federal Street, right across from the Orpheum. This theater easily heads the list in the category of Youngstown's beautiful photoplay palaces. It is considered one of the best-equipped little theaters in the state. Messrs. C. W. Deibel and Edward Renner are the proprietors. Mr. Deibel is the active manager. The lobby floor is paved in large German tile of a brick color, with the name of the Dome laid out in small, square, white tile at the very entrance. On each side of the lobby are two large windows, inside of which are displays of a perfectly-staged scene of green fields and rolling hills. Each window is a marvel of scenic reproduction in miniature and one cannot help admiring the clever work of its producer. The ticket box and the lobby are truly model. The Dome is equipped with a mirror screen and was the first in this section to install one. The projection corps consist of two chief and two assistant operators. Three different make machines are employed: Motiograph, Pathe and Powers. A good piano player, with drum effects, comprise the musical attraction. The seating capacity is about 299. First-run Licensed pictures are used.

The Bijou, at 4 W. Federal Street, was built at a cost of $14,000 and built to stay, for everything is constructed of substantial material. The lobby is built of whole slabs of perfectly white marble, and is paved with marble slabs. This theater is also equipped with a mirror screen. The seating capacity is about 299. Mr. Dan Robbins is the manager and proprietor. The operating booth is hidden by a sort of trellis work covered with green vine, small apertures being allowed for the light and lookout. The operating room itself is built of asbestos. The projection battery consists of two No. 6 Powers, which are ably manned by Messrs. Geo. Tougas and Wm. Daly. Two reels of Independent service are used from ten in the morning to ten at night. The Bijou has one of the best piano players. Miss Maud Royer; the singer is Miss Crossly. A Wurlitzer electric orchestra, one of the largest in Youngstown, is utilized before two o'clock.

On October 21 was organized the new I. A. T. S. E. Lodge, and that is the Youngstown local. Officers elected are Mr. Dale Rochell, of the Princes, president, and Mr. Joseph Stadman, of the Park Theater, secretary. The charter members are: Wm. Daly, of the Bijou; Frank Cook, of the Luxor; Al. Dion, of the Rex, and Geo. Tougas, also of the Bijou. Some of the transfer members are Tod. Kelty, of the Roma; Jim Thomas, of the Dome, and Al. Weiser and Geo. Dophler, of the Orpheum.

The Palace Theater is the first over the diamond on E. Federal Street. Messrs. Teuplin and Klopot are the owners. The palace is very well equipped with both machinery and other fixtures. The lobby is very attractive. The seating capacity is about 290. The floor is sloped toward the curtain and the seats are placed on an angle of about thirty degrees, thereby making it possible to empty the house quickly. The projection is very good. Two Motiographs of the latest type are used as projection equipment. A Wurlitzer Orchestrian and a three-piece orchestra furnish the musical attraction. Independent service. The Helios "Dante's Inferno" was featured for eight days to capacity business.

Mr. C. W. Deibel, of the Dome Theater, was recently the recipient of two very complimentary letters. One was from a prominent clergyman and the other from the president of the Youngstown Y. W. C. A. They were both worded to the effect that performances at the Dome were such that could be viewed by anyone, and praised the management for using such laudable discrimination in their program. The Dome is located next door to the largest store in the town.

The Park Theater, on Champion Street, uses high-class vaudeville attractions on week days, opening and closing with a reel of photoplay to an admission of ten, twenty, thirty and fifty cents. On Sundays six reel of the latest Independent releases are shown at an admission of ten, twenty and thirty cents. A good orchestra accompaniment, a local quartette and a good singer are also given on Sundays with the films. The Feiber & Shea Co. are the owners. Mr. L. B. Cool is the resident manager. The house has a seating capacity of 1,600 to the performance. Two shows are given daily and three on Sunday. A Standard machine in an asbestos operating room is used. Joe Stadman is the operator.

"Dante's Inferno" at the Palace Theater was lectured upon by Mr. Wm. B. Woodside, the special representative of the Tournament Film Co., of Toledo, Ohio, who control the state rights for the Helios make film. Mr. Woodside was with the film at the Mall Theater, of Cleveland, Ohio, where it had a steady run of three weeks.

The Roma Theater is a neat little photoplay house located in the very center of the foreign quarter in town. The owner-manager is an Italian and most of the patrons are of the same nationality. The seating capacity is 275. Both a piano player and an electric piano are used. Independent films are used. On Sunday, the 21st, beside featuring an "Italian's Sacrifice," Solax, moving pictures depicting some scenes of the Turco-Italo quarrel were shown to a delightful audience, who shrieked with joy when they saw the description printed in their own dear Italian. The projection at this theater compares favorably with the theaters downtown, but this is not so surprising, when one knows that the master hand of Tod Kelly is turning the handle.

The Columbus Theater, at 226 E. Federal Street, is another of the uptown photoplay houses that cater to the foreign element. This theater opened not very long ago. The manager-owner is Mr. Martin Longo. The seating capacity is 252. A couple of acts of vaudeville and three Licensed pictures for a nickel is the policy.

The Luna and the Napoli Theater are across the street from the Columbus. Mr. J. C. Welsh is the manager and owner of both. The Luna has a seating capacity of 275 seats and uses three reels of Independent films to a general admission of five cents. The Napoli seats 135, and gives a program of three reels. Licensed service and a couple of acts of vaudeville or a burlesque show to an admission of ten cents. After April 1 Mr. Welsh will open a new photoplay theater at 247 E. Federal Street.

The Grand Opera House on the Diamond is managed by Mr. T. K. Albough. The seating capacity is about 1,600 to the performance. Moving pictures are shown on Sundays only, to an admission of ten, twenty and thirty cents.

The Luxor is about a block up from the Palace Theater, and has a capacity of about 290 seats. The projection is good. Two No. 5 Powers machines are used at this theater. The owner is Mr. Chas. E. Smith. Frank Cook is the operator. Licensed films are exhibited.

The Princess, on Champion Street, is located across the street from the Park. The house can seat about 800 to the performance. The week-day show consist of two reels of Licensed pictures for opening and closing a couple acts of good vaudeville for ten and fifteen cents. The Sunday show consists of four reels of pictures and a song for five and ten cents. Mr. Chas. E. Smith is also the manager of this theater. Mr. Dale Rochell is the operator.

Mr. Fleet Young will remodel a storeroom into a modern photoplay house. It is located at 7 W. Federal Street.

Mr. Paul Fitch, formerly part owner of the Park and Princess Theaters, will remodel the storeroom on the corner of Phelps and W. Federal into an up-to-date photoplay palace.

The corner of Hazel and W. Federal will be the site of a new moving picture theater to be erected by a local stock corporation.

ST. LOUIS.

The Olive Theater, formerly the North Pole, at 14th Street and Franklin Avenue, was newly decorated and opened up under new management. High class motion pictures is the policy of the house. The admission is 5 cents.

The St. Louis Automobile show was successfully opened recently. The patrons are treated to a free moving picture show daily. Pictures are shown of all the recent auto races.

The Radium Screen Company, formerly of Denver, Colo., has removed its plant to St. Louis. The firm has leased a four-story building at 105 N. Main Street. The company manufactures moving picture screen and will also handle a general line of moving picture supplies. The lease is for 10 years.

The Vaudeville Theater Company has obtained a permit to build a two-story fireproof theater at 818 N. King's Highway, the cost of which will be about $30,000.

The Empire Theater, at 6200 Eastern Avenue, has been lately going in for special releases.

The Gotch-Hackenschmidt pictures have lately been shown at the Standard Theater, and have been the making of a very satisfactory show, full of interest and excitement.

Dante's Inferno has been the principal attraction in moving pictures in the city, being shown at the Shubert Theater.

Pathe's Weekly topical film has met with a cordial reception in St. Louis, and seems to be the kind of thing the people want.

The Aubert Airdome after a lucky season, had the performance transferred to the new Majestic Theater, where the usual vaudeville and high class moving picture entertainment is being conducted, under the management of Elmer H. Coudy.

The Mayslewood Theater, a new house, opened lately, with pictures and vaudeville.

Miss Lucile Mayer is singing the illustrated songs at the St. Charles Theater, and is doing satisfactorily.

The Lafayette Theater, at Jefferson and Lafayette Avenues, has opened for the season, with vaudeville and moving pictures.

O. S.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Because of an epidemic of diphtheria, accompanied by an abnormal death rate, the City Board of Health has ordered the proprietors of all moving picture theaters in the city to exclude children until further notice. The Moving Picture Managers' Association has assured the Health Board that the order will be carried out to the letter, although it means a large loss in revenue to the moving picture men.

Local Union labor organizations have sold 25,000 tickets for the film "A Martyr to His Cause," which is being shown at the Casino moving picture Theater, in West Washington Street, Indianapolis. A part of the proceeds go to the McNamara defense fund, and it is expected 25,000 more tickets will be sold. The film depicts the life, arrest and extradition of John J. McNamara, secretary of the International Bridge and Structural Ironworkers, now on trial at Los Angeles, Cal.

F. C. Overton, K. K. Stokes and H. C. Overton have organized the Halton-Powell Company, which has leased the Colonial Theater, in this city. The company has been incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $5,000.

Moving picture theaters will be operated at Hammond by the Hammond Orpheum Company, which has organized and incorporated in that city with an authorized capitalization of $18,000. The directors and stockholders of the company are C. E. Bray, L. F. Allradt and W. T. Hardy.

W. W. Willis, of Vincennes, is about to let the contract for a new moving picture theater in that city, which will be one of the finest in southern Indiana. It will be a one-story brick structure, steam heated, and will cost about $10,000. The theater will have a seating capacity of 800.

Councilman George B. Rubens, of this city, has purchased the Fox Theater property, at Aurora, Ill. This theater was formerly one of the buildings at the Pan American exposition, held in Buffalo, N. Y., a few years ago. It has a seating capacity of 1,500, showing moving pictures and light vaudeville.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.

The six thriving temples of the photoplay in this city are equally divided between the Independent faction and the Patents Company. One more house is now being made ready, but so far no announcement has been made as to which class of pictures will be shown. The Edison and the Empire are in the heart of the shopping district. The third house, the Lyric, while on a side street, does an excellent business.

Of the three Licensed houses, the Acme is the oldest, and has always enjoyed a large patronage, composed for the most part, of those who enjoy and appreciate good pictures properly shown. The theater, however, is illy adapted to the purpose for which it is being used, and is sadly in need of renovation, and, if it must be said, of sanitation. The Majestic is under the same management as the Acme, but rather poorly situated, although the theater is new, neat, well ventilated, and in fact fulfills most of the requirements of a first class house. The management has recently featured the fact that they are showing "the largest pictures in the world," although the increase in size of the projected image has been at the expense of clearness.

The remaining theater, the Sequoia, deserves special mention. Built for the purpose for which it is being used, nothing has been omitted needed to make it sanitary, comfortable, pleasing to the eye, and in every way fitted for a first class motion picture house.

This beautiful little theater seats six hundred, and does so comfortably, as space has not been sacrificed in order to gain a few extra nickles. The entire house is cleaned daily by a vacuum process, and it is kept warm in winter, and cool in summer, by a perfect system of steam heating and fans. Intelligent supervision of the music rendered by its superb orchestrion, makes it possible to adapt the music to the picture in the case of nearly every film shown. Whenever possible, sound effects are introduced in a manner to heighten the effect of the pictures, and, in brief, the Sequoia comes pretty near to being the "real thing" in motion picture houses.

F. H. KIEFER.

MONTREAL.

The Lyric Hall reopened with Mr. F. Wanaker in charge; the old staff has been retained. I may mention that I happened to pass the Lyric and was surprised to see the fine class of people that was entering. The Lyric is the farthest West on St. Catherine Street, and is doing good business.

The Moulin Rouge (Red Mill), is now showing an all Independent service, and the management is satisfied with the change made. "Standing room," is the slogan from 7 p. m. until "good night."

The new moving picture theater called The Maple Leaf, situated in the heart of the theatrical district, corner of Main and St. Catherine Streets. The theater is under the charge of Mr. George Thomas, who has had long experience in the business.

The Nationoscope Theater, which has been enlarged to a seating capacity of 1,500, reports full houses each evening. A special French stock company has been engaged in addition to the photoplay.

The Gaiety Theater has given up the Licensed pictures and has been running Independent. The best drawing card is the very large cotton sign in front of the lobby. Simple, plain and very attractive. Mr. Renaud knows lots about advertising and gets the dimes.

Mr. Tom Lyons, formerly of Montreal, one of the boys, now in Columbus, Ohio, with the Exhibit Theater, was here for a week end.

The Lune Russe is now managed by Mr. Surette, for many years in the moving picture business. He is making a success with this theater.

DAVIS LIVINSON.

BOSTON.

Annabelle Davidson, who holds an important position with the City Theater, Brocton, Mass., has returned to that city. The death of Miss Davidson's mother forced her to leave the theater for a while.

Marcus Loew's new South End Theater, Boston, is about to initiate a baby show, as a boost to the box office. Manager Hamilton will himself judge the babies, and award the prizes. A "baby show" has never been tried by any of the Boston houses.

The Park City Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., has increased its size materially, and finds that the extra seating capacity is needed. A good bill of pictures is always to be found at the house, which is one of the best in Bridgeport.

The Colonial Theater, Lawrence, Mass., opened its regular winter season to big returns. As usual, Manager John F. Adams will present the best in vaudeville and pictures.

The new Eagle Theater, Fall River, Mass., is ready for its opening, and will show protoplays.

Mr. J. C. Patrick, manager of Austin & Stone's Boston theater, is laid up with sickness, and Mr. Stone has been managing his house until Manager Patrick has recovered.

The Union Hall Theater, Gloucester, Mass., played to big returns with "Dante's Inferno." Messrs. Lothrop & Tolman were pleased with the reels, and may play them a return date.

The Park Theater, Taunton, Mass., also used the divine comedy, "Dante's Inferno," as a big feature and found it a winner. Manager Kearns was shrewd in showing these pictures in the Park, which is a "legitimate" theater, playing road attractions.

After thoroughly renovating the Music Hall, Taunton, Mass., Mr. White, or Tom, as he is often called, leased his house to Mr. T. D. Soriero. Mr. Soriero has installed as manager, Mr. Pastelli, who will run a program of pictures, with no vaudeville.

The Park Theater, Taunton, Mass., is soon to undergo improvements and renovations.

Mr. W. C. Leighton is ready to start on his new photoplay theater, Bridgeport, Conn., located on Jane Street. The house has a central position, and should make a success.

HENRY.

TEMPLE, TEX.

Messrs. Willis and Thompson have leased the Airdome Theater from Capt. Jas. Rudd.

The Dalton Choir Company, presenting "The Dalton Raid," a film, had their show booked at the Airdome recently. Excellent business prevailed.

"The James Boys in Missouri," booked at the Colonial, were transferred to the Airdome, and brought a good response.

Majestic Theater No. 2 recently changed from Licensed to Independent pictures. Vaudeville is also run in connection with pictures. Wm. F. Lucas is the manager.

The Colonial is running Licensed pictures, through service of the General Film Company.

The Opera House is now under the able management of Mr. Chas. H. Black.

Majestic Theater No. 1, under the management of Wm. F. Lucas, is doing a good business. The house has a seating capacity of 400, and the program consists of three reels of Licensed films, illustrated and spot songs.

The Colonial is featuring "Pathe's Weekly."

R. C. RODGERS.

MELIES.

A WESTERN GIRL (Dec. 7).—Dick, an Easterner, comes West to try his luck at mining. No sooner does he arrive than Hartley, the local gambler and all-around villain, commences to make sport at his expense. Dick endeavors to bear it patiently, but a clash is inevitable, until the arrival at the village store of Mary Brown, one whom all held in respect, excepting Hartley. The latter grabs the girl and endeavors to steal a kiss, which she struggles to resent, aided by Dick. In the fight Dick is knocked unconscious. The men become frightened and slink off.

Mary is favorably impressed with the stranger and aids him back to conciousness. Dick is also impressed and accompanies her home. Mr. Brown, hearing of Dick's bravery, is only too pleased to give him pointers on mining, and every day they start out together to prospect for the precious metal.

Scene from "A Western Girl" (Melies).

A month passes with no results, and Dick is downhearted. Were it not for the encouragement of Mary he would quit. On one of these days he strikes the vein—discovers a great mine, but when he has the dust in his hand, Hartley and his men appear, overpower and bind him and hasten to register the claim for themselves. Meanwhile, Mary at home has discovered a photo in Dick's coat of a woman and two children, with an inscription on the back that leads her to believe Dick is married. With a broken heart she seeks him at his work, only to discover Hartley's dastardly trick.

For the love she bore Dick, she herself mounted a horse and rode like mad for the claim office, just in time to foil Hartley. Dick, of course, is pleased, and with the prospect of wealth, expresses his love. Mary produces the picture, which, however, he is able to show is that of his sister, after which all Mary's objections are for naught.

ESSANAY.

A FOOTBALL HERO (Nov. 28).—Billy Gordon and George Manning are class-mates at Livingston University. George is a quarterback on the college eleven, while Billy is a substitute. Both boys are in love with Gladys Mayhew, a student. Gladys' sorority is to give a dance and both boys are invited. George finds the invitations, and destroying Billy's, shows the invitation to the coach, but promises faithfully not to go, as it is the eve of the big game. However, he breaks his promise, goes to the dance and returns in the wee small hours. The next day he is worn out and during the game, like the coward he is, lays down. Billy is put in his place. The score stands 0-0, with three minutes to play. Billy catches Gladys' eye and knows he must win. A drop kick from Billy makes the necessary score and the sub-quarterback is hailed the hero of the day.

LITTLE RIDING HOOD (Nov. 30).—Little Riding Hood leaves home with a basket of goodies for grandmother, who lives on the other side of the big woods. On her way she meets the wolf, who proposes a race between them to grandmother's hut. The wolf arrives first, of course, and after chucking grandmother under the bed, gets into the old lady's nightclothes and waits for Little Red Riding Hood. He is about to eat the little girl when the woodmen arrive and slay him.

'TWAS EVER THUS (Nov. 30).—It is Mazie's birthday. Jimmie, her beau, goes to the florist and asks the proprietor to send the lady twenty American beauties, to which he attached a card, reading: "A beautiful rose for each beautiful year." The florist, knowing that Jimmie is a good customer, adds ten additional roses gratis. What happened to Jimmy? Guess.

THE QUINCEVILLE RAFFLE (Dec. 1).—Ezra Higgins, editor of the Quinceville Bugle, needs a wife and also money. He gets a great idea. An advertisement, addresed to the unmarried ladies of the county, stating that he will hold a grand raffle, with himself as the prize, is inserted in the Bugle. Through an error on the part of the stupid boy clerk, Ezra finds that he has been won by nearly all of the aspirants for his hand. Ezra tries to make his getaway, but is chased by the women and at last captured.

THE MOUNTAIN LAW (Dec. 2).—Jim Barker, an old Kentucky moonshiner, has two children, a young girl and boy. Janey, the girl, is in love with Dave Williams, who is working with her father at the still, but she refuses to marry him until he gives up moonshining. Dave agrees to do so and endeavors to persuade young Jim, Janey's brother, to do likewise. Jimmie pleads to his father, and after receiving a thrashing from the old man, takes revenge in informing the revenue officers of the location of the still. Jimmie then goes to Dave's cabin, confesses, and is hidden in the garret of the cabin, when Barker and the other moonshiners arrive in search for him. Dave himself is about to be lynched when Jimmie comes dawn from his hiding place and gives himself up. The lynching of the boy is avoided by the girl, who has learned of her lover and brother's peril and who brings the revenue men in time to save their lives.

ECLIPSE.

THE MYSTERIOUS STRANGER (Nov. 29).—Thomas, a miserly old farmer, is a hard master to his dependents. He even refuses to allow his son George to marry the girl of his choice because her father is a poor man.

A stranger who overhears the controversy between Thomas and his son, advises him to relent, and on being roughly treated, predicts that dire misfortune will befall the farmer.

George soon after marries happily, and later the prophecy regarding the father comes true; part of his house is destroyed by fire, his savings are stolen and his daughter is struck by lightning. After which the stranger reveals himself as the "friend of all men."

SALT INDUSTRY IN SICILY (Nov. 29).—One of the largest industries in Sicily is the manufacture of salt, of which over 170,000 tons are produced annually. The picture shows clearly the various steps by which the salt is reclaimed from the seawater. The salt marshes are first drained and the water allowed to evaporate. Then the salt is gathered and worked, after which it is heaped in piles and covered with tile to keep it dry while draining. Finally it is placed in sacks for exportation.

GAUMONT.

A BUSY CUPID (Nov. 28).—Hodges, the florist, is sorely vexed by his vain efforts to cultivate a blue rose, and therefore does not look kindly upon the love of his pretty daughter, Bernice, for a young knife grinder.

Seeing the plight of the unhappy pair, Cupid interferes. After aiding them in every way, he presents the young lover with his enchanted quiver, which has the power to turn the roses blue. Of course, with this prize, the old florist is easily bribed to give his consent.

REVIEW OF THE AUSTRIAN ARMY BY THE GRAND DUKE FRANCIS FERDINAND (Nov. 28).—The film gives a splendid view of the cavalry, infantry and artillery as they march by.

THE PROMOTER (Dec. 2).—John Gerard, a broken-down stock-broker, is easily induced by friends to join them in promoting a get-rich-quick scheme. Money is needed, and Gerard persuades his old father and his friends to invest their hard earned savings in the project.

The reckless promoters spend the money in riotous living, until forced to seek safety from the police.

Gerard and his wife try to escape to America. But on shipboard he reads a Marconigram that his father has committed suicide. Being overcome by the news, he discloses his identity and is captured.

SELIG.

THE RIGHT NAME BUT THE WRONG MAN (Nov. 27).—Jack Hargrave calls on his sweetheart, and as he takes from his pocket his engagement present, a letter falls to the floor unnoticed by him. Marion picks it up and insists upon reading it.

That evening, when returning home, Jack mistakes a special officer for a burglar, and in the ensuing fight, Jack is arrested and taken to the station, where the letter, which contains a very queer proposition, is found, considered as incriminating evidence, and he is ordered into custody, to await his trial. During that period, he thinks of Marion, and she is summoned to testify, but she gives such testimony that Jack is sentenced to prison.

Six months pass, and Jack has gained his liberty. He meets Marion and her fiancé, Lieut. Jones, U. S. A., on the street. She refuses to speak to him, and despondent, he enlists in the army. At the post, he is recognized by Jones, who subjects him to all kinds of indignities.

One day, Marion and her mother arrive at the barracks for a visit, and the next day, Jones and Marion go for a picnic, taking Jack along in the capacity of a servant. Jack sees Indians and rushes back to warn the other two of their danger. Jones' yellow streak then comes to the surface, and he is about to desert Marion, but for Jack, who forces him to assist her. They ride furiously away, followed by the Indians. Arriving at the barracks, the colonel of the regiment, is told of Lieut. Jones' cowardice, and in his rage, strips the epaulets from him and orders him to his quarters. He then calls Jack and congratulates him.

Marion recognizes him and asks his forgiveness, but love and trust once lost, never returns, and Jack—giving a formal salute, goes his own way, leaving Marion to go hers.

THE TELLTALE KNIFE (Nov. 28).—Mabel Madden, owner of the Prospect Saloon and Gambling House, is in love with Tom Mason and Will Wright, the sheriff. One day Tom gives Mabel a bracelet and Mabel reciprocates the following day by giving Tom a penknife. A short while after a line rider comes upon Tom and his partner, Tip, branding cattle. In his hurry to escape, Tom forgets his knife, which is picked up by the line traveler and later handed to the sheriff, to be restored to its rightful owner.

In his travels, Will asks Mabel if she recognizes the knife. She says she gave it to Tom a few days ago. As the cattle brander and his partner happen to be at the saloon, Will covers them with his gun.

Through some cleverness on the part of Tom and Tip, they manage to get the "drop" on the sheriff, thereby effecting their escape. The sheriff organizes a posse and gives chase over hills, broken country roads and through rivers. Finally Tom and Tip are cornered on the top of a steep hill and rather than surrender, jump over. Will is married to Mabel and accepts a position as her employee as her bartender for life.

AN EVIL POWER (Nov. 30).—Soon after his engagement to Margaret Kingdon, Chas. Burnham is called to Honolulu on account of the illness of his mother. While he is away, Margaret and some friends visit a medium, Antonio Gueseppi, who, with his power, persuades her to return the next day. Doing so, she falls completely under his influence and is told, among other things, that Burnham is false. He then persuades her to discharge her maid, Marie, and take one he provides for her, his accomplice, Celeste. But she acts so strangely, that her father becomes worried and cables Burnham to return as soon as he possibly can.

So Burnham boards the next available vessel, wires of his speedy return and proceeds to wait impatiently for the ship to cross the ocean.

His message, though, is never delivered, for Celeste intercepts it, carries it to Guiseppi and receives his orders to bring Margaret to him.

Burnham goes to see Mr. Kingdon immediately upon his return, and while he is there, Kingdon receives a telephone message from Marie telling him that something is wrong, that she has seen Margaret and her new maid go into a strange house down in town, and thought it best to inform Kingdon.

A taxicab is ordered immediately, and the two men go to where Marie has promised to meet them. They rush up the stairs and arrive in the medium's parlors just in time to stop the farcial wedding of Guiseppi and Margaret. In his rage, Burnham nearly chokes the hypnotist to death, and compels him to release Margaret from the spell he has cast over her.

When, a few days later, Margaret has fully recovered from her terrible experience, she renews her engagement to Burnham.

IN JAPAN (Dec. 1).—In this refreshing travel picture we are shown Japanese women driving huge piles. Next we view the Sacred Sword Dance of Japan, as executed by expert dancers in Tokio. The next scene shows us the female students of the Shiba Middle school, in their exciting and skillful fencing bouts. Jui Jitsu, the world famous Japanese system of wrestling, is next shown. A scene or two, showing the unique and exciting sport of "Tog Swinging," as practiced by the students of the Tokio Woman's University, is followed by many others of equal interest.

LUBIN.

THE MAN IN THE TAXI (Nov. 27).—When John Mason and Betty Brown announced to their respective parents that they were to be married, there was a "Never!" as their answers. So John and Betty decided to elope.

As John was sitting half asleep in a taxicab, outside of the hotel where he was to meet his friend Bob (who was standing in the lobby), a thief snatched a jewel bag from a lady standing there. The burglar ran to John's taxicab and ordered the chauffeur to drive off rapidly. While in the taxicab, the burglar emptied the contents of the bag into John's pocket, and jumped out as the machine was running at a good clip. He was injured and taken to a hospital.

In the meantime John was taken captive and placed in jail. Betty being disappointed at the non-arrival of her lover, went to her home, only to find that she had locked herself out. So she had to sleep all night outside. In the morning she saw that John Mason was in a hospital and another John Mason was arrested. She called up Bob and together they went to the hospital, only to find he is not the John Mason they want. Then they went to the police station, where everything was straightened out, and John and Betty were subsequently married.

AN ACTOR IN A NEW ROLE (Nov. 29).—Ralph Dolten was an actor. In spite of the fact that he believed he could give pointers to Henry Irving and John Drew, the public proved so unappreciative of the gifts of himself and other members of the company that the company simply busted.

The great actor now found it desirable to get back to New York. On account of the custom of railroads of always demanding fare in advance, he found this a serious problem. So he decided to earn the fare by selling books. Book agents are not everywhere received with enthusiasm, as he soon discovered.

Then he turned his theatrical gifts to good use. Being turned out of an office once, he quickly disguised himself as an old man and acting the part—as he only could—he was again admitted, when he immediately threw off his disguise and began showing his books. Out again he was thrown. Then he cheerfully disguised as a postman with the same result. But before he could enter again under another disguise, the police had been notified and he found it necessary to flee. In the course of his flight he disguised as an Irish workman and avoided his pursuers. Then he gained entrance again to his victim's office. By this time the man was so much wrought up that it was necessary to send for a physician. When the man of medicine arrived, he suddenly threw off his disguise and triumphantly appeared once more as Ralph, the actor-book-agent, and then Ralph took an order for a full set with the finest bindings.

THE CRAB INDUSTRY (Nov. 29).—A particularly good educational film, picturing this industry from the time the crabs are caught until they are all snugly packed in cans ready to be shipped. It shows the fishermen's boats leaving the shore and the men baiting their lines and casting them into the water; the drawing in of the lines; the final return of the well-filled boats; the shoveling of the crabs into large trucks and thence into huge vats, where they are cooked; the separating of the meat from the shells; the canning and labeling of the tins; the packing of the clean shells into boxes all ready for shipment.

A NICOTINE CONSPIRACY (Nov. 30).—Samuel Roberts, a millionaire, was ordered by his physician, Dr. Richard Blake, to cease smoking so many cigars a day. A short while after, Mr. Roberts found Dr. Blake and his daughter, Hilda (who were secretly engaged), hugging one another. This made Roberts angry and he gave the doctor a check for his services and told him never to come again. Then Roberts and Hilda went on a hunting trip. Prior to their going, Hilda apprised her fiancé of her father's intentions.

As Mr. Roberts took a goodly quantity of cigars with him, Hilda determined to take them away from him. The first day she took two boxes, and continued until there was none left. Roberts could not get back to civilization as his automobile was out of order.

Hilda showed Dr. Blake (who had just arrived), where the cigars were hidden. Dr. Blake began smoking; Roberts smelled the smoke and traced it to where Dr. Blake was smoking. Roberts was "croaking" for a smoke and at the psychological moment Blake handed him a "but."

Did the doctor and Hilda get married? Answer: They did.

WESTERN CHIVALRY (Dec. 2).—Henry Slocum, his daughter Ethel, and her fiancé, were making a tour of the West, when they came upon the ranch of their old friend John Barton. All the Cowboys tried to win Ethel from the dude Harold, but Burt Barton was the most fortunate.

After a few weeks' stay they decided to leave and while on the way home their machine was held up by Mr. Barton's cowboys, masquerading as Indians. This was a preconcerted move on Burt's part, to further show his fitness as the right man for Ethel. Harold was the first man to seek shelter which he found under the machine. Just as the party was being robbed, a solitary horseman appeared and put the redskins to flight. It was no other than Burt. The party then went back to Mr. Barton's ranch, where Mr. Slocum said that Ethel could marry Burt. Harold was denounced for his cowardice.

KALEM.

THE AMERICAN INSURRECTO (Nov. 27).—Dick Lennard, a young American soldier of fortune, fighting for Mexican freedom, is pursued by Federal soldiers. Wounded and in sore straits, and his horse finally giving out, Lennard almost gives up hope. While sorely pressed and practically exhausted, he is discovered by Mona, an Indian girl. Believing that the American would be better treated by the white people than by her own tribe, she helps Lennard to the nearby ranch of Don Svivestro, a Federal sympathizer. Dick is recognized by the don's daughter from descriptions sent broad-cast. She tells her father he is a spy and a messenger is sent after the soldiers. Mona, learning of the white man's dangerous plight, goes to the chief of her tribe, who has long been a suitor for her hand, and gives him her promise to marry him if he will save the paleface. The rescue is effected and Mona fulfills her promise.

AMONG THE IRISH FISHER FOLK (Nov. 29).—This very interesting Irish picture shows the Howth quays at low tide. We see the fishing fleet tied up at the docks and on one of the boats a fisherman mending the sail. The departure of the fleet for the fishing grounds is a very pretty sight. Arriving twenty miles off the coast we see them setting their nets. Next morning the hardy fisherlads haul in their nets and we find they have made a big catch. Returning to port the nets are cleaned and stored away. On the dock the fish are sold at auction by samples. The cargo is then unloaded, and the mackerel counted. We next have an interesting view of a number of healthy looking Irish girls winding paper around their fingers to prevent cuts preparatory to cleaning the fish. After the cleaning operation the mackerel is washed, boxed and iced. Our final view is the remarkable character face of an old time deep sea sailor.

THE FRANCISCAN FRIARS OF KILLARNEY, IRELAND (Nov. 29).—Giving benediction on the feast of Corpus Christi. This is a most interesting and impressive outdoor ceremonial.

HOW BETTY CAPTURED THE OUTLAW (Dec. 1).—Jim West, a young lawyer, tired of city life and his gay companions, decides to visit his uncle in the West. While he is on the train speeding to visit his Uncle John Reed, the sheriff calls at Reed's ranch and tells him that a noted outlaw, Slim Jim Ward, is at large and that there is a reward of $500 offered for his capture. On West's arrival at Burbank, California, he decides to change his suit of clothes for a cowboy outfit. After the change of clothing, he starts out for his uncle's ranch. As he approaches the house, he sees a pretty girl drawing water at the well. Gallantly he offers to help in the operation. Betty, the aforesaid pretty girl, immediately sizes up Jim West as the desperate outlaw, Slim Jim. After the water is drawn, West insists on carrying it to the house. Reaching the sitting-room, he makes himself at home, much to Betty's annoyance, but she determines to take advantage of his apparent freshness and resolves to capture the desperate outlaw. As the supposed desperate outlaw seems so anxious to make himself useful, Betty sends him to the cellar for potatoes. As he starts down the ladder, Betty quickly drops the cover over the cellar entrance, and jumping on it, piles the furniture about her, and sends her little brother Billy off to get the sheriff. Betty's attempt to hold West a prisoner and his efforts to escape are laughable in the extreme. On the arrival of Betty's father and mother, who come up at the same time with the sheriff and his posse, the cover of the cellar hole is lifted and they all stand ready to capture, dead or alive, the supposed outlaw, Slim Jim. On the sheriff's command for West to come out, John Reed is surprised to recognize his city nephew. The sheriff in disgust, says, "This is not Slim Jim." Turning to Betty, West asks her if this is not a pretty way to treat her cousin.

A GLIMPSE INTO THE YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK (Dec. 1).—Showing some of the novelties in America's great National Reservation.

BIOGRAPH.

SUNSHINE THROUGH THE DARK (Nov. 27).—The poor little housemaid, with her tired hands incessantly toiling, despairs of ever experiencing a kindness, for although she reproves herself for complaining, having what she deems a good job, still her life is that of one driven like a beast of burden. Even the spoiled child of the household orders her about and treats her with absolute disdain. The child wears a bright ribbon sash, which, to the poor eyes of the slavey is overwhelmingly beautiful; so much so that she is tempted to steal it. She has it in her possession but a few minutes, when she reproaches herself and starts to return it. But, meanwhile, her act has been discovered and she is denounced as a thief. This is done, in the presence of her sweetheart, the stable boy, who at first turns from her, but finally realizing the act was one of impulsiveness, forgives her and takes her to his heart.

A WOMAN SCORNED (Nov. 30).—The little sweetheart of a sneak thief finds herself neglected for another, vows to get even, and she gets a chance she little hoped for. A doctor, living in the suburbs, arrives at the bank too late to make the deposit of a large amount of money, so consequently is obliged to keep it in his desk at home overnight. The crook and his companion learn of this and determine to get the money. Going to a telephone, they call the doctor urgently to their rooms, one of them feigning illness. He arrives, and taken unawares, they easily bind him, hands and feet, leaving him on the bed, while they rush off to rob his home. The girl enters shortly after their departure, and to get even with the man who spurned her, releases the doctor, who, after an exciting experience, manages to reach his house in time to save his wife and child from the attack of the crooks, who are taken into custody by the police, who followed.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 47, 1911 (Nov. 20).—Genoa, Italy.—The reservists are called. The troops embark on the steamer "Bologna" for their destination in Tripoli.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—President Taft and Governor Tener of Pennsylvania, witness the National Mine Safety Demonstration. An explosion of coal dust in a steel tube, representing the tunnel of a mine, gives an opportunity for the rescue crew, maintained by the Government Bureau of Mines, to show the efficiency of their apparatus.

Paris, France.—In the race known as the Little Tour of France, for French professional cyclists, Brocco arrives first.

Berlin, Germany.—The 4th regiment of the Grenadier Guards of Queen Augusta celebrates, by a parade before her monument, the 100th anniversary of the late Queen's birth.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Big automobile races are held on the Santa Monica Motordrome.

London, England.—An immense crowd witnesses the arrival of Jack Johnson and Bombardier Wells, whose proposed pugilistic encounter has given rise to much discussion.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—President Taft speaks aboard, and Mrs. Alice Roosevelt-Longworth christens, the replica of the "New Orleans," the first steamboat to ply between Pittsburgh and New Orleans, on the occasion of the Steamboat Centennial Celebration—the "New Orleans" leaves for the "Crescent City," cheered by the whistles of the other river craft.

Milan, Italy.—A big demonstration against the war necessitates the use of cavalry to disperse the mob.

Paris, France.—Late fall styles in afternoon gowns.

And many others.

INCENDIARY INDIANS (Nov. 29).—A band of settlers traveling across the plains are attacked by Indians, but they manage to make their escape to McCullough's place. Around McCullough's is a stockade, in which they all take refuge. The Indians, however, discovering their retreat, attack the cabin and in a furious fight succeed in setting fire to the dry logs of the shack. One man, with his little child in his arms, makes his escape and goes to seek assistance. Chubby, the baby, and its father go through many thrilling adventures, among them the swimming of an inlet from the sea where the mighty waves are dashing hungrily over the jagged rocks. Finally they succeed in getting the help they desire and the people at McCullough's stockade are rescued.

OH, WHAT A THANKSGIVING DAY! (Nov. 30).—On the morning of Thanksgiving Day a happy family learn that their mother-in-law is coming to take dinner with them. Papa has forgotten by this time that a turkey is a necessary accessory to a Thanksgiving dinner and rushes out to get one. Having secured a fine bird, he starts home with it. On his way he meets a friend and together they acquire a load of a very different character. When our hero leaves the cafe he has the turkey firmly clasped around the neck and the proud plumage of the bird drags dejectedly in the mud. After going through many vicissitudes the bird is snatched by a bulldog and carried off to his kennel, where he enjoys his Thanksgiving dinner all by himself. When the unhappy man reaches home he has naught but the turkey's head to show for his efforts, but the situation is saved by the owner of the dog, who at the last moment sends to the half-starved family a beautiful roast turkey.

BEAR HUNT ROMANCE (Dec. 2).—Two young men in the northern woods after big game were having a splendid time one day when they get on the trail of a big black bear, tracking him to his lair; one of them finds another opening in the cave, wherein bruin is hiding himself, and starts a fire to smoke him out while the other watches the many entrances. A few minutes later Dick sees the bear and kills him and a moment later Tom, mistaking Dick with the bear on his shoulder for the bear itself, fires and wounds Dick through the lung. Dick spends the next few days burning up with fever and is nursed by a beautiful Indian girl. Subsequently Dick and Tom go back to civilization and take the Indian maid with them as Dick's wife. After a year the Indian girl has become so unhappy surrounded by the duplicity and sham of society that she returns to her wilderness home, whither Dick follows her, accompanied by Tom, his bosom companion, and we leave them happily domiciled on the shores of a great lake where all mankind is free from the pettiness of civilization.

ROMANCE OF THE MUMMY (Nov. 28).—A young English lord, who has been excavating in Egypt, finds a mummy of a beautiful Egyptian princess, more than 5,000 years old. So well has the Egyptian embalmer done his work that the face is perfect in all its beauty, and the susceptible young man falls deeply in love with this belle of old Egypt; takes the mummy home to his estate in England and there it occupies his whole mind, to the exclusion of all else. Even the proposed visit of a beautiful American girl does not arouse his interest. In his sleeping moments he dreams that his mummy is alive and that he also is a subject of the Pharaohs. The mummy so works on his mind that he is losing his reason, but it is ultimately saved by the appearance of the American girl, who so resembles the mummy that she seems to be its reincarnation.

ROVER IS JEALOUS (Dec. 1).—Rover is, as may well be imagined, a dog, who has been raised where there are no children, and, in consequence, when he moves to a family where children play an important part he finds himself exceedingly unhappy. He gets his revenge by playing many tricks on the unfortunate youngsters; finally he sets fire to the house. When he sees the smoke pouring from the windows, however, he suffers from remorse and rushing into the flame-wrapped building rescues the baby from its perilous position.

VITAGRAPH.

THE POLITICIAN'S DREAM (Nov. 27).—Simon Stubbs, who is in love with Widow Merritt, thinks he is a great politician, and arguing on the imminent elections in New York with his friend Binks, gets so angry on account of his disagreement, that he orders him from the house. After his departure he falls asleep and dreams that he is called upon by a deputation for the nomination of Mayor of New York. Mrs. Merritt pleads with him to stay, but he says that duty calls him.

Then we see him going through the various phases of the campaign. He has good and troublesome times. At last he is elected by an enormous majority. Just then he receives a telegram saying that the Widow Merritt is going to marry Binks. He cannot stand it, and rushes to the train, only to reach his native town after the knot has been tied. He upbraids Mrs. Merritt, but is subsequently felled by a blow from Binks.

Then he wakes up, and after taking a good drink, resolves to leave politics alone and marry Mrs. Merritt.

THE FRESHET (Nov. 28).—Tom Ennis, a stalwart, sturdy fellow, is apprenticed to John Matthews, the village blacksmith, whose daughter is a likable girl. Tom falls in love with her, but her father opposes him and Meg marries one who is her father's choice.

Five years later, Meg, who is now a widow, brings her little son to see the forge, where his grandfather, now dead, worked. Tom, who purchased the blacksmith shop, is still a bachelor, slightly embittered. The presence of the young widow and her child act as a reminder of his life's disappointment.

The part of the village in which this life portrayal takes place, is situated on the banks of a swift running stream. It is spring time and the freshet overflows the river and sweeps everything before it. The house in which Meg and her child live, is carried away. The child, clinging to a part of the building, is seen in the midst of the torrent. Tom rushes to the scene of the disaster and seeing the child imperiled, plunges into the waters and rescues it. He carries the little one to his shop, wraps it in his coat and holds it tenderly near the blazing forge. Meg, who escapes the flood, finds the child safe in the arms of the noble blacksmith.

Meg is now homeless. Tom offers her the shelter of his home. This unselfishness on the part of Tom is too much for Meg. She acknowledges that she is unworthy of his kindness, but he assures her that it is all his pleasure. Both are drawn towards each other by expresions of love and the realization of their fondest dreams is consummated in marriage.

THE VOICELESS MESSAGE (Nov. 29).—Mr. and Mrs. Tinsdale, a wealthy couple, after the death of their little daughter, are inconsolable until one day they visit an orphan asylum and see a sweet little deaf and dumb girl, whom they decide to adopt. In order to converse with her they learn to talk in the sign language.

Some months later, Mr. Tinsdale, who has been intrusted with some valuable papers and money, is obliged to take them home and keep them over night. A burglar, who has a knowledge of Mr. Tinsdale's possessions, breaks into the house to rob him of the valuables. The thief enters the bedroom in which the safe is located. He finds Mrs. Tinsdale in bed. Intimidating her with his revolver, he threatens to shoot her if she speaks. Her husband is heard approaching the room and the burglar hides behind the head of the bed. The owner of the house notices his wife's perturbed expression and is about to ask her the cause, when she cautions him to keep silent by placing her finger to her lips. She then communicates with him in the sign language, telling him there is a man behind the bed.

Her husband grasps the situation and unconcernedly opens the table drawer from which he takes a pistol, points it in the direction his wife indicates, fires through the head-post of the bed, wounding the thief. He telephones for the police, who are soon on hand to take the robber captive.

Mr. and Mrs. Tinsdale, in grateful acknowledgment for their narrow escape from a possible tragedy, shower their caresses upon the little child who led them to impart the voiceless message of warning.

HIS LAST CENT (Dec. 1).—Jack Meyers, once a successful broker, is now brought face to face with ruin. He is forced to sell everything, and with only a few dollars in his pocket, seeks the shelter of a luxurious hotel. But he soon realizes his inability to continue long in such quarters, and is forced to seek work in order to live.

Brought to the last cent in his possession, he becomes a lounger in the public parks. Sitting in despair, he picks up a newspaper lying by and his eyes fall upon this advertisement: "Wanted—A young man to work in phosphate mine. Will advance railroad to right party. St. John's, Florida." Jack decides to take it.

An actor who has learned of Jack's predicament, offers him his room in the Actor's Boarding House, as he is going on the road. On their way to the house, Jack steps into the Post Office and spends his last cent on a postal card to answer the advertisement.

A few days later he receives a letter from his sweetheart, Polly Waters (with whom he had a quarrel just before his downfall), now with her father in Florida, saying that he is the owner of the mine mentioned in the advertisement, and that he will receive a position if he hurries there immediately. As the letter contained ample transportation, he makes all haste to Florida.

ON HIS KNEES (Dec. 2).—Sallie Marsh, a pretty country girl, is in love with Billie Lane. All goes merrily until Lillian Wilton, a city girl, appears on the scene, turns Billie's head and makes Sallie very jealous, Jack Miller, a college chap, returns home and pays court to Sallie. In return she makes Billie feel that he has a rival. At the husking bee Lillian finds the red ear and she, as queen, chooses Billie for her king. This is too much for Sallie and she leaves the husking bee and its festivities in a miff.

This is just what Lillian wanted her to do. She is satisfied with her accomplishment and casts flirtatious and longing eyes at Jack Miller, and not without success, for Jack is a willing response. Poor Billie tries to make up with Sallie, resorting to all sorts of peace offerings, until he is perfectly miserable when Sallie, paying him back in his own coin, refuses all his inducements. As a final humiliation, she tells him that unless he comes to her upon his hands and knees she will not take back her engagement ring. In humility Billie agrees to the terms.

Crawling upon his hands and knees to her home, and in suppliant attitude, he begs her pardon, promises her never to be so foolish again and swears to be hers and hers alone. All is forgiven and once more he is her king and she is his queen.

THE LURE OF THE CITY (Nov. 28).—We see a country boy leave the plow and his old father and mother, even the little country lass who loves him and we follow his career as he struggles to get work and slowly loses heart in the big town. At last he gets a job that will just pay his meager expenses. The little country girl back home has a brilliant idea; she looks up another city ad and hies her to town also. She even lets herself apparently fall into the snares of a cheap theatrical manager. This last incident is too much for the boy and he suddenly wakes up and realizes that the good home, the sweetness of the country, and life with the girl he loves, would be far more attractive than his present sordid struggle. Of course, the little girl pretends to be hard to persuade, but of course in the end she relents and we see them finally go "back to the land" and to happiness as the story comes to a close.

THE TROUBLES OF A. BUTLER (Nov. 29).—Mr. A. Butler discharges his man servant, and tiring of celibacy, inserts an advertisement in the same paper that his former servant does. A lady desiring the services of a butler, calls at Mr. Butler's residence and asks a man arranging some plants for the butler. Hearing his name, Mr. Butler steps forward and after exchanging a few words with him, Mrs. Ashburton gives him her card, with a request that he call. Mr. Butler is delighted, for he is under the impression that he has found a wife.

And an old spinster, desiring a husband, calls at the address of Mr. Butler's ex-servant. After a few minutes' conversation, which included a request to call at her home, the old spinster leaves. The servant arrives at the old maid's home just in time to see Mr. Butler following Mrs. Ashburton all over the house, declaring his love for her. She screams (thinking the man a maniac), and attracts the attention of her husband, who is about to reprimand Mr. Butler, when the ex-servant explains the conflicting advertisements.

PULL FOR THE SHORE, SAILOR (Dec. 1).—"The Madonna of the Tubs," as Elizabeth Stuart Phelps has called her principal character, is simply a washerwoman who lives on the outskirts of a fishing village with her husband and children. All goes well with the little family until Henry left on a fishing voyage. The Night before he was induced by his comrades to take a drink. He was not in the habit of doing so, but it was parting, and so he yielded to their wishes; as usual, one glass led to another. Finally he arrived home—his head in a muddle, mad at himself and all the world. A quarrel with his wife ensued and he left the home in anger. He had scarcely gone before the little mother realized what it meant, and out in the night she called for him, but he heard her not and the ship sailed away.

Then the story pictures the tragedy of the deep—the terrible fog that calls so many victims home. We see two fishermen in their little dory out in the open sea. Then the quiet, solemn fog steals around them and blots out everything. Their comrades call from the ship, but receive no answering call. Finally the fog lifts and the little dory with its two human beings is alone on the great ocean. Days pass by and Henry alone survives.

The news of the disaster has reached the ears of the "Madonna of the Tubs," and we see her and the children anxiously scanning the sea for Henry's ship to return.

A few days later David, the crippled boy, sings "Pull for the Shore," the song they sang so much before the father left. The mother stops her work, goes to the little organ and plays the song for him.

Here the scene fades and changes to the father at sea, hopeless and alone. The inspiration seems to reach him and he takes up the struggle again. Along the horizon a sail is seen—he signals it, and is saved.

We then see the mother on Christmas Eve, trying to cheer the children with a tiny Christmas tree. Poverty has settled around them, but a kind friend sends in a Christmas box and livens up the mourners. The greatest joy of all comes when the door bursts open and the father rushes in and fondly embraces his little family.

A MAN FOR ALL THAT (Dec. 2).—A ne'er-do-well becomes discouraged and is about to end his life by drowning, when he is stopped by a passer-by. The derelict asks to be allowed to finish, but the newcomer promises him a chance to obtain money, and, incidentally, whiskey. He gives up his plan and follows him.

At a ranch not far distant the ranch owner and Boffie, a cowboy, have just brought in the pay-roll for the hands away on the round-up. He finds his child critically ill and sends Boffie to find a doctor while he also goes for one in the opposite direction. Boffie, however, makes his way to a camp of cattle rustlers where he explains his errand to the gang-boss, who is none other than the stranger who saved the derelict from suicide. Boffie tells him that if one of the men will impersonate a doctor, he will take him to the ranch and assist in the theft of the pay-roll. The boss decides to send the derelict, but when the latter hears the plan he refuses. At the point of a gun he is forced to submit. Arriving at the ranch, Boffie presents the derelict as the doctor. The ranchman's daughter, to whom her father had intrusted the keys of the safe, becomes suspicious of Boffie's actions and intrusts the keys to the derelict for safe keeping. The trust placed in him by the girl arouses his manhood and he determines to make good. To this end he manages to disarm Boffie and tells him he intends to go straight. Boffie vows vengeance and goes for the gang while the derelict explains matters to the household and they prepare for the attack. It is not long in coming. The rustlers demand that the money be turned over to them, but their reply is a volley from the house. The fight becomes furious and the gang, finding they are getting the worst of it, try to set fire to the house. In this they are prevented by the timely arrival of the ranchman and the doctor.

The derelict returns the keys to the girl, who begs him to remain. He tells her the truth about himself, and still she asks him to remain. He refuses, but promises that he will return to claim her when he has fought the good fight and become a man again without question.

ECLAIR.

THE PORTUGUESE CENTAURS (Nov. 23).—The Portuguese Cavalry depicted in the Eclair release surpasses in dash and execution the crack regiments of Sunny Italy. The spectator is held in suspense at the sight of these Centaurs of old, riding down steep declivities, bounding over hill and dale; and again, after a precipitous flight down a stone staircase, they speed away, climbing mountains with the ease of antelopes, surmounting, with apparent ease and little effort, all obstacles that lie in their path. One admires equally horse and rider for sure-footed agility, strength and graceful equestrian ability.

CHARLEY BUYS AN AUTOMATIC LIGHTER (Nov. 23).—Matches are very expensive in Europe, and especially in France, and are controlled by the government. Someone invented an automatic lighter to do away with matches, and they became very popular. Charley decides to buy one. He soon discovers that the government, quick to realize the danger of the new invention, insists that all these devices shall be stamped with the official seal before being used. Failing to comply with the law, he is followed by detectives and finally captured after a series of ludicrous situations and hairbreadth escapes, the most sensational of which is scaling the Eiffel tower, where his troubles end through a clever ruse.

THANHOUSER.

THE TEMPEST (Nov. 28).—Prospero, the rightful Duke of Milan, is a kindly man, but a student. His fondness for literature gives his enemies a chance to plot against him, and through the machinations of his own brother, Antonio, and the King of Naples, Prospero is dethroned and Antonio assumes his throne. The conspirators are afraid to execute Prospero, who is beloved by the people, so they take him to sea, and set him adrift in an open boat with his little daughter, Miranda, expecting that they would never be heard of again.

Fortunately for Prospero and the child, they drift ashore on an island. It is inhabited solely by good fairies and wicked sprites. Prospero wins the favor of the former, and is able to subdue the latter and make them subservient to his will. On this island, father and daughter reside for twelve years. Then Prospero learns by his magic, that his brother, the King of Naples and the latter's son are passengers on a ship that is sailing near the island. By aid of his powers he is able to draw the ship to the island, where it is wrecked, but Prospero so arranges it that no lives are lost. His enemies now being in his power, he proceeds to punish them.

Antonio and the King of Naples are forced to wander around the island, while Aeriel, a good but mischievous fairy, plays all manners of pranks upon them. Ferdinand is conducted to the presence of Prospero, and set to menial work. He meets Miranda, and falls in love with her, the very thing that Prospero had set himself to bring about. In the end, Prospero forgives the two men who have wronged him on condition that they relinquish their thrones to Miranda and Ferdinand, who have agreed to marry and live happy forever afterward.

BENEATH THE VEIL (Dec. 1).—A young artist is a great lover of the beautiful, and has a natural horror of anything repulsive. He falls in love with a girl who satisfies his artistic requirements.

The Girl's father, a worldly wise inventor, does not approve of his daughter's choice. He realizes that the young artist has many limitations, and doubts if he will make his daughter happy. The girl, when told of his fears, at first laughs them to scorn. Then she begins to doubt herself.

Finally, a chance comes to test the father's theory. There is an explosion in the laboratory, and the girl, in trying to save her father, is badly injured. The artist hurries around to the house, and finds that the girl he loves is disfigured for life. She offers him his freedom and returns him his ring.

The young man is not of the stuff of which heroes are made. His love cannot survive the loss of the girl's beauty. He takes the ring and hurries away. And the fears of the father are proven.

As time rolls on the artist finds that he cannot forget the girl he once hoped to wed. Gradually he forgets her beauty, and thinks more and more of her character and mental attributes.

Humbly he returns to the house, and again pleads his suit. At first the girl repels him, finally she consents to take him back. She is heavily veiled when they meet, but she does not raise the veil, neither does he ask her to. Her physical appearance is of no importance he tells her, and so far as he is concerned, this is the truth. For he is no longer the artist, he is the sincere lover.

Still wearing her veil, but her beauty regained, the girl accompanies him to the altar. When they return to his studio, the veil is lifted, and with a radiant smile she goes to his arms.

BISON.

THE BROKEN TRAP (Nov. 21).—The white men are shown leaving the settlement, going to the forest on a hunting expedition. While canoeing, one of them meets a pretty Indian girl who falls in love with him. An Indian brave sets a trap. An animal is caught but breaks the trap and escapes. The white man finds it just as the Indian comes up and accuses him of breaking it. A fight ensues, in which the Indian is badly beaten. The Indians decide to attack the whites, and the Indian girl races ahead in her canoe and warns them. A terrific running fight takes place, the girl being fatally wounded. The whites finally reach the settlement where the reds are defeated in a desperate battle. The last scene, showing the death of the Indian girl, is impressive and pathetic.

WHITE FAWN'S ESCAPE (Nov. 24).—While the red men are on a hunting trip the village is attacked by a hostile tribe and White Fawn is captured and carried away. When her lover returns, he follows the enemy closely. White Fawn is made a slave, and is beaten and abused. She meets her lover, jumps into his canoe and they are off, pursued by the enraged Indians. Beautiful water scenes are shown as a canoe battle is fought, White Fawn's tribe coming up and defeating the enemy.

A BAD MAN (Nov. 24).—The "bad man" makes himself a real terror. He has everybody bluffed, but the foreman of the ranch. The foreman's sweetheart starts the taming when the bad man tries to make strenuous love to her. The foreman finishes it up in the saloon, where he knocks him out in a fist fight, and the boys conclude the job by ducking him in the water trough and running him out of town.

RELIANCE.

HELPLESS MAN (Nov. 22).—The professor becomes peeved over his wife's constant attention. She tells him that he can't get along without her and he maintains that he can. They quarrel and she goes to her mother's home in the same town. The weather has turned cold and the professor looks for his winter flannels, without success. He writes to his wife, but she does not answer. He looks for his fur coat and finally discovers that it is at the furrier's, but he cannot get it without the ticket, which his wife has. After many amusing incidents, his wife writes him to send all her old love letters to her. He gets them out and reads them, and they revive such tender memories that he rushes out, attired in dressing gown and slippers and pajamas, to his wife and makes up with her.

A DAUGHTER OF ITALY (Nov. 25).—Rosa secures a position with wealthy people as nurse to their daughter, Dorothy. Her mistress' younger brother falls in love with her and she is discharged. Rosa has a sweetheart, to whom she is loyal, an Italian boy named Garvin. Another Italian, Repetto, is in love with Rosa and very jealous of Garvin. He meets little Dorothy, who was very fond of her nurse, and is endeavoring to locate Rosa, and takes her to Little Italy and plots with friends to gain a ransom. Rosa overhears the plot and tells Garvin, who spies on the plotters and is captured and bound. Repetto, hearing Rosa coming in the hallway, hides Dorothy and her old woman guard in the closet. Garvin is in the next room, helpless. Repetto forces his love upon Rosa, who hits him with a bottle and knocks him senseless. She rescues Garvin and Dorothy as the old woman escapes and warns the other plotters ,who rush the place. In the meantime a note of warning Rosa has sent Dorothy's parents reaches its destination, and the police are not far behind. The Italians break through three doors and the little trio are about to be captured when the police and Dorothy's father rescue them.

NESTOR.

HIS VACATION (Nov. 20).—John Strong, the village blacksmith, and Violet Dandy, the village belle, are having a rather easy time with their love romance, when Count Giustine de Ribboni blows in upon them.

All the village maidens, Violet included, are dazzled by the Count's polished and grand manners. All strive to win the count's favor, but Violet wins the race.

Count de Ribboni's vacation proves to be an eventful one. Little Tommy, however, positively dislikes the count, and proceeds to "queer" him with the prospective countess. Unwittingly he helps his brother's (John's) suit.

Thanks to Tommy, the count's vacation is transformed into a nightmare. Tommy anticipates the count's every move, and "doctors" the stoop, the hammock, the carriage and, last, but not least, the rowboat. Poor Giustino is kept busy falling tumbling, taking flying leaps and floundering in the lake. At the opportune moment, John, the smithy, plays the hero's part by saving the girl, thereby earning her everlasting gratitude and love. Giustino manages to gain terra firma only to be thrown back into the water.

His vacation over, the count returns to his count—er, the ribbon counter in a department store, where he is discovered by John and Violet. In a desperate attempt to hide himself, Giustino scatters yards and yards of ribbons and finally lands out in the street with the powerful assistance of a husky floor-walker.

THE COWBOY PUGILIST (Nov. 22).—The boys were disappointed. Edwin Baxter, the only man of whom their Western little town could boast as being really clever with the gloves, had absolutely refused to answer the challenge of the theatrical company, booked for the Opera House next week. The manager had sent out posters announcing that his pugilist would meet all comers and offering $200 to anyone able to stay four rounds with him. Edwin stubbornly insisted he was not good enough at the game, and, anyway, May Sutton disapproved of his fighting; so further argument was useless.

Upon calling at the Sutton home the next day, and learning that May and her grandfather and grandmother were to be dispossessed unless they could meet their six months' back rent or the girl consented to become the wife of Samuel King, the landlord, Edwin vigorously declared he would answer the challenge after all, and started training at once.

Before the day for the fight arrived, King had heard of his townsman's intention, and as soon as "Kid Flynn," the pugilist, and his manager appeared, he called upon them and offered the fighter his own price if he would give Edwin a sound thrashing. Having arranged matters to his satisfaction, King watched his rival in love answer the challenge with a very derisive grin.

In the first round each man was trying to feel the other out; but in the second, after Edwin had put three punches on the "Kid's" jaw, the fighter decided it was time to "start something." The two men mixed it up for a few seconds, then suddenly the "Kid" attempted to land his famous sleep prescription, a terrible right swing, which Edwin cleverly avoided just as the gong sounded. In the third, the "Kid" clinched. Edwin landed a right hook to the jaw and followed it up with a solar plexus that sent the fighter down for the count of eight. He rose, surprised and angry; but nimble Edwin managed to keep out of the way. In the fourth round, the men fought hard, each taking a good deal of punishment; but the fighter was utterly unable to put over the deciding punch. When the gong sounded, Edwin modestly acknowledged the wild applause of his fellow-townsmen, gladly pocketed the $200 and hastened to his dressing room.

On the following day the young man had the extreme pleasure of literally kicking Samuel King out of the Sutton home. He thus won the undying gratitude of the old folks and his little sweetheart.

DESPERATE DESMOND PURSUED BY CLAUDE ECLAIRE (Nov. 25).—There is a circus in town, and Claude takes his beloved Rosamond to see the show. Desperate Desmond does the shadowing act, and watching for his opportunity, mounts a fleet ring horse, holds up Claude, takes the fair damsel and dashes away to far off Borneo.

After a moment's hesitation, Claude and the entire circus force, armed to the teeth, give chase to the bold and wicked villain. By devious paths, he finally reaches Borneo, where Gomgotez and various other wild men, fully armed, join him.

With a motley crowd of Indians and cowboys, Claude soon beards the lion in his den. Cornered, Desmond fights, but manages to cross a wooden bridge spanning a swift-running stream. With Rosamond as a shield, he holds Claude at bay while the wild men start a bonfire on the bridge. A cruel and horrible fate awaits Beautiful Rosamond. She hangs suspended from the wooden span, and—a terrible battle is being fought. Unable to reach his sweetheart, Claude and two of his men take a barrel of water and roll it to where the fire is raging; then backing away, a furious fusillade is exchanged. Curses! the bullets have struck the barrel and a myriad of streams issue forth thus putting out the fire. Presto! Rosamond is saved, and the villain and his minions are in full retreat.

Desmond is finally caught and tied to a horse; he's permitted to enjoy a cross country drag that well nigh puts an end to his villainous existence. Claud, Rosamond and the brave lads return in triumph to the circus, while Desmond, thoroughly shaken up and bedraggled, picks himself up, nonchalantly puffs the inevitable cigarette, and begins to think how he "shall have her yet."

CHAMPION.

THE MOTHER GOOSE SERIES (Nov. 27).—"Rock-a-bye baby on the tree-top" and lo! there is the tree and high in its branches is the cradle and the baby, gently swaying in the wind. And there, too, do we see Mother Goose herself, and not only she, but her big, fat goose also. And there she sits smiling at us benignly, the author of all our delight, "When the bough breaks the cradle will fall," and sure enough, the bough breaks and down comes cradle, baby and all.

We are introduced to a modern scene, everything cozy and comfortable. There sits the old grandfather in his easy chair. There reclines the younger married folk by the brightly burning hearth-fire. In tumble the youngsters, and the parents and the old grandfather are soon smothered in their childish embraces. Now the crossed legs of papa and grandad are brought into play as horses. The gray-whiskered and gray-haired old grandfather is once more a child. His face lights up with childish enthusiasm and his joyous enthusiasm becomes infectious as he dashes the little one up and down on his "horse-leg." Soon all the other grown-ups are beating time, and not one in all that room but "as a child" once more.

In the background is the sweet countenance of Mother Goose. There she sits, with her fat goose under her arm. She waves her wand, and from our view dissolves the material world of those who a moment ago we had been observing; and before our delighted vision, troop forth splendidly caparisoned steeds, ridden by bold looking knights, and there in front of them, bedecked and beribboned, is the white horse and a beautiful young maiden on its back.

THE TWO BROWNS Nov. 29).—There are two Browns. One is John W.—the other Joe W. John is from New York City, Joe is to the manner born. These two worthies fall desperately in love with Virginia Dare, daughter of their ranch boss. Virginia favors the suit of John, the New Yorker.

What an exhibitor writes to the Moving Picture World with reference to our Bells and other Musical Instruments

Fort Worth, Texas, October, 1911.

Moving Picture World, New York City.

Gentlemen:—In conjunction with an article in the Moving Picture World of October 21, headed "A Little Talk on Vaudeville in Picture Theaters," mentioning Mr. J. C. Deagan, of Chicago, manufacturer of musical novelties, especially adapted to picture show work, I can't help but feel it my duty as an extensive purchaser of Mr. Deagan's instruments and a user of the same, to boost for him and his wonderful knowledge of the manufacture of perfectly toned bells. While the article mentions only the organ chimes as an attraction, I have found for complete effects on pictures, the Parsifal Bells, Marimbaphone, Xylophone,

ELECTRIC BELLS

(the greatest drawing card of all), unequaled when it comes to putting on perfect effects. I am using all these instruments, as well as Mr. Deagan's Cathedral Chimes, in addition to violin, cello, traps and effects.

I have not regretted the expenditure of several hundred dollars on Deagan instruments, and to any show that wishes to increase its receipts, my advice will be fewer drum stunts and more attractive music, such as only Bells can give, and the crowds will come.

and this arouses the jealousy of Joe, who, falling into a bad mood, resolves to gain his ends by foul methods.

He has a friend in New York write a letter to John, making it appear as from John's wife. When John receives it, he regards it as a mistake or a practical joke, and laughingly hands it to Joe. This is what the latter expected, and once in his hands, he saw that it fell into Virginia's hands. She spurned John from that time forth, giving him no chance to defend himself, nor the slightest hint of what she had learned, which she, of course, believed.

Then Joe found favor with her, more to spite John than for aught else. Thus did unhappiness come to Virginia and John because of Joe's rascality. Joe's pal in New York, who had sent the unfortunate letter, wrote to Joe about it. But he addressed it to J. W. Brown, and so it happened that the letter fell into John's hands and was opened by him.

The parson was just about to tie the knot between Virginia and Joe, when in burst John with the timely evidence, and upset the plans which Joe had so nicely laid.

Joe retired under the scornful and scorching glances of every one present. John received the congratulations from the guests, which otherwise would have been the other's.

COMET.

THE OFFICE BOY' DREAM (Nov. 20).—Willie Winkle, when he left his quiet home in the country to seek his fortune in the Big City, never thought that his path would be crowned with thorns instead of roses. After divers efforts, he is finally ensconced as office boy. The head of the firm is a man who does not impress Willie as amiable or good tempered. Still there is some solace in the fact that he likes baseball. On the opening day of the recent series for the world's championship, between the Giants and Athletics, the "boss" elects to go to the game, but cruelly forgets to ask Willie to accompany him. All that is left for the boy to do is to remain in the office, nurse his disappointment, and wait for the evening papers for the final score. There is a box of cigars in the desk. It belongs to the boss. Willie helps himself to one and between puffs, goes to the window, watching the surging thousands on their way to the Polo Grounds, where the game is to be played. Willie is tired, and with his legs stretched across the desk, and his head far back in the chair, he falls asleep. He dreams. Everything is different now.

He is dressed in his best and is at the game. He has a seat alongside the "boss," who has taken him there. They are rooting and cheering and seemingly the best of friends. The game is over, the pair enter an automobile and speed their way to the home of the employer, where a steaming hot dinner awaits them. What a change! Everybody is glad to see Willie and the boss is so proud of him that he forthwith introduces him to his daughter. Cupid is at work. The girl discovers that Willie is her ideal, and when the lad proposes, he is accepted on the spot. They are engaged and soon the wedding bells begin to chime. Here we see the youthful pair surrounded by guests, flower girls and their happy parents. Then comes the honeymoon. To the accompaniment of a shower of rice and old shoes, the lovers are sent on their way, and all is bliss and sunshine.

But now comes the rude awakening. Willie receives a severe tug about the neck, is aroused from his placid dream and confronts the boss, who has returned for the tickets for the game, which he has left behind. Willie then gets "fired" and again resumes his search for a new job.

THE DIAMOND LOCKET (Nov. 24).—The Vans belong to New York's wealthy set. They insert an advertisement in one of the dailies for a governess, and Kate Starr, a poor young girl, answers it. She is engaged for the position and intrenches herself into the heart of the Van's little daughter.

Kate is loved by Tim Hogan, an honest inspector employed in the street cleaning department. Tim one day comes to the rescue of a detective, who is set upon by three crooks he tries to arrest while in the act of robbing a drunken man. Tim and the detective become firm friends and when Tim finds the diamond locket in the street he promptly shows it to his pal, who suggests in lieu of an owner, to present it to his sweetheart, which Tim does.

Kate wears the gift proudly around her neck. It appears that the locket was lost by Mrs. Van on her way home from a reception. When Mrs. Van discovers the locket in Kate's possession, she promptly accuses the governess of having stolen it, and despite Kate's tears and protestations of innocence, the young girl is arrested and thrown into prison. Of course, Tim comes to his sweetheart's aid. He brings his friend, the detective, to court, who corroborates Tim's version of how the locket was found and how Kate came to have it. The Vans are humbled, the Judge adding to their humiliation by scoring them for their hasty action, and winding up by telling them to be more careful when accusing innocent persons in the future.

GRANDMA'S TOOFACHE (Nov. 27).—Granma visits the Howes and is forthwith invited to dinner. The Howes have a daughter, Edith, a little girl, who loves grandma dearly. Mr. Howe is a dentist and when grandma complains of having a toothache, the doctor turns to his wife and suggests the idea of extracting the painful molar. Edith runs for a bottle of paregoric, but when she sees the forceps in the hands of her father, she hustles grandma to the garret, where the pair secrete themselves.

There is no one in the house and two tramps enter. Seeing the untouched dinner, they sit down and dine. After the meal they repair to the garret, and Edith and grandma believing them to be the dentist and his assistant, cover themselves with sheets from the bed. The tramps mistaking the child and grandma for ghosts, scamper away for dear life. Mr. and Mrs. Howe by this time are much worried over the absence of their darling and grandma. They go to the garret where Edith and grandma pose as daredevil bandits, and are scared out of their wits. They are so frightened that the police are appealed to. When the authorities arrive, all hands ascend the stairs and on entering the garret, find Edith and grandma fast asleep.

THE LATE MRS. EARLY (Dec. 1).—Mr. and Mrs. Early are preparing for a week-end stay in the country. Mr. Early is ready, but Mrs. Early, womanlike, takes her time. They finally depart, but arrive at the station too late to catch the train. The ensuing day is Mrs. Early's birthday. Mr. E. gives her a number of presents, among them a watch. He is at breakfast on time, but Mrs. Early gets there late. Then he gives her the watch, more as a gentle reminder that he desires her to be more punctual in the future. That evening the couple plan to go to dinner and then to a theater. Mrs. Early is again late and in sheer disgust Mr. Early tears up the tickets and goes to the club without her. Upon her arrival at the theater, she discovers the torn tickets on the floor in the lobby, and resolves to get even and teach him to wait.

She sends a note to a friend, Mr. John Smith, asking him to call and take her out. When Smith gets the note he meets her. In the mean time, Mr. Early receives this note: "Dear Cousin Joe: Just arrived from Naples. Hear you are married. If not, I expect you to dine me out just as you used to in the dear old Boston. Violet." Early keeps his appointment and the two couples meet at the same restaurant. Complications set in, ending with Mrs. Early fainting. A reconciliation follows and the upshot is that Mrs. Early resolves to mend her late ways and become Mrs. Early in fact as well as in name.

UNCLE'S VISIT (Nov. 27).—Mr. and Mrs. Sperry, newly weds, are expecting a visit from Mr. Sperry's uncle, a wealthy cattle raiser, from Kansas. He has never met the wife and she is anxious to make a good impression. She receives a letter from another relative, warning her that, inasmuch as the man from the cyclone country is quite eccentric, he may come disguised to test her qualities.

She remembers the admonition and when "Slimmy," a typical nomand, puts in an appearance, he is royally received. The knight of the road is agreeably surprised. He thoroughly enjoys the situation of being guessed out as the expected relative. He is wined and dined like a prince, and tops it off with a fragrant cigar, finishing up by appropriating the contents of the box.

In the meantime, Uncle Silas arrives and calls at the office of the husband, where he is given a royal greeting. Business is dropped and the nephew proudly escorts the man from the West down the street, having in prospect a happy surprise for his wife.

They enter the hall and the fumes of a cigar greet their norstrils. The uncle is shocked and inquires sternly if the wife is addicted to the use of tobacco. They go into the room and find "Slim" enjoying all the comforts of a privileged guest. There is consternation. The husband fires out the tramp and the perplexed wife tries to explain, but the irate husband will not listen. The uncle is also exasperated and announces his intention of boarding the next train for Kansas. Finally the wife shows the letter and it all dawns on the husband.

There is an explanation to the uncle and a happy reconciliation between Mr. and Mrs. Sperry. The story closes with the tramp inhaling the fragrance of a choice cigar, his hunger appeased, about to take pasage up the road on the bumpers of a freight car. OVER THE HILLS (Nov. 30).—Ethel Edgar, is a wild rose of the peaks, whose only associates are rough, honest miners. Her father and brother refuse her permission to accompany them on a prospecting trip, giving as an excuse that she is a girl and cannot withstand the hardships. She is peeved and decides to go gold hunting on her own hook. Procuring a mirror and a pair of shears, she clips off her tresses, dons male attire, and with revolver and pick sallies forth in search of adventures.

One comes most inopportunely, for she falls over a cliff and rolls to the rocks below, stunned and amazed. She is rescued by Wayne Holland, a young miner, who lives alone in a cabin on the mountain. He carries her to his home, where she revives. Holland, while not conversant with the ways of women, has an intuition that his newly made friend is masquerading. The girl tries to hide her identity,, but makes it all the more apparent that she is not what she seems.

Leaving her in the cabin, Holland sleeps in the open and an unsuccessful miner tries to rob him, entering the cabin. The girl screams and Holland is awakened. There is a fight and the thief is sent cursing down the mountain side.

Ethel leaves the cabin and goes home, where she dons suitable wearing apparel. Holland, left alone, cannot forget the sweet face and resolves to seek her. After much primping he dreses in his best suit of clothes and goes to her home, where he discovers her in proper personae, and is smitten by her charms. He endeavors to make love to her, but she will have none of him in his make-up, assumed for the occasion. He returns to his home crestfallen as the result of his courting expedition. Ethel follows him, anxious to make amends for her seeming coldness. There is a pretty scene in his cabin of the happy lovers. (Copyrighted, 1911, by Independent Moving Pictures Co. of America).

AMERICAN.

THE SHERIFF'S SISTERS (Nov. 30).—Edith Howard is in love with Jack Evans, foreman of her father's ranch, but her affections are not returned. Jim Dawson is also another suitor for Edith's hand.

When Edith's sister Clara, returns from boarding school, Jack Evans becomes smitten by her charms and they eventually are engaged. Clara's father objects.

Jim Dawson, in self defense, shoots Mr. Howard, when he asks for Edith's hand. Hearing the shot, Jack (who has been conversing with Edith, in a nearby room), rushes to the scene and is caught there by Dick Howard, the sheriff, and son of the dead man. He places Jack in jail. As Dick is consoling his sister, he drops the prison keys, which are picked up by Clara, who rushes to the jail and liberates Jack, substituting herself in his place. Jim Dawson, having escaped, returns to the jail with a gang of cowpunchers, bent upon hanging Jack. They arrive just as Jack is making his escape. A chase is given, Jack is captured, thrown from a railroad viaduct and is later found lying on the tracks by the sheriff. Edith confesse her duplicity, a reconciliation follows and Jack is allowed his freedom.

THE ANGEL OF PARADISE RANCH (Dec. 4).—Jack, after traveling to the West to better his mother's failing health and make his fortune, is quite discouraged when he finds that he is unable to locate a mine. He is refused employment at "Double Circle Ranch." As he is leaving the place, he meets the ranchman's daughter and they are mutually impressed with each other. The owner of the ranch receives a letter saying that cattle-rustlers are operating in the vicinity.

On his way home Jack accidentally walks into the camp of the cattle thieves. After questioning him, he is given employment, which he accepts, much against his will. Intent on his work, he does not see the ranchman's daughter approaching from behind. She covers him with her revolver, but Jack tells her his troubles. Still suspicious, the girl proceeds to the hut occupied by he and his mother, and finding things corresponding with Jack's words, she gives money to his mother.

Relieved of immediate worries, Jack goes back to his mining ventures and strikes it rich. One day as Jack was visiting the ranchman's daughter, a creditor called upon the now ruined owner with a bill which he was unable to meet. Jack, however, returned the favor of the girl, by closing the account.

BILL AND BERTIE GET MARRIED (Nov. 24).—This is a funny story of how Bill and Bertie went into double harness on the same day. Their respective bridal parties met at the church door and quarrelled and the quarrel continued with disastrous results. When a man's married, his troubles begin.

A PASSING CLOUD (Nov. 24).—Edward Bunthorne and his sweetheart Grace came down to the river to pass away an afternoon in luxurious idleness and sweet content. The sun shone, the birds sang, and all the world went merrily. Then came a tiny speck upon the distant horizon; it grew and soon loomed overhead, blocking out the light of the morning sun, hushing the song of the birds and making the world a dismal place indeed. The cloud was Madeline Martin, a young lady who came to the river with her little sister. The lovers made friends with her, and very soon they formed a pleasant party. Edward became infatuated with his new acquaintance, and some time afterwards, was observed by Grace carrying on a desperate flirtation. Alas: the cloud must break, and Grace's little world will be clad in sombre hue, but,—no, there proves to be no rain, for Grace bravely rescues Miss Martin's little sister from death. The unselfish bravery of this action reveals to Miss Martin the selfishness of her own actions, and she retired, leaving the lovers to make their peace. The sunshine comes again after a hard struggle, and Grace and Edward are finally forced to agree that Miss Martin was but—"a passing cloud."

an aversion for the opposite sex. Although pursued by many charming ladies, Owen eludes them and steals off to his favorite trout stream, which divides the two estates. Mary is also annoyed by many admirers, among whom is a poet, but she ingeniously gets rid of all only to meet her fate at the trout stream in which Owen fishes industriously.

Meeting there one day, Owen orders Mary off his side of the stream, where she has comfortably esconced herself; but alas! Cupid has lost his opportunity and the die is cast.

Mary's uncle, although seemingly severe, has a tenderness for an interesting spinster of uncertain age. Mary surprises her uncle with the spinster and shows emphatically, in various ways, her dislike of the proposed match. Uncle, while appearing severe on Owen's suit, plans to get Mary married off, at the behest of the spinster lady, and succeeds in his scheme. Owen and Mary elope with the aid of a long ladder and an automobile and (we are told) lived happily ever after.

THE PRICE (Nov. 23).—Pretty Ann, and Joe, the hostler, one day chance to meet. Strong is Joe, and simple, and Ann is shy and sweet. As man and maid have done before, they love, and marry, too. And live happy ever after?—ah, this tale is new to you! Yes, the tale is drear, prosaic; and so poetry won't do.

A baby boy comes to bless the union. Joe is working in the stables when they tell him of his joy: his heart is gay and happy—and he tells the horses so.

Then—it might be the angels were jealous of such mortal happiness; it might be the devil, seeing the stage so set, entered to play the leading role. The tempter comes to the woman. He is a gentleman, suave, polished, charming, a man of manners; and Ann, knowing not the manners of men, hears and heeds and falls as the angels fall from heaven, another Eve heeding the serpent's call, facing a morn of desired delight, and the twilight of despair.

One night Joe comes home with a happy cry of "Wife!" But the only answer is the whisper of desolation, the ghostly voice of ghastly vice! He reads the note she left him, and—Joe don't know much about God, excepting what he feels—don't know much about anything but bosses—but he asks the Lord to pardon and protect the weak woman he loved. Like a frail blossom lacking sunshine, the motherless baby droops and dies. Joe goes his way, making no complaint—'ceptin' what he tells his bosses, 'ceptin' what he tells his God!

Far away in mighty London, the woman rises into fame. Through her lover's influence and wealth, she becomes a noted actress. Her beauty wins men's homage, and she prospers in her shame. Then—the day of reckoning! Time plays no favorites: the immutable law of the years takes its course; youth flies, her beauty vanishes, her charm withers; and the pretty toy, grown useless, is flung aside, as of old. The wedded morn and roses, and the widowed night—and mourning; light and life today; dark and death tomorrow; the errand of folly, and the wage of sin—from Adam to eternity!

In a far-off country town, youth and strength gone, his soul seared by the sad sorrow of woman's sin, Joe reads in a newspaper how a once famous actress, alone and in poverty, is dying. The fickle world has forgotten her fame; the fickle worshipers of wanton beauty have forgotten her very name. But Joe has forgotten only her sin and shame; only Joe remembers; only Joe is true.

He comes to her and tells her he forgives her, tells her he loves her for what might have been, for the soul he would meet again in the Far Away, in the Beyond, across the vale. Held in his arms, the eyes that had seen sin look into the cleansing tears in his, and close in death!

On the stone over her grave Joe wrote one word—the honored name of "Wife."

A blossom we fain would pluck today from the flowers above her dust; a blossom as pure as love that lasts, a blossom sweet as the peace and purity we hope Ann found in the Distant Land.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE THEFT OF MONA LISA (Nov. 25).—Fred, in his private office, is disturbed in his work by the entry of the head's daughter, with whom he has a certain understanding. They bill and coo together without noticing the entrance of the proprietor, who, with difficulty keeping a straight face, orders his daughter out of the room. Fred resolves to test his fortune at once, and asks papa's consent to his marriage. The proprietor then says, "As soon a you have done a good piece of work as a journalist I will consent to the marriage." Fred immediately set out, and after a time, becoming thirsty, drops into a cafe. Here he overhears a number of artists discussing the bad supervision prevailing at the Louvre, and this instantly suggests a plan to him. Proceeding to the gallery, he inspects the world-famous work of art, and then going to an open window nearby, is gratified to find that some workmen have erected a cradle to travel from the ground to the window. That evening he returns, and reaching the window by the cradle, enters the room and steals the picture. The next morning the loss is discovered, and the police soon have the matter in hand. The director of the gallery is rung up and is told that the picture has disappeared. Glancing at his paper he sees a report of the theft written by Fred, and backed up by a number of police, he makes his way to the office of the paper, and there is introduced to Fred. The picture is taken down from the wall, where it has been temporarily hung and wrapped up in a piece of paper. The director turns for a moment to chat with the head, when Fred exchanges the picture for another canvas of the same size and shape. This is taken in solemn procession to the gallery, but there a shock awaits the gathered crowd, for the canvas is not "Mona Lisa," but a painting of the Nordisk trade mark. At this juncture Fred pushes his way in with the real painting, which he delivers up in the sight of all. He has accomplished what he set out to do, and we last see him with his prize folded in his arms.

HUSBANDS WANTED (Nov. 22).—Dick Abbot, a confirmed bachelor, is left a large fortune by his uncle's will on condition that he is married within a month. Dick wants the fortune and not knowing any girl he would want for a wife, he advertises. Gladys Bennett, a very pretty girl, who works in a millinery store, is lonely and tired of living in a small furnished room. She reads Dick's ad and writes him a letter. Dick makes an appointment for her to meet him at a certain restaurant at five o'clock, stating he will wear a white carnation and asking her to wear one also, that they may know each other. Gladys accidently drops her letter from Dick in the park. A matrimonial agent picks it up. He rushes to his office, where a crowd of old maids, widows, etc., are awaiting him. He sends each one to the restaurant wearing a white carnation. The proprietor of the restaurant is greatly pleased with the crowd, and seeing them all wearing white carnations, he gets a large bouquet of them and puts one on each member of the orchestra, also all other customers. Each woman darts for a man with a white carnation. The place is in an uproar when Gladys enters, only to get knocked down by a big Irishwoman. Dick comes along in time to help her up and they lose no time in getting away from the bowling mob.

THE WILL OF PROVIDENCE (Nov. 24).—An old miser before dying, writes his will and sews it up, with all his money, in the lining of an old coat. The will reads that whoever finds the money can keep it. He gives the coat to his landlady, but she is disgusted and sells it to a second-hand dealer. An amateur actor later buys the coat. He makes a failure of his first try-out and blaming his bad luck on the coat, takes it back to the Jew. A little waif, without a home, father or mother, knocks at the door of a poor journeyman tailor. The tailor's family share their humble abode with the little waif. The poor child is in rags and the tailor goes to the second-hand store to get him something to wear. He buys the miser's old coat, thinking he can cut it down for the little waif. The child helps cut the lining out of the coat, when out drops the old miser's money and the will, and the tailor and his family are amply repaid for adopting the waif.

POWERS.

TOO MUCH INJUN (Nov. 28).—This is Indian, but a comedy! A little surprise, yet it's so—first Indian comedy ever made. It introduces the youth that has the spirit of the plains in his Eastern blood, and we show him whetting his ferocious appetite for redmen's blood. He's going out West, you must know, and he's practicing the plunge of the bowie, for he anticipates many a savage hand-to-hand encounter. His subject is the nearest to the real article that a tenderfoot can get—namely a cigar store Indian. But the Indian is not the kind you expect him to be, so he resents it in such fashion that the erstwhile despoiler of the copperman's domain changes his mind about that triumphant tour of the woolly West.

THE LINEMAN AND THE GIRL (Nov. 28).—If she were not such a careful thing about herself and her home, she never would have bothered about the electrical wiring men who were working on the sidewalk in front of her house; but she noticed that they were about to plant a telegraph pole right before her door, and this just grated on her sense of artistic landscape arrangement. So, when they had a nice hole dug for it, she left the cake in the oven, and stepping into the excavation, defied them to remove her. Just like that!

And they didn't. But what did follow made the young engineer in charge of the work wish he owned a will like hers; and he decided to get it, if he had to take her with it, which was just to his taste, because she was so young and sweet, and determined and—well, he got her!

THE WANDERER'S RETURN (Dec. 2).—The visit of old Daddy Time is constantly changing this little old world of ours, and it changes us too—and as the years roll by Fate casts us over the endless domains of the globe, some near to and some far from the fanciful spot we revere as "home." An iota in the great human plan, Harry Reid became lost to his loved ones, and advertisement by the most modern methods extant failed to bring him into the light of the love of his family. It was just a freak of circumstance that another man cruelly undertook to wound the hearts of the mourning ones by masquerading as the lost man. He might have played his part successfully, too, if the same fate that sent Jack into the endless chasm of oblivion had not wrought a miracle still more wondrous. Now, dear reader, you are waiting for the saddest part of this tale. You are to be disappointed, however, for there is no sad part to it. Strange to say, this film is a roaring farce, full of funny situations. Do you see the opportunity for fun?

VIEWS OF LAKE COMO (Dec. 2).—Here we take a boat ride over this world-famous Italian lake, which is noted chiefly for its scenic wonders and beauties. The romantic gondolas glide majestically by and we can almost hear the twang of the native guitar as we sail along on the glassy water.

MISS MASQUERADER (Nov. 28).—What could afford a better foundation for a delightfully humorous picture tale than a lovable, vigorous specimen of budding girlhood, out for a lark, bundled up in male attire and chaperoned by a doting uncle with boyish tendencies?

Her experiences at a fashionable club, on the golf links and other places rarely frequented by women, offer many laughable situations.

Naturally there's a love plot attached in which the girl figures triumphantly. Exquisite photographic value is apparent in every scene, while the production, as a whole, is a delightful remedy for brain-fagged, over-worked mortals who tire of the grind and long for an excuse for laughter to brighten their weary souls.

Among the Exhibitors

Cleveland, Ohio.—A new theater will open in Cleveland around Christmas of this year. The theater will seat 1,500 people, and will play pictures and vaudeville.

Lynn, Mass.—The old Gem Theater in Oxford Street, will be reopened as a moving picture theater shortly.

Logansport, Ind.—The Cozy Moving Picture Theater, under the management of Harry B. Elliott, has opened.

Bayonne, N. J.—A license for a new moving picture theater at Thirty-eighth Street and Broadway, has been granted Frederick Wandelt.

Kewaunee, Wis.—Finishing touches are being given to Kewaunee's new moving picture house, and it will be opened up shortly under the ownership of Mr. Hirschfeldt.

Horicon, Wis.—Frank Bethke has purchased a lot of F. G. Westfall, on Lake Street, between the latter's barber shop and the saloon of Geo. Cummings, and plans to build a new moving picture show house.

Port Washington, Wis.—Chas. H. Freilson has taken a long lease on the Opera House, and will put on high-class picture shows four nights a week.

SUCCESS

and satisfaction is what our purchasers claim with our film bargains

Why?

Because our films are in good condition; good subjects, and are exceptional bargains.

GENERAL FILM BUREAU

SCENARIO WRITERS!

If your scenarios do not sell find out why. Perhaps your manuscript can be rewritten and made saleable, and your mistakes may be corrected in future manuscripts. The author of "Technique of the Photoplay," etc., will give your manuscript personal criticism and revision for a fee of only $2.

Exhibitors!

Bad Business?

Submit your difficulties to the author of "The Photoplay Theater," and other articles on management, for advice and suggestion, the result of twenty years' experience in amusement enterprises. Simple questions $1 each.

Manufacturers!

Manuscripts developed, $10 each. Send in that scenario that has your staff puzzled and a practical working script will be returned.

Independent Film Service

We are not limited to our buying by any combinations. We can refuse any subject that is poor, other exchanges cannot. We buy films from twenty foreign makers. Others from three. We buy all the feature films which are not copyrighted or sold on state rights. We do not rent duped films, and we are not controlled by combinations of manufacturers and exchanges. They do not combine for the good of the exhibitor, they are not philanthropists.

The Iroquois Theatre Fire

at Chicago in 1903 will never be forgotten because of the terrible, needless, inexcusable sacrifice of 596 lives. Same old story of a panic-mad audience piling upon each other in the vain effort to escape through fire-doors that would not open. The Von Duprin Self-Releasing Fire Exit Latch opens fire-doors instantly at the slightest pressure on a solid bar stretching across the door, about waist high. This device has never failed—it cannot fail. Try it and see why. Try it now. A day's delay may cost hundreds of lives. The demonstration will cost you nothing. Catalog?

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and any one can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of three dollars ($3) cash with order, we will send by express, charges not prepaid, or $3.50 by registered mail, prepaid, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address is an integral casting of special metal—fitted with a sliding contact, operated by a set screw or wing nut, if desired. The design of the contact fits the carbon, furnishing a larger area of contact, and thus requires less pressure to securely hold the carbon. It is impossible to score the carbon, and the adjustment screw will not "freeze" under any considerations. The concentric adjustment permits instantaneous renewals of carbons.

The Indestructo Carbon Holder

PEDRO AND HANK EJECT THE "DRUNKS"

THE REASON WHY

PEDRO and Hank, partners, become desperate rivals for the hand of Marie, a pretty store-keeper, and try to outdo each other in purchases from the store in the endeavor to win her favor. Hank almost steals a march on Pedro when he rushes in to save Marie from the advances of two "drunks," but unfortunately the "drunks" prove stronger than he. Pedro's mighty arm saves both Hank and the girl, and for reward he fully expects her consent. Just then however, the real lover, a young Easterner, arrives whom Marie receives with open arms, after which Pedro and Hank conclude that such is the way of life.

It wasn't a "Power's No. 6"

This man didn't know,
So he sat through a show
Where the pictures were all of a flicker.
Had the machine been a "Power's,"
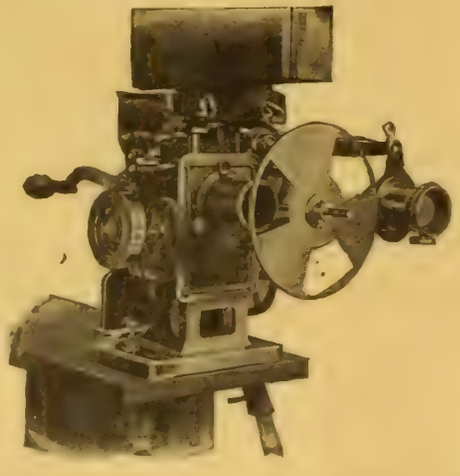
He'd have passed pleasant hours;
As it was, he grew sicker and sicker.

HE Moving Picture public will not stand for anything but the best; your patrons, who seek enjoyment and relaxation from care, will not come again if you give them poor pictures.

In Power's Cameragraph No. 6 all flicker has been eliminated; the pictures are clear, sharp and absolutely steady. The result is satisfaction to your patrons, steady business and increased profits for you.



"Power's No. 6" is built to wear; it is the finished product of fourteen years' leadership in the manufacture of motion picture machines.

In every corner of the civilized world, "Power's No. 6" leads the procession; it is the recognized standard of merit—the last word in moving picture machines.

Gentlemen: I just saw the two reels of HANDS ACROSS THE SEA run off. There were present with me several good picture critics, including one of the official police censors of Chicago. All of us watched the picture closely in its every detail.

I want to compliment you upon this production, and no production of the kind that I have ever seen begins to compare favorably with it. I say this with a knowledge of the fact we have had some very excellent productions. You have simply given us that which is most desirable and needed: QUALITY. It is a great picture and I am glad to own a print of same.

Hoping you will continue the good work, I remain,

Yours very truly, STANDARD FILM EXCHANGE,

Will You Let Them ALL In If They Promise to be GOOD?

Great Scott! why shouldn't we break our necks, if necessary, to make good pictures? The encouragement you've given us in the past few weeks is wonderful. Orders from exchanges for our 2,000-foot submarine picture (released Monday, Nov. 20) have shattered all records for films made in America. And the orders for our regular "Saturday Split Imp" are beginning to pile in already! Thousands of exhibitors have written us, saying they'll be glad to get three Imps every week and will feature them as long as they are good. How about you? Three Imps are knocking at YOUR door. Will YOU let them ALL in if they promise to be GOOD? Answer!

"THE DUMB MESSENGER"

(Copyright, 1911, Imp Films Co.)

A cleverly concocted story of a gentleman burglar, a wealthy woman and a crooked butler. Staged and enacted in the Imp's best manner. Released Monday, Dec. 4th. Do you suppose you'll get it?

"TONY AND THE STORK"

(Copyright, 1911, Imp Films Co.)

Your favorite King Baggott assumes the role of "Tony," and helps put over one of the most delightful little stories we've ever sprung. Released Thursday, Dec. 7th. Do you suppose you'll get it?

"OUR SATURDAY SPLIT"

(Released SATURDAY, Dec. 9)

The first 600 feet are devoted to "Her Birthday" (copyright 1911), the kind of comedy that has helped build up the Imp to its unquestionable leadership. The other 400 feet are devoted to some remarkably interesting views of the Interscholastic Cross Country Road Run held Saturday, November 18th, under the auspices of Columbia University. The two together form the ideal split reel, the kind you have been clamoring for. Do you suppose you'll get it?

¶ A man or organization can do no better than his best.

¶ Since my plant at Wakefield burned down, I have been doing my best, but that best has been under the most nerve-racking conditions imaginable.

¶ All this time, though, I've been sawing wood. I have long aspired to lead them all, and when the task of building a new plant faced me, I determined to do the job so that this ambition would be realized.

¶ I set to work determinedly, forgetting the value of the dollar. I just reached out for the best men and things, and paid the price asked like a major. Then I put in my time to see that I got good value for my money.

¶ I got it—and bigger value than I expected. I'm now in proud possession of the first in the business. My acting and mechanical staff is now complete, and I'll give you details regarding it in a few days.

An Actor in a New Role

This roaring farce pictures the adventures of a stranded Thespian who turned book-agent. He was thrown out often but always bobbed up again. You bet, he sold the books. Length about 600 feet.

The Crab Industry

An educational film showing how crabs are caught, cooked, packed and shipped. Excellent photography. The final scene shows an ancient "cullud pusson" devouring a big crab. Length about 400 feet.

Released Thursday, November 30 Length about 1000 feet

A Nicotine Conspiracy

In which the God of Love is assisted by My Lady Nicotine. A dandy plot, splendidly interpreted. It will increase the popularity and prestige of your house.

Released Saturday, December 2 Length about 1000 feet

Western Chivalry

Oh, this is a peach! In order to win Ethel, Burt had the cowboys dress up as Indians and attack the automobile in which were Ethel, her father and her fiance, dear Harold. Brave Burt (!) rescued them and grateful father bestowed the fair Ethel upon him. It's the best love-comedy produced in a long time.

Released Monday, December 4th Length about 1000 feet

A Head for Business

How the young artist with the aid of his sweetheart turned a $40,000 trick on his hard-headed business brother. Full of the vital human emotions. Throbbing with life and action. They'll surely like it.

CAST.

John Bond, a Politician ..... Bigelow Cooper
His Bride ..... Miriam Nesbitt
Nellie O'Brien ..... Mary Fuller
George O'Brien ..... Harold M. Shaw
The Younger O'Briens ..... Philip Tannura, Kathleen Coughlin
Treasurer of the Tuberculosis Committee ..... Joseph M. Levering

Nurses, Officers on board the yacht, Politicians.

Our film contribution of this year to aid in the sale of Christmas Stamps and to help the fight against tuberculosis. The story is dramatic, while the educational value of the film is enormous.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 6th

"JOHN BROWN'S HEIR"

CAST.

John Brown ..... John R. Cumpson
His Uncle ..... Robert Brower
His Cousin ..... Edward Boulden
His Aunt ..... Alice Washburn
Her Daughter ..... Elsie McLeod
The Maid ..... Bliss Milford
A Newspaper Editor ..... William Wadsworth

A Western comedy. Through mixing two newspaper accounts, the relatives of John Brown, who had just "struck it rich," believed that he was at the point of death and they all suddenly became very fond of him indeed. The end is laughable in the extreme.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8th

"THE HEART OF NICHETTE"

CAST.

Mlle. Nichette ..... Camilla Dalberg
Dr. Reynolds ..... Marc McDermott
A Waif ..... Edna May Weick
Her Drunken Father ..... Charles M. Seay

Members of the Parisian Ballet and Orchestra.

This is a distinctly novel story, and shows life in its extreme contrasts. The great-hearted dancer saves the life of a little child of the tenements by taking the whole "Parisian Ballet" to her squalid room. There is a real heart tug in it.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 9th

"THE DAISY COWBOYS"

CAST.

Millie from the East ..... Mary Fuller
Her Uncle ..... Wadsworth Harris
Her Aunt ..... Mrs. Wallace Erskine
Cowboys ..... John R. Cumpson, William Wadsworth, Edward O'Connor, Edward Boulden

When Millie visited the ranch, and all the cowboys fell in love with her, a practical joke was gotten up on her particular admirer. But the joke recoiled on the makers. It is a good Western comedy.

THE PEER OF ALL

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

Galveston, Texas, Tribune, Friday, Sept. 29, 1911.

"The Hulsey series of moving picture theaters of Galveston has shown its intention of co-operating with the city in every possible means to insure against the arising or spreading of fire by procuring eight "fool and fireproof" picture machines. They are the first of their kind in the South. The only danger, practically, that can befall a moving picture theater is a film fire, and the fact that the same is shown from the rear of the theater is a constant source of danger. With the Simplex machines, two of which are being installed in each of the Hulsey theaters, this is impossible even through carelessness of the operator."

"Another feature with this latest innovation in the moving picture world is the arrangement of the shutter which is so connected with the machine as to almost wholly obviate the eye worry, so often met in moving picture theaters."

Denver, Colo., Oct. 6, 1911.

SIMPLEX SALES AGENCY, 23 E. 14th Street, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—We requested the Chief of the Fire Department of Denver to send a representative to this office to inspect the Simplex machine. He complied with our request, and the examiner reported to the Chief that the Simplex machine was the ideal device for projecting motion pictures. Fire Chief Owens stated that he would recommend to the City Council that the various picture shows in Denver adopt this machine. We have been advised by the Chief's representatives that he would request the Insurance Company officials to call at this office and pass their opinion on the Simplex as a safety, fireproof machine. Yours truly,

WM. H. SWANSON FILM CO.,
By H. T. Nolan, Manager, 145 W. 45th Street, New York.

PRECISION MACHINE CO. SALES AGENCY, 23 E. 14th Street, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—The Simplex machine was inspected by the Canadian authorities, and they pronounced it absolutely fireproof. They stated that on account of the fireproof construction of the machine they may recommend that the booth be dispensed with entirely, and that the machine be installed on a platform so that the operator will be in full view of the audience at all times, and anyone can see whether he is violating any fire regulations. Yours truly,

E. H. MOZART, Monopole Film Company.

"Just the machine this department has been looking for."
N. Y. City Official Inspector, Bureau Water, Gas and Electricity.

SIMPLEX OFFICE, 23 E. 14th Street, New York City.

Gentlemen:—Since we first exploited the moving picture as an amusement attraction sixteen years ago, at the Eden Musee, we have used many projecting machines. Money has been no object to procure the best results, and, as a consequence, we have the reputation of showing the clearest, steadiest and most satisfactory pictures in the country. The new "Simplex Projector," the first one of which was operated here, and has been steadily used for the last three months, is undoubtedly the best machine we have ever operated. EDEN MUSEE AMERICAN CO.,

E. J. Crane, Manager.

SIMPLEX SALES AGENCY, 23 E. 14th Street, New York City.

Gentlemen:—We have just installed one of your "Simplex" projecting machines, choosing it after an exhaustive examination of all other makes. For absolute perfection and precision, coupled with extreme simplicity, it is everything that can be desired—a fact when TESTING films to determine the accuracy of perforation and printing machines of the UTMOST importance.

Yours truly, THE "REX" MOTION PICTURE MFG. CO.,

MANHATTAN SLIDE CO., 124 E. 14th Street, New York City.

New York, Boro of Brooklyn, Oct. 3, 1911.

Gentlemen:—The "Simplex" Moving Picture Machine that I bought through you is undoubtedly the best projector we have ever used in Prospect Hall. After using the other machines, I cheerfully state that the "Simplex" is decidedly the best and gives us entire satisfaction.

Yours very truly, WM. D. KOLLE, Prop.

Facts and Comments

ON another page we print in full a letter from a lady who writes from Santa Cruz, California. We believe that the views expressed in the letter represent pretty accurately the attitude of the better elements in the population toward the moving picture. It has taken time and unremitting effort to win the friendship of this most valuable element, but the results, which are now appearing simultaneously in various parts of the country, show that the labor has been well repaid. What our correspondent says about pictures and actors is the idea of thousands of others who are regular patrons. The spirit of toleration and sympathy, which runs all through the letter, is in marked and pleasing contrast to the ignorant invective, which has not yet fully died out among the intelligent classes. Women have always been the staunch friends of the motion picture, and to gain a recruit of the social standing and intelligence of this writer is a matter for congratulation. We could name many women to whom the industry owes much in the exhibiting as well as in the manufacturing branch, but their modesty, one of the most becoming ornaments of the sex, will not allow us to give them public credit. They prefer to work quietly, and the satisfaction that comes to them from the consciousness of good work well done is their best and only reward.

THE western sheriff, the cowboy and the Indian continue in the centre of the moving picture. We observe in the list of last week's releases such familiar titles as "The Ranchman's Daughter," "The Ranchman's Mother-in-law," "The Eastern Cowboy," "Cowboy Life," "The Halfbreed's Daughter," "The Girl and the Sheriff," "The Desert Claim" and "The Desert Well." This list might easily be further increased with titles suggestive of sheriff, cowboy and Indian. In the name of the eternal fitness of things has not this cowboy-Indian obsession gone far enough? What is the reason of it all? Do manufacturers find it easiest and cheapest to work their "Western" plant, or do they imagine that two-thirds of the population are dime-novel-reading boys between the ages of ten and sixteen? For years and years now we have had a perfect riot of these "Wild West" things with no intermission or closed season of any kind. It is a law of nature that the very best become tiresome, if there is too much of it. In the homely phrase of the day, "Too much of a good thing is bad." Seven at least out of every ten patrons are tired of "Blue Eagle" and "White Eagle" and "Yellow Eagle" and "Black Wolf" and of the sheriff and his connections, such as the "Sheriff and the Outlaw," "The Sheriff and the Cowboy," "The Sheriff and the Hobo," and so on ad nauseum. The breathing, interesting life all around us and the treasures of the past are too often ignored to continue this procession of impossible, stilted, melodramatic, stereotyped men and women. Give the public just a little rest.

* * *

AN exhibitor writes to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD defending the delineation in moving pictures of such characters as "Alkali Ike," a fictitious gentleman of Western origin fiercely addicted to chewing tobacco with all the habit implies. Says our correspondent: "Supposing a character does chew tobacco and spit; is he the less enjoyable and true to nature?" The answer, gentle friend, in both cases is NO. Of course there may be people who enjoy the constant companionship of a chewer and spitter of tobacco, but we have never met any such. We still believe that the habit of chewing tobacco is filthy, disgusting and altogether reprehensible. If "Alkali Ike" has other lovable qualities, his fondness for masticating the fragrant (?) weed detracts from them and is distinctly not enjoyable. Nor is "Ike" true to nature in the proper sense of the word. Even in the sense in which our correspondent uses the word there is no such truth to nature as would be fit for reproduction in moving pictures. A pig-sty in that sense is "true to nature," and worse things are "true to nature," but the inborn decency of mankind bars the reproduction of such things on the stage or in any public place.

* * *

THE decision of the United States Supreme Court sustaining the law which was designed to protect literary property, and declaring a filming of copyrighted books and dramas to be such a "public representation" as to fall within the purview of the statute, is not, as the theatrical press agent is eager to assure us, a "blow to the manufacturers of moving pictures." The Kalem film, "Ben Hur," was made in the extreme infancy of the industry, when things were in a chaotic and unsettled condition and sensationalism was the order of the day. Little attention was paid to the protection of the copyright. There has been a most radical change since then, and manufacturers now would, in the great majority of cases, respect the code of ethics in the world of literature even if that code were not reinforced by the law of the United States. If the manufacturers really want a story or a drama, protected by the law of copyright, they have, as a rule, no difficulty in acquiring the right to film the subject. They have shown themselves both willing and able to pay for the filming rights of a copyrighter production.

*

The film makers are not, however, in any sense of the word or to any appreciable extent dependent on their ability to acquire the filming rights of copyrighted subjects. Slowly but surely there is developing a new school of competent scenario writers who understand thoroughly the needs of the film producer. These needs are peculiar and require special study, and cannot be successfully supplied without some degree of practical experience on the part of the scenario-writer. With the growth of a new school of moving picture playwrights, and with the vast materials which the fiction, the literature and the history of the world afford, it is not likely that the manufacturers are in any danger of running short of plays.

THE functions of criticisms and of sensible and justifiable censorship as well, have in all civilized communities been exercised by the press almost from the century in which printing was invented. Today, when the press is in a more highly developed state than ever before, it is more than ever before the representative of that public opinion which is the tribunal of last resort in all matters pertaining to the theatre, the literature and all public affairs. It may be fairly claimed that public opinion has delegated its critical and censorial functions to the press and that the common concensus of the press ought to be the final verdict, except in extraordinary cases. This being so, all efforts to censor and criticise motion pictures in other quarters must be looked upon as a failure of jurisdiction. The papers that devote part of their space to the reviewing and criticising of motion pictures and, in a much greater degree THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, have attended to the censorship and criticism with fairness, justice and thoroughness. The tendency of all criticism has been toward the inculcation of higher ideals. We have never hesitated to apply the scourge when the protection of public decency seemed to require it. It seems to us that THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD and other papers, even if they only devote part of their space to the motion picture, ought to be recognized as the most proper and powerful censors and critics by the various boards and civic and reforming bodies that believe themselves called upon to censor the pictures. A National Board of Censorship is impossible, except on stationery, for there is no authority in the federal constitution for national censors. Their verdict may be set at naught by the constables or village board in the most obscure corner of the land. By this we do not mean in any way to detract from the well-earned prestige of the present Board of National Censorship, whose work has been conscientious and has on the whole been endorsed by public opinion.

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Win Victory.

They Escape Proposed Tax of $500 by Decision of Philadelphia Court of Common Pleas.

Moving picture men throughout the Keystone State are rejoicing over the decision of Judge Staake of the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia. The decision which was handed down Tuesday afternoon, November 21st, is to the effect that the Act of 1907, assessing a yearly tax of five hundred dollars on certain places of amusement does not apply to moving picture theatres, whether such theatres run only pictures or pictures and vaudeville together.

Credit for the victory is largely due to the efforts of Mr. J. Louis Breitinger, a member of the legislature from the Nineteenth District in Philadelphia, and attorney for the Exhibitor's League of Pennsylvania. Mr. Breitinger had prepared a test case, in which the legal status of the moving picture entertainment was submitted to the court. The question was whether the defendants in the action, Donnelly and Collins, were the owners or lessees of a building the whole or part of which is used for theatrical or operatic entertainments or for the exhibition of museums. Mr. Breitinger contended that the moving picture places, such as conducted by his clients, could not be held as giving theatrical or operatic entertainments within the legal definition of the terms. He also pointed out that the moving picture places have to pay a hundred dollars license fee to the city each year, and that under the circumstances they could not be called upon to pay the additional five-hundred-dollar tax provided in the Act of 1907. In his opinion Judge Staake cites a previous decision made in the State courts of Pennsylvania to the effect that "a moving picture show is not in any proper sense of the word a theatrical entertainment." Occasional acts of vaudeville, the judge adds, do not alter the general character of the entertainment. Judgment was accordingly entered for the defendants.

Pictures for Churches

By W. [illegible]

IT is characteristic of the popular ignorance, so assiduously fostered and promoted by the yellow press, that any proposed use of the motion picture for purposes higher than amusement is regarded in a spirit of surprise and wonder and gives occasion to startled comment. Thus every priest or pastor who seeks to make practical use of the cinematograph for churchly ends is sure of a press notice, in the course of which such phrases as "a startling innovation" and "a departure from time-honored methods" are pretty sure to occur.

It seems that recently in a large city of the New England States "the first Baptist church took the initiative in determining the value of moving pictures as a modern method of religious work." Quoting further from the paragraph before us, we learn that "a series of motion plays were exhibited before a gathering of church officials, educators and laymen." Two pictures were mentioned, "Eugene Wrayburn," the filming of a well-known episode from Dickens' story, "Our Mutual Friend," and "The Work of the Red Cross Society."

The attitude of this church toward the motion pictures is deeply interesting because typical of that of many churches in all denominations. There is an unmistakable desire to welcome the picture and to make it an aid and ally of the church. Even where sound sense is still obscured by prejudice there is a disposition to learn more about the possibilities of this new educative force.

We welcome this interest and promise to do all in our power to keep it alive and lead it to practical results. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD aims to be the medium through which churches as well as schools may call upon the cinematograph as probably the most effective aid in communicating knowledge and creating religious sentiment.

It is but fair and proper to say in connection with this topic that at least four manufacturers have devoted considerable time and effort to the making of pictures with a religious coloring: the Pathes, the Gaumont, the Edison and the Vitagraph. The Pathe Passion Play, despite some minor deficiencies, has demonstrated its worth and has in numerous instances received the praise of ministers of various denominations—no small matter, when you remember that in modern Christianity ministers seem as fond of disagreeing as doctors. I mention as typical religious films of the other companies, Gaumont's "The Blind Man of Jerusalem," Edison's "The Burning of Rome" and Vitagraph's "Life of Moses." As far as quantity is concerned I believe the Vitagraph merits the palm, having probably turned out more religious and semi-religious pictures than all the other manufacturers put together.

With no desire to detract from the merits of any of the pictures named, it is doubtful whether a majority of them could reasonably expect the unqualified approval of the christian churches. The production of a religious picture, correct in its costumings and settings, historically accurate and imbued with the proper spiritual atmosphere is a task of gigantic proportions. A picture which is to stand the test of scholarly criticism cannot be made without the assistance of scholarly minds well versed in history, especially in ecclesiastical history. When I speak of historical knowledge in this connection I do not mean merely a recollection of dates and names, but that deeper knowledge, which means a thorough understanding of the heart and spirit of a past age.

Needless to say, when I speak here of religious pictures I mean to be understood as speaking of pictures specially and solely used for churchly and even denominational purposes. As far as the general public demand for pictures of religious tendencies is concerned I believe that to be amply satisfied by the present supply. These latter may be crude and theatrical, but it would seem absurd to apply the standards of higher criticism to them. When we deal, however, with pictures for the exclusive use of churches the situation changes. If the best possible is to be produced—and nothing less than that is worth while—the churches must exchange their destructive work for constructive effort and share the burden with the manufacturers. They must become builders instead of critics. Of course, even if they gave their best and ripest scholarship, it would be of little use without the practical knowledge of the manufacturers. The day may come when the film maker will unite in one person or at least in one studio all the requisites for the production of splendid religious pictures, but even to such an optimistic enthusiast as the writer of this article, that day appears to be in the distant future.

An intelligent director of a little more than average education may with the assistance of competent scholars who need by no means be ministers, produce a series of pictures absolutely correct in every detail and acceptable for church purposes. Mutual helpfulness and toleration and respect would be indispensable. In determining the scope of such pictures or the length of any given series the advice of the scholar and historian should be controlling. In the time arrangement, in the developing and emphasizing the dramatic moments the director's word should be paramount. A rational division of labor would ensure good results.

If a genuine demand for religious pictures, to be used by churches alone, really exists, it should make itself known in no uncertain manner. The churches themselves control the situation, the possibilities of the cinematograph are at their disposal.

As to the question above propounded, "Is it possible to make the motion picture an important factor in religious work?" there can be but one answer. From time immemorial art, even in its crudest form, has been the friend of religion. In the days of ancient Greece, when the human mind was in its zenith, art and religion were one. The picture, the statue, the temple, were the sacraments of the pagan religion. Even Christianity has not disdained to use art, especially the picture, the statue and the temple in the unfoldings of its doctrine, its ritual and its worship. Indeed, medieval christianity has given the world painters greater than those of the days of Pericles and sculptors scarcely inferior to Phidias.

All the eloquence of the painting is united with the plastic beauty of the statue in the motion picture—the motion, the most important factor in impressing the senses and the memory super-added thereto.

Of course we have had no Correggio or Rembrandt or Michael Angelo of the motion picture, but who shall say that we never will have them? When I ponder over the marvelous progress of this industrial art, candor compels the statement that many a manufacturer has grown with his task and has risen to his opportunities. The word "impossible" is becoming obsolescent in all things connected with the cinematograph.

While a Republican candidate was addressing a crowd before the court house in Barbourville, Ky., and entertaining them with moving pictures, all (10) of the Knox County prisoners escaped through a hole in the rear wall. We tremble when we contemplate the set-back this episode will give the moving picture.

A party from Otsego, Mich., wearing blue goggles and plaid neck comforter, has been looking around Goshen, Ind., with the idea of investing in a moving picture show.

SCENARIO WRITING TAUGHT BY MAIL.

Eleven Lessons.

By W. S. B., With Apologies to E. W. S.

In starting your efforts as a scenario writer, go to the nearest post office and purchase one hundred dollars' worth of stamps. If for any reason you stop in or near the middle of your career, you will be able to exchange Uncle Sam's tinted heraldry without loss back into buttons, which will surely help to keep the wolf at a distance. Next buy the standard works on Vegetarianism, studying the food values of prunes, rice and nuts. Try to get the back number of the New York World showing how to live comfortably on 12 cents a day and make an annual saving for purchase of an automobile and the cancellation of your second mortgage.

If you live in New York City or any other large town move out and take up your residence in the interior of New Jersey or Connecticut, where a whole house may be rented at $10 a month or less. The acquisition of a typewriting machine with an extra supply of ribbons and extra thin paper will complete your working outfit. We advise buying a Bible, the "Book of Job" will be found appropriate and cheerful reading by the writer of scenarios.

Before starting to write your first scenario, carefully study the family tree of the various scenario editors, directors, producers and principal actors and actresses. If you can discover and prove relationship with any of them either through yourself or your wife your prospects will brighten at once. If you fail to discover any kinship, except such as is derived from our common ancestors, Mr. and Mrs. Adam and Eve, formerly of Paradise, try to get into personal touch with such moguls as above named.

Now write your first scenario and send it to any manufacturer you like, as soon as it comes back with the rejection slip, read carefully such printed or typewritten advice and directions as the editor may have seen fit to put on the slip. Carefully thereafter follow these instructions. If you are counseled to write "clean and snappy comedies," write them. Don't ask what he means by "clean and snappy comedy," because he would never answer you any way. In the next lesson we will show you what to do with your first check. If you ever get one.

FLICKERS.

We are accustomed to the lay press referring to reels as "rolls," but the Pittsburg Dispatch scribe who calls a reel of film "a coil of views" is entitled to the coffee cake for this session.

In accordance with a municipal ordinance all picture houses in Marietta, Ohio, will have to be periodically fumigated. Strangely enough the residents do not see any personal reflection in this. Still it could be worse. There are some places in New York where the audience ought to be fumigated one by one as they pass in. How would it be to give a free bath with every ticket?

The Child

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

I WAS not astonished to read a broad-minded editorial in one of the leading dramatic papers referring to the photoplay as an educator of the public in appreciation of the drama, but now comes one of the great New York dailies with over a page of editorial opinion on the moving picture as the great educator of the future, "in development of the mind and stirring the imagination," though it could have been better put "through developing the mind by stirring the imagination." It is a pleasure to read opinions from such sources unaffected by prejudice in the place of attacks on moving pictures based on a few harmful ones shown. I have listened to flings from actors on the stage expressing contempt for exhibitions which suit millions of our people, but those same actors deride the public they are compelled to entertain in order to make a living, and there is always something shallow if not offensive about the man who tries to give an impression that he is superior to his work. It is easy to get the measure of an individual who tries to lower his fellow-men by self-laudation, especially one who decries those who furnish him with bread and butter. There are tens of millions of intelligent people in this country and millions of them are going every day to the picture shows. That the papers have been slow to recognize the new art as a tremendous factor in our daily lives is due to stupidity, but not to that of the public. That some of the more progressive periodicals are recognizing the importance of photography in education is a cheering sign of enlightenment.

It is of high importance to each one of us that we eat, sleep and have clothes to wear, but little else that we do besides providing these is of importance to the world except as it relates to the future and especially to the men and women of the future—the children of today. We all say that we love them; there are times that we do as a matter of instinct and times that we do not from selfish reasons. There are times when I feel like kicking the stuffing out of the kid who keeps kicking the back of my chair in the theater, and then the baby squalls at the most exciting moment when the Indians are coming, but those minor details have little to do with the question. If we are progressive and generous we like to see others progress with us, and if we are broad we like to see humankind benefited that happiness may be more equitably and widely scattered. The men who founded this nation were broad and generous, and moving pictures are telling us more effectively than literature of their nobility of character. The men who fought our wars and the women who gave up what they valued most in the world during those times of trial are shown to us in the photodrama as nowhere else—lest we forget. It is a good thing for us to look into the lives of other people, to see how they suffer and struggle, in order to keep us human and sympathetic, and every playwright, producer and actor who contributes to a true story pictured on the screen reveals something of himself therein that adds to its value. I have seen people who would not like to have it known how unfamiliar they were with the Bible, whose knowledge of it was really limited to a few verses lisped in Sunday school, watch a drama of sacred history as if it was a revelation to them. Travel pictures are as yet crude, lacking explanatory text and not selected with great care, yet they are both fascinating and instructive. The moving pictures are teaching us in a thousand ways—what a marvelous factor they are destined to become in the education of the child!

A great Frenchman says that societies only have the criminals they deserve, meaning that a criminal is not a type but a result. An enormous number of criminals come from no especial class, but from circumstances imposed on them in childhood when it is easiest to correct refractory dispositions or relegate a hereditary degenerate to medical attendance. Much that is regarded as faulty if not wicked, such as lying, stealing, and deception, is a provision of nature for the weak in a struggle for existence where survival is due to artifice rather than strength. Children showing such qualities in a marked degree often become fine lawyers or politicians if left alone, or may have their characters so modified by exterior influences as to take up some respectable occupation in mature life. Organized society of intelligence is now protecting itself against crime by prevention rather than punishment, hence the outcry against pictures designed to make crime heroic. Photoplays encouraging crime are severely censured, and justly when it is considered how new is the art. "Get-Rich-Quick-Wallingford," showing the attractive side of swindling on the stage, "Leontine and Company," in the Saturday Evening Post, portraying crime as a high art, and the efforts of daily papers to put a halo of interest on the head of every political boss, desperate murderer, or decadent title-hunter in the land are beyond censorship because they are time-honored institutions. To teach crime in the picture is an outrage, to present it in attractive colors on the stage or in the papers is business.

It has probably occurred to more than one man that the word "criminal" is rather loosely applied to the individual who gets caught with the goods, but, however that may be, the relation of the child to the criminal is now exciting a vast amount of attention among intelligent people, and moving pictures cannot escape being considered as an influence on both because of the accessibility of the low-priced exhibitions. But it may have occurred to others that the criminal who is not driven by desperation to acts against society has the child's natural quality of intense egotism implanted for self-preservation. The man who is over-impressed by his usefulness to himself, who is so lacking in consideration for others that his distinguishing characteristic is uselessness to the world, is just as much in need of the educational influences of moving pictures as the child or the criminal, as he is a sort of a cross between the two, entertaining a jealous hatred of enlightened men and the sole creature impressed with his own importance when he acquires wealth. Such men are more dangerous than criminals because of the false success they achieve while unaware that man has emerged from an individual into a social existence, ignorant that they owe as much as has been given them, and creating criminals by narrow-minded cruelty and oppression. We do not want our children to grow up like the meanest examples of society as it is now constituted, and I think the trend of photoplays more than those of the stage is towards exalting what is brave, manly, generous and noble.

Plays of that kind invariably receive the applause of our American children, showing that the material for splendid men is in them, notwithstanding the paternal examples set before them. The child is all right, and this young art should be in such close sympathy with the child that they will grow up together, superior to the present product and a credit to the nation of their birth and development.

Reviews of Notable Films

"CINDERELLA" (Selig).

SEVERAL months ago William N. Selig resolved to spring a delightful surprise on the young folks far and near during the joys of Christmas and the New Year's tide. He knew that the merry jingle of the bells of Santa Claus would harmonize sweetly with the prance of the hoofs of the tiny, mettled steeds attached to the fair Cinderella's gilded coach, and so he set about the big task of presenting the story of that fabled darling in pictures.

But where was he to find the Cinderella? It would have been an easy task, indeed, to find a tinselled beauty that would meet the requirements of the role, as presented in pantomime, but to discover the one who, in addition to a petite graceful body, and pretty girlish face, had the talent to impersonate the original to the life was indeed difficult. There was just one little lady in the country that could fill the bill, and that was Miss Mabel Taliaferro.

Mr. Selig had heard that Miss Taliaferro on several occasions had expressed the wish of being given the chance some day to appear in a dramatic presentation of "Cinderella," as she believed the pretty story lost much of its realism by the customary pantomimic treatment. He immediately got in touch with the lady and arrangements were made for her engagement. In the meantime the story of "Cinderella" had been specially written for the production by Henry K. Webster, and afterwards adapted and produced by Colin Campbell.

Over five weeks were occupied in the production, and three hundred people were employed. The subject has 99 scenes, and these make three full reels.

One feels the weight of responsibility in reviewing this great filmed subject, lest through oversight much that is meritorious and praiseworthy may escape notice. After seeing the three reels run off, twice in succession, I can vouch that the scenes grow on one by repetition. There is such a wealth of settings, both outdoor and interior; such a great variety of properties and costumes, selected with the utmost care, so much of action and heart interest throughout these 3,000 feet of film that one cannot possibly take in at one sitting more than a small fraction of the actual values.

Always prominent throughout, and holding one with heart grips is the Cinderella of Mabel Taliaferro. She is a distressful, coy, hoydenish, mischievous, adorable bit of femininity, this Cinderella, that Miss Taliaferro has created. Just watch her when she takes another look at the ring given her by Prince Charming. How those eyes grow soft at the memory of the giver, and how the face lights up with a hope that chases away the specters of her grim surroundings! With what maidenly simplicity and innocence does she take farewell of him at the first meeting place, and with what delicious reserve does she tease him at the royal ball, in the palace! Then how sweet the surrender she makes on the balcony, when she permits the first kiss, just before her face becomes clouded with horror, as she catches sight of the great town clock, about to toll the hour of midnight! It is all delightfully real, and, when the producer, by clever dissolving scenes, introduces us to the fairy godmother and to the wonders wrought by her, we view it as a mere matter of course, because our hearts are full of the wrongs of the helpless girl and we are of the opinion that she deserves the utmost that a miracle can work in her behalf.

T. J. Carriagan is an excellent Prince Charming. His expression of love is as deep as a spring and as soft as velvet.

In his disguise as a milk vendor, he keeps one amused all the time he is in the camera's field, and little mirthful incidents follow in his train that greatly heighten one's pleasure.

The two stepsisters and the stepmother are ably sustained by Josephine Miller, Olive Cox and Lillian Leighton. The latter is especially strong and does not mince matters in her cruel treatment of the motherless Cinderella.

Little Baby Griffin is about one of the sweetest fairy godmothers that anyone could have, and I can see in imagination the great, fascinated, bulging eyes of millions of tots as they see her appear and disappear magically in the glowing kitchen, where she makes a beautiful coach out of a pumpkin and prancing little horses out of tiny white mice.

These films are ones to swear by, my friends, exhibitors. Matinees for children should be widely advertised. The grownups will enjoy them equally as well. By all means, if your house will permit it, show the entire three reels at one exhibition. Ten cents should be charged for admission, and the show will be cheap at that.

The date of release of "Cinderella" cannot be stated at this writing, but it will be announced in due time.

THE LADY FROM THE SEA.

An Adaptation of the Ibsen Play by the Thanhouser Co. Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

QUITE irrespective of the merits of this film, which shall presently be considered at some length, it is meet to say just a word about the play and its presentation at the Lyric in this city. The Moving Picture World on divers occasions has recorded its emphatic dissent from the philosophy of Ibsen and would recoil with the proverbial horror from the thought of trying to film such plays as "The Pillars of Society" and "The Ghosts," and would with a bitter sob even prefer a "Western drama." The savage and intolerant criticism of the "Lady from the Sea," however, we cannot allow to pass without a challenge.

The dramatic power of Ibsen and his technique are no longer subjects of controversy in the literary and critical world. In "The Lady from the Sea" Ibsen displays his ripened dramaturgic faculties and yields nowhere to that strange penchant for the purely morbid and repellant, which alone threatens his claim to be numbered in the first flight of dramatists.

Now a word as to the story of the play. It centers about a girl, who had been familiar with the sea from her childhood—if indeed one may speak of a mere mortal becoming "familiar" with a mysterious and pitiless element. In all ages men have credited women with intuition, the possessing of a sense-like faculty by which they can understand or at least communicate with nature more easily than men. Now imagine the sensitive soul of a little girl, brought up by the sea, among the tragedies of the ceaseless waves, in the solitude of a lighthouse. Is it strange that her mind takes on a pensive hue? If such a state of mind can be brought in conflict with the accepted conventions of society, it is surely possible to create dramatic situations of supreme interest. What is there improbable or dramatically incompetent in her meeting another child of the sea, a mysterious and magnetic stranger, as he appeared to the fancy of the "Lady from the Sea"?

The "ring-marriage by the sea" may have an element of weirdness about it, but who will say it lacks fascination and dramatic interest? What finally is more probable and more satisfying, both dramatically and ethically than the end? The woman wants to cast off the evil influence on her mind not through seeking the protection of her husband, but through the exercise of her own free will. If Ibsen had ended the play by having Dr. Wangel come forward at the critical moment and exclaim melodramatically "Avaunt, she is my wife," the thing would immediately have dropped with a dull thud to the level of the Desperate Desmond school of drama and we would presently have looked for a cigarette in the mouth of the mysterious stranger. The triumph of sanity over threatening moral unsoundness is none the less dramatic and convincing, because it comes as the result of the absolutely untrammelled will of the wife.

In no reel of motion pictures has the superiority of the cinematograph to the speaking stage been demonstrated more forcefully than in this Thanhouser production. Indeed, the criticism aimed at the play is completely disarmed by the film, for the manufacturer has made the most of his opportunity to show the influence of the sea over the girl's mind and soul. In the play we never see the lighthouse, and never have a chance to prepare our minds for the mysterious marriage by the sea. What we only hear in the play, we actually see in the film and the supreme moment of the yielding of the girl's heart to the power of the stranger is sure of its effect. The seascapes shown were perhaps lacking in the weird fascination of the Norwegian fjord, but they were well-chosen and created that atmosphere of mystery so essential to the full development of the dramatic moments in the story. Some of the best actresses on the European stage have essayed the role of Ellida, the "Lady from the Sea," and it has taxed their powers to the utmost. The task of the player on the silent stage, though by no means a light one, has made easier because the film shows what she was in the days of her early youth, it develops her character gradually and we seen every important step in the development take place before our very eyes. The very first scene strikes the keynote of the play—a girl under the spell of the sea. The story then runs on with commendable clearness and swiftness and the climax is finely rendered. The scene showing the restless, though now married Ellida, reading in the garden, while the returned stranger is pushing his way through the hedges is of singular beauty and has caught the spirit of the dramatist with striking success.

The part of Ellida is well taken. The combination of moodiness and wilfulness, of which in the early part of the story the character of Ellida is composed, has been understood and brought home to the spectator, and the latter hardening of the girl's will when she resists the power of the murderous sailor and finds peace on her husband's bosom after freeing herself by an effort of her own individuality was portrayed with skill. Dr. Wangel solved the problem of his part by a sensible and logical subordination of his part to the central figure; he begins to dominate the situation only in the very last moments, a fact which was intelligently seized by the actor. The last scene is strong and rounds out the play most satisfactorily. The Thanhouser Company deserve great credit for filming such a subject with such success. The moving picture public is sick unto death of the conventional and the monotonous, more so perhaps even than the theater-going public. A departure from the beaten path is a service to the industry at large.

"IN THE GRIP OF ALCOHOL" (C. G. P. C.).

THIS new C. G. P. C. film is destined to fill a large place in applied cinematography. As a drama of life it is of intense interest and will hold an audience spellbound while it forces home the truths of its powerful lessons. From an educational standpoint it will prove a most thorough teacher of the havoc and ravages of alcohol. As a factor in moral life it will be welcomed and supported by all who are interested in the redemption of all drink-cursed people; while from a religious standpoint it is a sermon at once illustrative, eloquent and convincing. While the scene is French in conception, it is universal in its application, as no matter under what guise the alcohol may appear, its blighting and cursed effects are everywhere the same.

In the beginning a bright home of father, mother, son and daughter are happy in the prosperity and love of a home free from any evil taint. Returning from business, the husband and father is persuaded against his will to take his first drink, under the innocent guise of a social glass. While playing an equally innocent game, unaccustomed, however, to the strength of alcohol, he is soon under the brain-beclouding spell, which is the first common effect of the evil agency. It is a sad scene when for the first time the otherwise happy home receives its master in the pitiable condition of a drunkard. The astonished wife and frightened children present a picture which, if the story went no further, should give rise to a bitter feeling of contempt for that which can so quickly change a man and a home from peace and happiness to misery and despair.

The fatally fascinating influences of the insidious evil which everyone knows "grows upon what it feeds and feeds upon what it grows" holds as in a vise the now rapidly changing man. From time to time the mark of debauchery is plainly visible on the face of the husband, while the lines of care and anxiety disfigure the wife, and the dread disease of tuberculosis (the twin demon of alcohol) makes its appearance as it marks the younger child for its own. Losing his position, the downward steps now become leaps. Poverty and misery grow apace, while the craving knows no stopping or even halting place. Years pass by, marking the downward progress, only hindered once by the help of a brother, who leaves money to pay the owing rent, which is confiscated by the drinking husband and spent among his boon companions.

Dispossessed from one home after another, the family is finally found dwelling in abject poverty with its attendant miseries, yet never once is there any evidence that the evil influence of alcohol is abated. On the other hand, its ravages increase; the man becomes an object at once pitiful and repulsive: the faithful wife and mother, as she nurses her dying child, are a strong appeal to all that is to be found in the human heart, to pray for a speedy deliverance from this cruel curse which claims so many victims and destroys so many homes. The end must come; alcohol is relentless; its victims pay the extreme penalty, the innocent suffering with and for the guilty. Returning home in his usually intoxicated condition, the drunkard finds his wife and daughter dead, but only partially realizing the occasion, he, as is usual, returns to the cup and is soon lost in that delirium from which few return, and whose end is the asylum and the grave. The whole story is told without exaggeration, yet with painful truth. The maker has served humanity by this portrayal, as without doubt the pictures may righteously be expected to prove an overpowering enemy of the enemy of man. It must of necessity have required great ability to produce this film. One of the most capable French actors takes the part of the unfortunate man, and his realism is such as to make his portrayal a benefaction to his fellows. "In the Grip of Alcohol" will render a large service to humanity, as wherever it is produced it will prove a destroyer of a curse and become a blessing in its turn.

The Climax: Starvation and Death.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

What to do with and for the boys and girls has always been a problem in the curriculum of life, and probably always will be. Every head of a family knows how the question assails him at every turn. Every educator experiences a diversity of conditions which must be met. When all conditions are reduced to the minimum they are simplified into but two clauses—protection from prejudicial influences, and the cultivation of higher ambitions; to the securing of these ends all legislation of the home, school or public welfare is directed.

The relationship of the young people and the moving picture is in a state of agitation. It is well that it is so, because proper agitation is the inward working of agencies unseen for the outward solution of a problem. Of the many plans put forth none have yet appeared which in any way can satisfy the requirements of the time. The statement made in the New York World that the moving picture people "want the children admitted under any conditions" is a libel upon as good a body of people (if not better) than those who publish newspapers unfit for children to see and read, while no law intercedes or prevents. No sane person wants the same "liberty of the picture" if such liberty should in any way savor of the "liberty of the press" when that vaunted cry is used to make sacred the unholy precincts of a questionable journalism. To such, then, should come the apostolic reminder: "Use not your liberty as a cloak for maliciousness."

The moving picture people desire that the children shall receive the benefit of the greatest educator the world has ever known, but that they shall receive those benefits free from "prejudicial influences" and with a tendency to cultivate the "higher ambitions in life." So far as the pictures are concerned, there are those which children ought to see, with emphasis on the "ought"; there are also those which children should not see; with the explanation concerning these latter that they are pictures beyond the conception or interpretation of an immature mind, and not because of anything improper. Under these conditions it is a question of pictures rather than of children, for it is conceded ALL children must see pictures, but all pictures must not be seen by children; how this can best be brought about will be the subject of another article under this head soon again, when the writer (while not claiming to solve the problem) desires to put forth some ideas which may help in the present agitation to bring together the children and the pictures in a proper manner.

A Gaumont film showing the herring fisheries of Bologne is acceptable to young people who delight in such scenes, which make real to them that which, while familiar in name, is unknown in practice. To become acquainted with conditions under which even the common herring is caught is a lesson readily followed by all, as this and kindred pictures have so often proved.

Education and Science

PICTURES IN THE SCHOOLS.

It is perfectly natural to expect that in New York the first great step in educational cinematography should be realized. For several nights last week free exhibitions of educational moving pictures were given in Brooklyn schools; so pronounced was the success that it seems fitting to say that a beginning has been made which will know no end.

The attendance varied from twelve hundred to nineteen hundred, according to the size of the auditoriums used, in each case the full number of seats being used, and still larger buildings could have been filled. Every proper care was taken to observe lawful conditions. Parents accompanied their children; authorities used every safeguard, so that any mishap seemed impossible. The pictures shown included suitable dramatic, natural history, literature, historical and scenic or travel pictures; each picture, while entertaining, imparted knowledge, so that if ever learning was a "bitter pill" to the laggard scholar "trudging unwillingly to school," it is now so "sugar-coated" with attractions that it is readily "swallowed."

What changes! Not only has school become attractive, but unwilling children are converted into eager students; but there are other conversions to be recorded. Many "wise acres" who saw only the need of critics in the moving picture, are becoming its warmest adherents. That a great impetus has been given to educational moving pictures cannot be denied, and it should be noted that this is not a simple experiment to be tried and forgotten; it is a carefully planned course covering eighteen weeks, and is destined to spread from the few centres selected to the whole of the great city of New York. While great credit is due to all who made the great development possible, it is only just to say that to Madame Dolese, of the General Film Co., belongs the greater measure of praise for so assiduously laboring to bring about this success. That the example of New York will spread all over the country goes without saying. It is enough to record that the moving picture in the school is now an established and permanent feature.

IMPORTANT EDUCATIONAL ADVANCES.

As predicted by some and desired by many, the educational adaptations of the moving picture are both many and increasing. Everywhere this growth is manifest, until it has become a common feature of every class of magazine to chronicle this marvelous development.

A leading woman's magazine has gone so far as to publish articles on "How to See the Moving Picture," thereby indicating that there is an advantageous method of attending the moving picture theater with profit. Periodicals of an educational or semi-educational character are directing the attention of their readers to the helpful features of the moving picture, while newspapers everywhere are universally noticing the growth and adaptability of educational cinematography.

The universal dissemination of knowledge is one of the most important factors in advance education. No paper or magazine, however worthy, is found everywhere. Here, however, the picture has triumphed, from learned city centers to remote hamlets the same pictures are shown. In this respect probably the greatest educational factor in the world today is the weekly and monthly film of world wide events. So valuable and popular have these subjects become that it is a question if (despite the millions who enjoy them) it is not incumbent upon authorities in educational matters everywhere to make it compulsory for young people to see them. Newspapers are not always suitable reading for the young, but the picture method of imparting current knowledge is invaluable. During the last three months important events in every civilized country have been portrayed, in which have appeared the rulers of those countries. Such pictures cannot fail to impart knowledge with a breadth and depth that is immeasurable.

The most recent and instructive educational pictures are those illustrating the growth of plants and the use of the X-Ray apparatus; these latter must give a great impetus to studies in nature and science, and nothing has yet appeared more helpful to the student or teacher.

SCENICS AS EDUCATIONAL SUBJECTS.

The Pathe film illustrative of the Island of St. Kilda, off the extreme northwest coast of Scotland, is an extremely interesting and instructive one. This lonely island, separated from advanced and present day advantages on account of its isolated position and storm-tossed coasts, is peopled by a race of sturdy Scotch, who are almost a law unto themselves. Picturesque in their ruggedness, the cliffs and promontories speak the sturdy habits of a people solely dependent upon their own natural resources for their maintenance.

The capturing of birds with a rod and line like fishing is a novel and unique picture, as is also the collecting of birds' eggs for food from the recesses of a perpindicular mountain-side suspended by a rope, illustrating probably the most hazardous food-collecting exploit in the world.

To see and know this extraordinary island and its people is to be acquainted with one of the most important parts of civilized Britain which remains the same from generation to generation in the beauty of a natural isolation as complete as if it were thousands of miles from any other portion of the world, or even like an inhabited planet.

EDUCATIONAL TOPICS.

A civic club in Cincinnati has become so interested in the educational value of moving pictures that they propose asking all exhibitors in the city to increase the number of educational films. This commendable action is the outcome of a lecture delivered by an eminent professor on the value of the moving picture as an aid to civic, industrial, commercial and scientific advancement. It would be well if everywhere this plan were followed out; it cannot in any way be detrimental to the amusement feature of any program; indeed, positive proof is daily forthcoming of the appreciation shown by all intelligent audiences when such a program is presented.

Agreeably with our opinion that the moving picture should become an auxiliary to the church services and not a part of them, the Montclair Presbyterian church trustees have, after a most successful experiment, decided that Sunday night is not the proper occasion for a cinematographic display. This decision is wise and in accord with what has been said on these pages, the church service and the exhibition have each their own place and function and cannot profitably be mixed; yet they may with great good be used separately and conjunctively by any church desiring lasting good and not a passing sensationalism which always causes "the last state of things to be worse than the first." We desire the lasting good of both the church and the picture.

The time is not far behind us when the moving picture was looked upon as an immoral thing; no criticism or language was too severe in the mouths of some men and upon the pages of some papers. What a change has come in so short a time! It now appears that in Washington, D. C., the educational authorities are going to use the moving pictures to illustrate a "Course in Moral Training." The so-called immoral agent is really the true moral teacher; its evil lay only as it was either misused or misjudged; in proper hands it is a benefactor, and under proper opinions its reputation is increasing in higher and broader value, until it is now a rare thing to note even the slightest adverse criticism, while its commendations are legion.

When the land show opens at the Chicago Coliseum there will be one new feature never before used in such an exhibition and for the installation of which the credit belongs to L. W. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railway. Mr. Hill will make the country traversed by his railway famous by moving pictures which he has had taken of it, and which will show opportunities to prospective home-seekers.

Observations by our Man About Town

I HAVE been writing in various ways for several years past in behalf of the motion picture. I have taken the risk of being called anything without brains, because in my desire to further the progress of a profession I have had an inextinguishable desire for justice. Time and again have I had the effrontery to ridicule, challenge and defy the great daily press of the greatest metropolitan city of the world. I must confess that my zealousness frequently led me to make some queer maps. At times I declared the newspapers were influenced by an impending loss of advertising revenue. At others I declared that actors who saw their jobs slipping away were influencing the daily papers. Sometimes I would say that managers of big theaters were afraid of the pictures.

Now, right in face of all I have said and the existing circumstances, I will declare that everything that has been claimed for the motion picture is sustained. In doing this I quote the daily press. For instance: Sunday World, November 19, 1911.—"Of 15,000 thespians, 5,000 are at liberty. All over the country theaters are turning to moving pictures or are 'playing pictures' once or twice a week." If there is not a prejudice on the part of the dramatic profession against the motion picture, or photoplay, can anyone doubt the earnest effort of some inspired newspaper writers to create it?

The past two weeks in the old Knickerbocker town has been most exciting to the photoplay exhibitors because the horde of reformers, who only move when occasion arises, found it convenient to get busy. It appears that the exhibitors prepared, or had presented, a bill before the Board of Aldermen, a bill which would enable the picture houses to increase the seating capacity from 299 to 600. The bill also provided for the admission of children under the age of sixteen after school hours and before supper time. Holy smokes! What a furor that did create in the sanctified, Tammanyfied, Fusionized hamlet of Manhattan. There was certainly an awful time about it. The Women's Municipal League was put in the foreground with the courageous help of Rev. This and Canon That, who would never have known that any iniquity existed in the borough if the ordinance had not been proposed. The people opposed to the 600 had planned well, but they lacked a logical argument. True a house containing 600 people will harbor more iniquity than a house seating 299, but "How are we to account for tolerating the lesser evil." Somebody with a brilliantly coated mind hit upon the idea: "The pictures are not properly censored." This phase of the question clouded all other issues. Charges and countercharges were precipitated and the public lost sight of the real issue.

I make this declaration: There are more subsidized people outside the ranks of the motion picture business than there are in any branch of the business itself; that by periodical spasms of so-called reform movements the motion picture people have been obliged to meet measures that in other avenues would be termed as pure oppression and blackmail.

* * *

The motion picture business has, to an extent at least, taken the young and old from the saloon, the gambling den and the house of ill repute. A five cent piece has many a winter night provided a shelter for some poor devil who saw no pictures show in past years. Five cents will last no man long in a saloon, even in the poorer quarters. In that time there is a chance that his mind may be diverted from that channel through the nickel.

* * *

I read an article the other day which stated that "court and clergy attack moving picture ordinance." The clergymen, all, had fancy names, but there was not a word to show that any of them had left their comfortable home to personally investigate the places they denounced. They all speak of what has come to their knowledge and speak of what they know. If this statement is not true they have been guilty of prejudice and also of injustice to the people who are legitimately in the business. Why is it that a certain proprietor of a moving picture house on East Houston Street was allowed to continue in business for a period of four years after repeated fines, when the short cut to a solution of the problem was a cancellation of his license? What were all the societies for the prevention of crime, the eminent divines and the learned jurists doing during this continued period of transgression? What are they doing today? Why do they not root them out—the transgressors, the evils of society—and give the legitimate man a chance?

* * *

I will tell you why. Most of the people who lend their names in support of these moral upheavals are not personally acquainted with the facts, but depend upon the reports of people who depend upon the treasuries of certain societies for a living.

The exhibitors asked for an ordinance which would increase the seating capacity of picture houses to 600. The semi-vaudeville people opposed this. The exhibitors also asked for permission to admit children under 16 years of age at hours that would not infringe upon the school hours, or the domestic regulations. The existing ordinances provided that the seating capacity of such places shall be restricted to 299. The first fight was started on something that was not even mentioned in the ordinance—the censoring of films. Since that time the influence of the clergy has been invoked to express opinion through the press about children being admitted to the show. The "nigger in the wood pile" is the man who is out for the money and could not compete with a picture show that could be given if the exhibitor could seat 600 people.

I know of no papers in the country that have more vigorously opposed the motion picture shows than those controlled by the Hearst company, and it is with the most delightful gratification that I note the change of heart. I quote from the New York Sunday American editorial of recent date:

"Attacks on the moving pictures are based on prejudice. As well attack the printing press because harmful books are published as attack moving picture exhibitions because harmful pictures are shown.

"Public intelligence, public educators and public showmen should develop to the highest possible point of good use the moving picture."

The Editorial continues in a most vigorous manner in the exemplification of the superiority of the motion picture as an educator and declares that, beyond any question, moving pictures will do in the future a work greater than has been done by all the books written in all the long history of education.

LATHAM LOOP PATENT IN COURT.

In the United States Circuit Court, Judge Hand presiding, argument was heard on Wednesday and Thursday of last week on the Latham Loop patent. The case was The Motion Picture Patents Company against the Independent Moving Pictures Company of America. Messrs. Kerr, Page and Cooper appeared for the prosecution and Messrs. Kenyon and Kenyon for the defense. In reserving his decision Judge Hand said that it would be at least two months before he could find the time to go over the mass of evidence presented by both sides.

The Latham loop patent, as our readers may know, was issued in 1902 and is important in that the use of the loop it provides for in the film is necessary in all intermittent moving picture cameras and projecting machines. Mechanisms for continuously moving the film have at different times been evolved, but the intermittent mechanism is almost universally used and is generally admitted to be the most perfect in its results. Hence the final decision, whatever it may be, is anxiously awaited by the whole trade.

The Picture in the Insane Asylum.

By Our Washington Correspondent.

Now that motion picture apparatus has become an essential in every well regulated insane asylum as an accessory in providing entertainment and amusement for the patients, it is interesting to note the experiences of the officials of the Government Hospital for the Insane, in Washington, more commonly known about the capitol as St. Elizabeth's Asylum. In this institution these pictures as a means of amusing the insane wards of the government, have been in use a year, and the management is now making its plans to use them during the coming winter season.

The results attained at Uncle Sam's big hospital where the insane from the Army and the Navy are cared for, where the total number of patients is generally over 2,000 and where the variety of mental ailments covers a wide range, are believed to be typical of conditions existing in other similar institutions.

There has gone forth a popular idea. more or less indefinite and of mysterious origin, that in some way motion pictures could be used to cure some forms of insanity. As far as can be ascertained, the views of the government psychopathists are that there is nothing to this theory. But this fact does not in any way depreciate the commercial opportunities for exploitation of films in asylums. On the contrary, it may be said on the authority of the officials of St. Elizabeth's that the pictures have come to be the most important means of amusing their patients that they have been able to provide. In a word, they have become indispensable. The consensus of opinion is that theatricals are not nearly as effective. The pictures naturally present a wider field of opportunities for diversion than do the theatricals, no matter how worthy of consideration the latter may be.

For presenting its picture shows and theatricals, the hospital authorities have built a commodious theater of brick. During the summer no attempt is made to keep the patients indoors any more than is absolutely necessary. Hence the theater is closed. But as Thanksgiving rolls around and the weather becomes such that the asylum inmates must be kept indoors, social affairs and entertainments are introduced into the routine. Once a week—Friday evenings have thus far been chosen—the theater is thrown open and the inmates assemble for their weekly portion of amusement. The hospital is fortunate in having an excellent electric light plant. This is used to operate the motion picture machine and regularly employed electricians are in charge of it.

The laws of the District of Columbia are very strict as to precautions against fire, and the hospital authorities have provided all reasonable safeguards against possibilities of a fire panic. To one of the medical experts of the institution has been assigned general supervision over the theater, including the choice of films and other matters. In a word, he acts as a kind of censor. Approximately five reels are used each Friday evening. The films are rented from local sources. The theater has been in operation a year and judging from the opinions expressed by the officials, its work has been most successful. A great many observations have been made, from which can be drawn conclusions as to just how effective the films have been.

The questions naturally arise: What kinds of films have been used, and what kind seems to have been most successful in affording genuine amusement to the great variety of abnormal minds that are gathered together in this big institution?

These were the questions that your correspondent put to the physician in charge of the theater. He declared without the least hesitancy that he had found the comic films best suited to his purposes. There was no chance of mistake in the choice, he declared. Other kinds of films were used, presenting romantic, grotesque, spectacular and moral-problem subjects—even travel pictures were used quite extensively—but none of these kinds achieved the success, he believed, that fell to the comics. And the reason for this, as he explained, lies in the general mind characteristics that are peculiar to insane persons.

With the insane, and particularly with the chronic insane—and many of the patients of St. Elizabeth's may be put in this category—the impressions reflected on the mind are fleeting. It has been found that the finer emotional feelings have been to a great extent destroyed. The ability to appreciate love, sorrow, the affection of family ties and so on, has been greatly nullified.

Hence it is that a series of pictures which embody merely amusing incidents or foolish situation more readily appeal to St. Elizabeth audiences. The patients burst into violent laughter at such things as a man falling over a barrel, a small boy sticking a pin into his elders, a fat woman routing all comers with a broom, or a mischievous individual sousing a perfectly dignified gentleman in a fountain of water. At each of these incidents they laugh heartily. As fast as a new situation of this kind projects itself on the canvas, the one that went before has been completely forgotten. Whether the situation has any logical connection with any preceding ones, does not appear to make much difference. It is the mere incident, crude as it may be, that forces the laugh, so it follows that the more rapidly the incidents follow, the more the laughs and the more the enjoyment that the insane audience apparently gets out of the show.

This being the case, the physician censor busied himself to get films with comic subjects. His season was only well under way when he found the available supply of comics was not sufficient to meet the demand. He was therefore obliged to fill in with pictures, the subjects of which ran along other lines. The coming season he will again devote himself to the job of hunting up comics and hopes to find a larger supply than was obtainable last year.

As could be guessed from the foregoing statement of conditions, the pictures with romantic subjects did not appeal and the censor omitted them almost entirely from his selections when possible. The inmates were bored by them and took no interest. They showed no disposition to follow the unraveling of a plot, and the sublime moments in the picture story were to them the most ridiculous. At the moment when the hero and heroine were to be united and the romance consummated they would indulge in a sneering sort of laugh. Pathetic scenes fared in a similar manner. Situations where sorrow was tensest they greeted with a meaningless laugh or with indifference. For psychological reasons the censor found it necessary to bar all gruesome or mournful subjects. In this connection it is worth noting the behavior of the average insane person at times when they might be expected to show signs of grief. The hospital authorities say that their patients on being informed of the death of a father, mother, brother or some near relative, generally remark that "it's too bad," but evidence no other mark of emotion. This gives an idea of how they regard such matters when portrayed on a picture.

Pictures of magic and fairies were the censor's second best bet. The patients seemed to take much interest in sudden disappearances, transformation of grotesque figures and the like. A set of films entitled, "Alice in Wonderland" pleased them, particularly the doings of the fairies therein. Series showing the importance of moral problems or the development of every day questions had to be tabooed. The audience found it quite impossible to draw any moral lessons from what they saw or take any interest in the solution of any practical problem. Travel pictures held their attention fairly well. What little imagination they possessed they seemed to be able to employ in the appreciation of the beauties of natural scenery. Color pictures were also used, but the addition of the color element seemed to have no particular result worth mentioning.

This brings the matter to the point where it can be asked if there is any possibility of the motion picture being used as a cure for the insane. It has long been the theory that the abnormal mind may be restored to more normal channels through the demonstration of simple problems. The experts on insanity have found it useful to teach their patients to solve simple puzzles. As the patient progresses these puzzles are made more complex. The puzzles referred to are the mechanical devices such as are common in the nursery and are used to amuse children. By patiently repeating the solution of the puzzles it has been found that the patients develop a certain amount of normal reasoning power. Some of the hopelessly insane women at St. Elizabeth's have been taught to do a kind of embroidery work.

Now the question is, could this form of pseudo instruction be transferred to the instrumentality of motion pictures. The psychopathists confess their inability to see how it could be done. The necessity for repeating the demonstrations ad infinitum, they fear, preclude the possibility. Yet they admit that some mechanical genius will some day be able to find a way.

Here is a phase of the motion picture business which, though commercially unimportant, would seem to bear promise of expansion in the future.

LAUGHLIN.

A novel entertainment to uplift the standard of amusements in Hyde Park, Mass., and bring profit financially, has been inaugurated by the First Congregational church. The church society has rented its old building to be used as a motion picture house and has appointed a committee to act as censor of the films.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT.

FOLDERS appear to be the favorite method of booming films the country over. C. B. Skiff, who manages the Bijou theater, Negaunee, Mich., sends in a snappy little folder with pages 3½ by 5¾. It is on white paper with blue on the cover and black inside. Mr. Skiff writes:

"I have taken a great deal of interest in your series of articles on 'Advertising for the Exhibitor' now running in the Moving Picture World, and am enclosing sample of folder that I am getting out each week. I vary the front page reading matter, though I always retain the line 'The Home of Good Pictures.' I find that this is as good advertising as any and by judicious distribution brings results. In addition to the folders I use the daily papers to boom any particularly strong picture that I may have, using the liner system rather than display advertising, and feel that here I can get better returns for my money in that way. There is no question but what if more managers would adopt some of the suggestions that you have set forth they would find a substantial increase in their box-office receipts. I trust that we may look for a continuation of the series in The World."

The Value of a Trademark.

In many points in his advertising Mr. Schiff shows that he knows his game, and his insistence upon "The Home of Good Pictures" is proof that he appreciates the value of a trademark. The line is not of the flamboyant "best show in town" type, but it is more quietly effective and it sinks in. In the minds of the patrons it is established that the Bijou is the home of good pictures and the name instinctively suggests the "billing matter." This combination of changed copy with a fixed line offers the ideal layout for the front page, always provided that the type does not crowd the page. In the Bijou folder the catchline is set in a fairly clear Old English beside a cut of the house front, the two occupying the top third of the page. The line might profitably be set in a cleaner face that will throw the sentence into prominence, for Old English has no place in effective advertising when a more attractive face may be had that will be instantly legible. The new copy announces in a heavy gothic "Something about six great films," a line that catches the eye and holds the attention of anyone remotely interested in the films. An underline reads: "Watch the crowds," but this might profitably be replaced by the line which is used on the letterhead: "Photoplays Exclusively." That is an appeal to anyone who likes good pictures, and it is a sign that the manager intelligently trusts to perfect projection to make his appeal, instead of bolstering up a poor projection with cheap vaudeville.

Getting Cuts Right.

In one point Mr. Skiff might better the appearance of the page and this is in the cut. Like most photoplay theaters, the Bijou has an outside lobby and this means that when the photograph of the front is taken the part covered by the overhang is in the shadow and obscure. When a cut is made the fault of the photograph is magnified, and after a few small runs the shadows become stopped up until it looks as though a black cloth had been draped behind the supporting columns. The Bijou cut is kept clean, but at best it is muddy looking, because the shadows stop up.

All of the larger engraving plants have a staff of artists who retouch cut copy to bring out all the details. There is an extra charge for painting up the photograph, but the charge is moderate and it is well worth while. Not only does it produce a better cut, but the cut lasts longer, since the lines are more deeply etched. Cuts may be improved by direct etching, but if the photographic copy is first touched up the greater part of the re-etching may be saved and the photograph preserved that it may be used over and over again. Where much cut work is done, it is an economy to hold the original cut and have electros made from this as they are needed.

Six-Reel Matinees.

Mr. Skiff is using the double length matinee recently advised in this column and his phrasing is so clear and well defined that it is given here for the benefit of others:

MATINEE for Ladies and Children
SATURDAY at 3 O'Clock Sharp.

Six Reels of Pictures. :-: :-: :-: :-:
:-: :-: :-: :-: :-: One Show Only.

The most serious drawback to the double matinee is that the people may be led to expect the same program in the evening, but the "One Show Only" disposes of this objection and the matter is left clear. The double show is a useful business getter in a theater of any size, but it must be clearly explained that the double allowance is shown only at the matinee.

Another good line in the Skiff billing is "Program subject to change, although the management makes all possible effort to present same as advertised." This is necessary where the program is received by express.

Liners Are Useful.

The use of liners in place of a massed display advertisement is an excellent plan in a small town. Two and three line readers scattered through the paper are more effective than the two-inch display in the advertising column. The display advertisement is all right for the man who is looking for some amusement and who turns to the advertisements to see what there is offered, but a snappy phrase in the news columns is more effective since it gets the man who is not looking for amusement but who is interested in some film through the reader and decides to see it. Effective liners are not easy to write, but a little practise will generally enable the manager to condense his thoughts. Condensation is the aim and the two-line reader should carry the thought of the ten-line paragraph.

Do not deal in generalities, but be specific. Do not say, "A fine show at the Bijou to-night," but rather, "Black Arrow, the massive photoplay spectacle, at the Bijou to-night. You shouldn't miss it." Better still would be: "Stevenson's 'The Black Arrow' has been done into a massive photoplay. At the Bijou to-night." Lines like these are scattered through the paper. It is the usual custom to specify that the readers shall be equally distributed through the reading pages, and not more than one to the column. This provides for a good display.

A Classy Isis Card.

From the Isis Theater, Denver, comes a yellow card printed in blue, a combination that throws up the type rather better than would a black. The house title is run down the front page instead of across, which permits a larger type being used and the name fairly yells at you. The rest of the matter is well proportioned and most of it is set in type that suggests special lettering instead of regular font type. In addition to the address the front page merely announces:

Souvenir
Complete Weekly PROGRAM
Beginning Monday
November 6th, 1911

The back page is given over to the Bee, a sister house, and here a three and a quarter inch "B" carries an "e" within each of the loops to spell out the name. Part of the advertising runs: "The best mechanical effects possible to produce everything but talking. The pictures will do the talking if you will watch them close at the Bee." Most exhibitors fail to give proper attention to mechanical effects—projection and sound effects—either in their advertisements or exhibitions.

Snappy Sentences.

Only a line or two is given each reel, but the salient points are caught up and told in a line. "The most realistic and spectacular outdoor combat ever pictured" announced "The Black Arrow" and "Some trick work adds in making this comedy out of the ordinary" piques the curiosity as to "Willie Wise and His Motorboat," which are borrowed from the Edison notice. It is seldom that the title alone will have the fullest effect. Some little bragging must be done and the bragging will not be effective unless it is carefully planned. To overboom is fatal, since the cry of "Wolf!" grows stale, but it is possible to make people want to see almost any picture if it is attractively described. It frequently happens that the manufacturer's advertising will carry a line that can be made over, and it does not always happen that the right line is the one played up in the original advertising. Read the ad. and the story of the film and anything else you can get hold of, then make a choice of the line that will suit your clientele best. If you can't find the right line, write one yourself, and don't select the first thing that comes into your head. Work out a dozen and then select the best one of the lot.

Some Press Work.

Facts, Redlands, Calif., prints a press notice from the Grand that begins: "'Through Fire and Smoke' is one of the finest moving pictures ever made, showing the usual heroic deeds done for love," etc., and goes on to explain that the Selig film was made during an actual fire in Los Angeles. Suppose that it had started more like this:

"The entire Los Angeles fire department assisted the Selig players in the production of 'Through Fire and Smoke,' the exterior pictures having been made when the big department store of Byrne Brothers was destroyed by fire. It is the first instance of an actual fire being used for motion picture purposes, and the novelty adds to the effect of the dainty love story that is carried in the film." Get the reader in the first line and you can hold him. Don't take chances on losing him with that "the finest picture ever made" stuff. He has read that before, but the fire department idea is new.

An Atlanta paper starts off with the statement that two first-run Licensed pictures will be shown at the Vaudette, and then gets around to "A Southern Soldier's Sacrifice," one of the subjects, in the third line. Down in Georgia that title is more important than the half appreciated fact of first run and should have started the story.

The National, in the same town, does the same first-run stunt and wastes more space to say that they will be "the most interesting of the entire series of subjects shown during the past few days"—a line that means little or nothing. There was a good chance for a flying start in "Percy and His Squaw." Suppose that it had started:

"It wasn't leap year, but when the squaw saw Percy, the willieboy from the East she didn't wait to propose to him; she just annexed him, and Percy had a tough time persuading her that perhaps his paleface fiancé might object. He managed to do it, but not until Mrs. Sunshine had led him a merry chase that is funnier to the spectator than it was to poor Percy. It is one of the two first-run pictures that will be shown at the National on Wednesday, the other being—" etc.

Get Used to Writing.

It is going to be a little hard at first to change from the hackneyed to the original, but it's not one-tenth as hard as it seems and one does not have to be a trained press agent to at least better the cut and dried formal announcement that will be skipped by all save those who are so interested that they would go to the theater anyway.

Up in Utica a live manager found that one of the characters in the Edison "Three Musketeers had been a leading man with a local stock company. He didn't announce "Another great film at the Majestic," but gave the headline to "Jack Chagnon in Moving Pictures" and roped in every matinee girl in town. And, by the way, "The Three Musketeers," "The Two Orphans," and "Hal Chase's Home Run" is "some show" for one program. Of the "Two Orphans" they use the catchline "nearly a mile of film," which argues an interesting display.

If you've something to brag about, make a noise. Don't merely tell the regulars what you have. Get after the chap who never comes and coax him in. That's what press work really means.

The Personal Appeal.

And remember that advertising is not confined to stuff in type. Your projection, your program, your house and the house management are all advertisements, good or bad, and it does not avail you much to get the people in if you can't hold them after you get them.

Between the writer's workshop and the Brooklyn Bridge are five picture theaters, all five-cent houses. In two of these the management is alert and attentive. They make the most of what they have to offer. The other three are carelessly conducted and make no appeal.

Just beyond the Bridge is a ten-cent house where conditions are excellent, but the other night an inquiry as to the possibility of seeing a specified Lubin print released the previous day brought a vague reply that intimated that the house held back first runs in order that it might offer a balanced program. It might possibly have made a hit with some rural visitor, but a man who seems to know about first runs and dated service is not to be put off with romancing like that, and a request for specific information that could have been met with a definite answer merely resulted in a gust of hot air that blew a regular customer out of the house for keeps.

That sort of thing is not advertising. It's just plain foolishness. The man who runs the five-cent house does not use first-runs, but he doesn't try to fool his patrons by announcing that he runs the Vitagraph Monthly for August in November because it fits better in the program then. He freely admits that he would prefer a later issue, but he gets the August because that is what he pays for. That's good advertising because the patron does not go away wondering if he looks as much of an ass as the exhibitor seems to take him to be.

THE MOTION PICTURE IN CHINA.

According to a report from China published in a recent issue of the Daily Consular and Trade Reports, nearly every town and port in the Southern part, as well as the Northern, boasts of at least one cinematograph theater and as many as five and six.

The smallest town in the Empire, Swatow, now possesses two picture houses and four or five traveling shows. Such cities as Peking, Tientsin, Shanghai, Hankow, Hongkong and Canton, support several motion picture theaters, and quite frequently have traveling shows come in town.

Most of the films exhibited in these various theaters are second-hand films which are furnished by a large French Film Exchange of Honkong, and are of a dramatic and historical nature. The only agency for the rental of American films in the Far East is located in Manila.

The London Correspondent of the "Manchester Guardian" states that a large London cinematograph syndicate has concluded negotiations with the Chinese government by which it will have the privilege of organizing and supplying films for an extensive circuit of motion picture theaters throughout the whole of China. The capital is being provided by local mandarins, and the theaters will be entirely in Chinese hands. The other part of the arrangement is that the syndicate is to be given the right to take films in any part of China, and to have special privileges of taking records of religious and social ceremonies which hitherto were quite unattainable.

SECOND MARRIAGES.

Besides an epidemic of elopements there seems to be a plethora of second marriages in the studios of the film makers, so that it is becoming a question as to which is the greater evil.

The frequency with which a young lady has two lovers, one of whom she marries only to be widowed within a too often short space of time, leaving the way open for the return of the other suitor who always marries his former sweetheart to "live happily ever afterwards" is becoming painful. "None wed the second but who kill the first" was a harsh denunciation from our old friend Shakespeare upon the second marriage problem, and, while it is easy to conceive an occasion when circumstances may bring about a second marriage, and that to a former lover, the pictures now before the public are often so loose in tone as to suggest mentally, at least, that none wed the second love without first killing the first love. A very careful avoidance of both physical and moral violence is clearly and creditably shown, so that no censorship can criticize; nevertheless, there is a sentiment of a higher nature to be observed in the recesses of a sacred love which should neither be debased or sensualized. As with the easy way adopted by elopers in the elopement scenes, so, too, there is too easy a transition from widowhood to the second marriage. Nowhere more than in the love story is it easier to cross that invisible line which lies within the soul of all young observers or readers; it is here that the delicacy of treatment is most needed; whoever succeeds in rightly interpreting that occasion produces a life portrayal at once creditable and worthy; whoever fails opens the door to a condition most unfortunate to the minds of young and sentimental people.

W. H. J.

The Song and the Singer

By CLARENCE E. SINN.

E. CLINTON KEITHLEY, whose portrait adorns this page, is professional manager for the Forster Music Co., Suite 60, Grand Opera House, Chicago. Mr. Keithley is a few other things yet besides. For one thing he is the composer of one of the coming song hits of the year: "A Garland of Old Fashioned Roses," which is published by the Forster Music Co. E. Clinton says the sales are extremely encouraging; near one hundred thousand sold in the month just past, and the song has had no real advertising to speak of; been off the press only about four months. A beautiful set of slides has been prepared by Scott & Van Altena for the "Garland of Old Fashioned Roses" and the promoters are expecting to make this song one of the big successes of the season of 1911-'12. Dale, Devereaux and Grae Sisters are featuring the song in their musical tabloid, "In Pajama Land." They are now playing through the East. Miss May Bolen, who is at the Empress Theater, this city, week of October 23, is also using the "Garland of Old Fashioned Roses" with pronounced success.

A new number has been added to the Forster catalog, which is from the pen of Walter Wilson and is entitled, "I Want to Hear a Southern Tune." The lyrics are by Bob F. Sear and R. Jackson; the song has a catchy, "rag" swing, though of a sentimental character, and should hold its own among numbers of a like nature.

The Harold Rossiter Music Co., 145 N. Clark Street (Randolph Building), have entered the season with a list of good songs. They are concentrating their efforts particularly upon those which have already made good and are now being rapidly pushed to the front among the best sellers. Look over this list of titles; if any of the songs are not in your repertoire you are that much loser: "Down in Melody Lane," "I'm Awfully Glad the Girl I Had Has Found Another Beau," "Barnyard Rag," "When Rubenstein and Mendelsohn Play the Wearing of the Green," and last but emphatically not least, Leo Friedman's new ballad, "Years, Years Ago." All are good songs in the Harold Rossiter catalog, but this Friedman ballad is worthy of particular mention. When I say it is as good as anything Leo Friedman ever wrote, I am not giving my own opinion only, but the opinion of all who sing it and hear it. "Years, Years Ago" is destined to shine among the brightest of Leo Friedman's jewels—and he has never handed us a "rhinestone" yet. These songs are being handled in tip-top manner by the Harold Rossiter staff, which includes the following: Monte Howard, who is featuring the songs in the Jones Linicke and Schaeffer houses in Chicago; Orpheum Theater week of Oct. 16th. Mr. Milton Weil at the Casino last week met with success using "Down in Melody Lane" and "Years, Years Ago." Mr. Max Reinold, at the Circle Theater, is putting in some telling licks for the good of the Harold Rossiter songs. Mr. Ralph Madison, the big man with the big voice, is a new recruit to the "boosting" force of this house and is making good. Mr. P. F. Powell, who is well known to the music world, has joined the Harold Rossiter staff as an outside plugger and is bringing home the bacon. Taking it all in all, the business outlook for this house never looked more promising. Tom Mayo Geary says so, and he ought to know. Tom is manager for Harold Rossiter, you know (or if you didn't, you know now) and he is so busy he makes a live trolley wire look like a piece of travel rope. I got the little boy five skinned seven ways for Sunday. It took me two weeks to get a little out of information out of him (he was willing enough, he said, but didn't have time) and finally I had to back him up in a corner and extract it with a corkscrew. Tom tried to be sick last week, but didn't even have time for that, so he is back on the job once more to the immense satisfaction of all but the doctor.

MR. E. CLINTON KEITHLEY,
Professional Manager for Rossiter Music Co.

M. Witmark & Sons are in line with their usual bunch of good numbers. Can anybody remember when they did not have a line of the best? I can't, and I remember the firm for more than twenty years when I used to call at the little old office in New York for "professional" copies. That little office didn't resemble the building the firm now occupies, but it was a haven for the "troopers" (I was on the road then), where Witmark Senior and the sons always gave us welcome and always sent us away with a collection of sure-fire songs. Times have changed, but the firm of M. Witmark & Sons are still dealing in "sure-fire" goods. Calling at their Chicago branch in the Schiller Building, I found Ascher B. Samuels in the professional department, wearing an expansive smile and a busy look. (He had on some other things, but I don't remember now what they were.) He told me that: "Ernest R. Ball, King of Ballads, was in the city last week on a short visit, and brought with him several new numbers. They include 'Let Us Have Peace,' 'Good-bye, My Love, Good-bye,' 'If All My Dreams Were Made of Gold,' and 'I Want a Regular Pal for a Gal," which has all the elements of a winner."

The songs now being pushed by M. Witmark & Sons are in capable hands as usual. The "Empire Singing Four," who are playing around Chicago for a few weeks, are putting over easily the new Irish ballad, "For Killarney and You." This is destined to be as popular as "Where the River Shannon Flows," and that was some noticeable.

Spencer & Spencer are playing the Doyle circuit and report their biggest applause coaxer is "Todolo Man." Their dancing and closing song is "Dixie Daisy Dear," both from the Witmark catalog. This team played the Congress Café last week. The Lenzes (at the Century last week) have been featuring Ernest Ball's great ballad; "In the Garden of My Heart," but have replaced it with the new song by the same writer, "Good-bye, My Love, Good-bye." They say it looks just as good as its predecessor. McDonald & Genereaux, "the Scotch lassie and the funny little man," have just returned from a trip over the Hodgkins circuit, where they used "Bonnie, My Highland Lassie" and "Nation's Best Battles." They are leaving this week to play return engagements, when they will replace the above songs with "Mother Machree," and "I Love the Name of Mary." Bobby Hardy and Josephine McIntyre put over one of the big hits of the bill at the Plaza last week singing "Ragtime Love," and the new conversation song, "When Sunday Rolls Around." Jean Massey is making a host of friends with her clever violin playing and singing. She is singing "If All My Dreams Were Made of Gold" and at engagements filled in this city is nightly forced to respond to several encores. Ward & Carlisle at the Ashland are using "Dixie Daisy Dear" with success. Alice La Mar at the Congress is making good with "Mother Machree" and "For Killarney and You." Clucas & Jennings at the Monroe find winning numbers in "Ragtime Love" and "Todolo Man." Frank Titus, "The Musical Coon," is getting the applause with "In the Garden of My Heart."

Knight & Dever, who are playing the Orpheum time also, were callers at the Witmark office a few days since. After looking over the new ballads they decided to use that tried and true winner, "In the Garden of My Heart."

Callahan & Rettow, in a neat singing, dancing and talking act are putting 'em over with "If All My Dreams Were Made of Gold" and closing their act with the big song, "Baby Rose."

Mayo & Vernon, at the Apollo last week, will play all of Hamburges' houses before leaving Chicago. They are using the two new rag hits, "Ragtime Love" and "Todolo Man," and are going big with both numbers.

Rae Samuels ("Kid Ragtime Samuels"), whose portrait appeared in these pages a short time ago, has attracted the attention of the Western Vaudeville Association, who are always on the lookout for talent, originality, versatility and clever folks generally. They found it all in one package when they discovered "Kid Rae," for she is certainly a live wire though a modest one, if what I hear is true; they say she was doubtful as to whether she could make good when she was offered the big time. If she really did underrate her ability, her friends didn't. Anyhow, the "Ragtime Kid" makes her début into the big time next week and will play the Orpheum circuit of theaters extending from coast to coast, the longest booking possible to give anyone. She will feature the sensational song hit, "Honkey Tonkey Monkey Rag" (Thompson Music Co.). Good luck to you, "Kid!"

Thos. J. Quigley, the lyric tenor, and general manager for Carl Laemmle's music house, left a void in this man's town which will be hard to fill, when he went to New York to take charge of that end of the business. A letter received from him last week said: "The big song we are featuring just now is 'Mine,' which is illustrated by the Levi Company. These slides can be obtained with a spotlight feature which will not necessitate the using of anything but the regular set of slides, which are so constructed that they throw a spotlight on the singer at the same time."

RANDOM SHOTS OF A PICTURE FAN.

The best people are becoming fans, the rank and file of our army get new and and distinguished converts every day. When you find the leading thespians of the day in enthusiastic attendance, such lights as the original "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" and Charles J. Ross sitting right beside you in the temple of the photoplay, you feel that the stock of the moving picture is soaring. I spoke to both these stars of the speaking stage a few days ago in an out-of-town theater while the operator was putting the next reel into the magazine and they just love the picture and predict all kinds of great things for it. "Praise from Sir Hubert is praise indeed."

What funny notions some managers and exhibitors have. I wandered into a photoplay theater the other day and between vaudeville and moving pictures, they showed a short series of slides they called a "Travelette." These particular slides were supposed to show life in Turkey. The so-called "explanatory" slides were in bad English, poorly spelled, and the pictures were ill-selected. I had a feeling of being taken from an express train on board of a canal boat, showing stereopticon slides in a moving picture house. The day for such things has gone; even the fine and meritorious travel pictures today are moving pictures.

"A Night in an English Music Hall" might not unsuitably be followed by a newer vaudeville sketch called "A Morning in an American Moving Picture Palace," unless stricter watch is kept at the door and alcoholic gentlemen ("souses" in the parlance of the day) are absolutely barred. Not long ago I sat in a so-called "model" moving picture house and just as I was comfortably settled this slide was shown on the screen:

Disorderly or Drunken Persons Will Be Turned Over to the Officer.

I was mentally congratulating the management on its heroic plan to keep order, when the courteous usher asked me to get up and let a tall, blond, freckle-faced brother pass into the next seat. The "brother" was in an advanced stage, his breath chokingly redolent of cheap whiskey. He lunged rather than sank into his seat, his hair was rumpled and his navigation bad. Neverteless, he had passed the scrutiny of a fierce-looking "bouncer" at the gate. He was, happily for me and some women patrons nearby, a mild and peaceful patient and soon woke the echoes with his hearty snores. I have no statistics and no personal experience on which to base a conclusive test of sobriety, but something should be done to check this evil. What is a "special officer" for, if he cannot shut out men with uncertain footing and a too certain breath.

Fans are wondering how the Kalem Company managed to turn all those strange photographic and other tricks in their reel, "The Lost Freight Car." One of the fans I know, looked at the picture three times, determined to solve the mystery and wanted to tell me his solution in great detail. I advised him to write to Mr. F. H. Richardson, who can solve pretty nearly every moving picture mystery and then I fled. If I had not caught a car just in time, my friend would have pursued me into the privacy of my home. When your dyed-in-the-wool fan gets to talking on such subjects, nothing short of a swift injection of morphine will stop him.

In their reel, "The Trail of Books," the Biograph people have uncovered an unusually clever little actress, a child of seemingly not more than four or at the most, five years of age, who must be a perfect delight to the director, who has her in charge. I do admire the children in a Bio film. They are sweet, natural and human. In other companies the child is almost invariably the "chee-ild" of the melodrama, acting like a wound-up doll. I will make an exception; in a Lubin film, "From the Field to the Cradle," there is in the last scene a baby surely not older than seven or eight months. He, or she, has nothing to do but show delight at the sight of a bottle of milk and then struggle for it. The baby rose to the occasion and the way it clutched the bottle and started in to drain it made all the ladies in the audience break out into delightful ahs and ohs. More anon.

"LIVE" ADVERTISING FOR EXHIBITORS.

Essanay Evolves Unique Idea.

Mr. G. M. Anderson.

This cut of Mr. G. M. Anderson, together with a very interesting feature news story, is being loaned to exhibitors of motion pictures for use in their local newspapers. All that the Essanay asks in return is a letter or "O. K." from the editors of the papers and marked copies of the papers in which the cut and article is printed.

The story is a live one. It "most photographed man in the claims that Mr. Anderson is the world," is seen by 300,000 people daily and that his face is almost as familiar to the people of this country as that of President Taft's. Mr. Anderson has appeared in more photoplays than any other motion picture actor, having begun as an actor and producer when the first motion picture was made in this country.

Mr. Anderson originated the first "cowboy" character in motion pictures and has been seen as sheriff, prospector, cattle thief, bad man, sky pilot and other roles too numerous to mention. The photoplays in which he appears are shown in North and South America, Great Britain, Germany, France and Spain, in South Africa, Australia and the Philippines.

"DANTES INFERNO" IN BOSTON.

A Two-Weeks' Engagement at the Grand Opera House.

A moving picture entertainment at high prices in one of the largest theaters of Boston, attended with such success, that the engagement had to be extended for two weeks, is pleasing news for the friends of quality.

Messrs. Feighery & Place, controlling the state rights for Massachusetts, presented the Inferno in a manner befitting the literary and intellectual centre of the country and were rewarded with a well pronounced success, business having increased rapidly from day to day.

The performance was given under the direction of W. Stephen Bush, who also delivered the lecture. Some of the best-known newspaper critics of Boston characterized the production and the method of presenting it as a revelation in moving pictures and gave it more space than any moving picture entertainment had ever had in the press of Boston or anywhere else. Arrangements for an early return engagement were made in the middle of the first week of its stay at the Grand Opera House.

CHICAGO LETTER.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

A CHANGE that promises much for the future of the moving picture is noticeable in the recent attitude of several prominent Chicago dailies. Considerable space is devoted in the Sunday issues to stories of films, of the magazine type, profusely illustrated. The Tribune devotes one full page every Sunday to reading matter of this kind, on the product of some one of the Chicago manufacturers. Besides, in the dramatic and editorial section of the same paper, a department on moving pictures and makers is conducted by Gene Morgan.

As has been frequently announced in the columns of The World, the daily press hitherto has shown a disposition to be hostile to the moving picture. The new policy adopted by the Chicago press is, therefore, all the more welcomed. A larger view is being taken of the importance of the moving picture and of its assured future. The great progress made throughout the country during the present year, in the construction of larger picture theaters and in the increase of admission prices points to a time in the near future when these houses will be a source of revenue to daily newspapers.

In many cities of large population, where advertising rates are high, exhibitors are already paying for space in Sunday and other issues of the dailies, to bring their programs before the public. Chicago exhibitors have done nothing, as yet, in that direction. Messrs. Wm. N. Selig, George Kliene and Geo. K. Spoor, for the manufacturers, have taken a full page space on several occasions, in the Sunday issues of leading Chicago papers. Would it not be wise policy for Chicago exhibitors to club together for a certain space, from time to time, in the Sunday papers that are now rendering splendid service to the moving picture?

Reciprocity, even in a small way, on the part of exhibitors would tend at least to show their appreciation. And it is due to the dignity of the moving picture, at this time, that it shall not be the recipient even of eleemosynary assistance. Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's. This is a timely subject for the immediate consideration of the Chicago Exhibitors' Association.

Wants Charges Proved.

An Associated Press dispatch from Galesburg, Ill., that appeared in The Republic, St. Louis, Nov. 16th, reads as follows:

"During the civic conference by the State Federation of Women's Clubs this afternoon on 'The Girl Amusement Question,' Mrs. Phillip N. Moore of St. Louis, president of the National Federation, made a plea for a Federal law to regulate river excursions.

"She spoke of the temptations that befell girls who receive such low wages that they are forced to accept questionable invitations for amusement.

"'The moving picture shows lead many young girls to their downfall,' stated Miss Minnie Starr Grainger, President of the Illinois Federation."

The Republic is to be commended for the discernment and good sense shown in the headings given this dispatch. Instead of indulging in the customary sensational flings given the moving picture on such occasions by the daily press, that publication headed the article as follows: "Mrs. Moore Hits Excursions. Declares They are Grave Temptations to Working Girls."

The World is indebted to Mr. G. G. Gibson, president of the Gibson Furniture Company of St. Louis, for drawing immediate attention to the foregoing article. In his letter accompanying the clipping he writes: "Would it not be well to have someone interview Miss Grainger and have her give ONE case that she can substantiate? Dollars to doughnuts she can't do it!

"I have been reading your valuable paper regularly for some years and have noticed how careful you have always been to caution manufacturers against making improper or suggestive pictures, and I cheerfully bear testimony as to how you have labored in season and out of season to make the photoplay or moving picture the wonderful, uplifting, elevating, entertaining and educational institution that it is—delighted in daily by many millions of the best, as well as the most intelligent people of the world.

"I have no doubt that Miss Grainger means well, but she has been misinformed. If she will attend some moving picture theater in her home town, I am sure she will withdraw the statement credited to her today. I write this so you may be able to correct the impression made."

That the moving picture has won many staunch friends and advocates of Mr. Gibson's type is evidence of its growing power and usefulness, of its benign tendency and influence, and of its high mission in the intellectual and moral development of the race. And it is gratifying and cheering to know that where a few well-meaning but illiterate people calumniate the moving picture, many men and women of intelligence are always to be found as its champions.

A strict and impartial investigation will reveal that moving picture shows are on a higher moral plane than the very best of the (so-called) "legitimate" and high-class vaudeville shows. The members of an entire household attend a picture show without any fear of offense being given, whereas, in many cases, only the worldly wise are considered eligible to attend certain fashionable attractions.

It seems so easy and so natural for some people who claim distinction for refinement and social standing to cast a stone at popular places of amusement. These people are usually fearful of visiting such places. They have such a horror of the common crowd! Yet, on occasion, ignorantly but without malice, they throw the weight of their influence and position against a cause worthy of their support.

Although it is not possible to interview Miss Grainger at the present time, as Mr. Gibson suggests, it is hoped that her eyes may fall on his letter in these columns. In the meantime, The World joins with Mr. Gibson in respectfully requesting Miss Grainger to cite one case that will substantiate her charge against moving picture shows.

Burning of the Western Film Exchange, Milwaukee.

Friday morning, Nov. 17th, about 10:30 o'clock, the Western Film Exchange, of Milwaukee, was burned out. News of the disastrous fire was wired to this city while the flames were still raging, and many messages were sent to the secretary and chief owner, J. R. Freuler, offering him assistance and expressing deep regret.

The leading Independent exchanges of the city came to Mr. Freuler's relief in a manner thoroughly characteristic of Chicagoans. While the ruins were still smoking, about 4 o'clock p. m., on the day of the fire, they had placed in Mr. Freuler's hands 400 reels of film, thus enabling him to continue serving his customers without a break. The World takes this opportunity to compliment and commend the assisting exchanges for their prompt and liberal action, and to express regret and kind good wishes to Mr. Freuler over his heavy loss.

As near as can be ascertained, the fire originated in the inspection room, but from what cause has not been learned. The Milwaukee papers state that an explosion occurred. But what caused the explosion is not forthcoming.

The exchange was situated in the Enterprise building, on Sycamore and Second streets. The damage to the building was $15,000. That it was a hot and menacing fire is shown by the fact that three alarms were sent in to the fire department.

Mr. Freuler's entire stock of films on hand, numbering 3,000 reels, was totally destroyed. The value placed on the films, according to Milwaukee papers, is $250,000. It was a total loss, as the goods were not covered by insurance.

Printed accounts of the fire state that Otto Goels, a shipping clerk, emptied the contents of a fire extinguisher on the burning films and that a series of loud explosions followed soon afterwards.

Assistant Chief Young had his hand badly cut by falling glass during the progress of the fire.

High Praise for Selig Picture.

The following letter was received by the Selig Polyscope Co. last week from Melvin G. Winstock, general manager of the People's Amusement Co., of Portland, Ore., which controls a large circuit of straight moving picture theaters in Oregon and Washington:

"We took the liberty of placing 'Lost in the Jungle' in the opening program of the People's Theater, a new photoplay house opened on Wednesday, November 1st. The new theater was erected at a cost of $125,000 and has been pronounced by the press and public to be the most perfect of its kind in the country, devoted exclusively to exhibiting motion pictures.

"This film was pronounced by those in attendance to be the most thrilling picture ever produced. Contrary to the usual manner, the film was applauded frequently throughout its exhibition. Pictures of this kind will help us to maintain a permanent hold on public approval, and we trust we may receive many of this kind. Our company uses the entire output of the licensed makers, and features of this kind help us pay the film bills."

Chicago Film Brevities.

Mr. and Mrs. William T. Rock, of the Vitagraph Co., New York, spent Sunday, Nov. 19, with their son, Mr. John B. Rock, and his wife, on their way to California.

R. Prieur, manager of Lux, New York, spent several days in the city last week, making his rounds in film circles. While here, he visited the Selig plant.

Ralph Radnor Earle, representative of Pathe Freres, was in the city the early part of last week in the interests of his company.

Harry A. Spoor, the European representative of Essanay, will arrive with his wife in this city about Dec. 22nd, to spend the Christmas holidays with his parents and relatives.

William E. King, the popular leader of the Orpheum orchestra, became the happy father of a bouncing boy on November 5th. The World's congratulations to all concerned.

N. G. Caward, of Latham & Caward, former owners of the Metropolitan Theater, Owatona, Minn., was a visitor at the World office one day last week. The Metropolitan, which seats 1,200 people, was sold recently to Byron H. Schmidt, and Mr. Latham is now looking for a new location in a thriving city.

During his recent visit to the South, the Hon. Champ Clark traveled all the way from Dallas, Texas, to Lake Charles, La., on the invitation of Mr. Laglois, manager of the Dreamland Theater in the latter city. On his arrival, Mr. Clark was treated to an exhibition of a recent Selig release, entitled "Trips to Homes of Famous People." The theater was crowded when Mr. Clark arrived and when his picture was flashed upon the screen, the audience arose in a body and made enthusiastic demonstrations. The film also shows the Hon. Joseph Cannon, Vice-President Sherman and Senator Joseph Bailey. Mr. Clark was so well pleased with the film that he made arrangements to have it shown in his home town, so that members of his immediate family might see it.

E. A. Schultz, general traveling representative of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, writes from Minneapolis that Oscar Overby, of Rice Lake, Wis., is erecting a new fireproof theater in the latter city. The house will be named the Ideal Family Theater, and when completed will accommodate 500 people. The program will consist of three reels of licensed films and illustrated songs. The service will be furnished by the Twin City Calcium Film Company, of Minneapolis. Mr. Overby has purchased a 1912 model Motiograph machine from that company.

That moving pictures should be utilized in religious meetings if the Protestant Church is to keep pace in the march of progress was the declaration made Sunday, Nov. 5th, by Dr. Elduras Richmond, of Philadelphia, speaking on "Pictured Truth" before the District Sunday School Association in the New York Avenue Presbyterian church, Washington, D. C.

Dr. Richmond said that as Christ had taught by means of symbols, it was in no wise irreverent to utilize the various advantages of a moving picture machine to promulgate teachings of the Scriptures.

ESSANAY'S "MADMAN" A SENSATION.

The accompanying illustration is the last scene in the Essanay Company's great sensational melodrama, "The Madman." This fight in the balloon is said to be one of the most sensational and hair-raising scenes recently shown in pictures.

The Madman imagines he is a great actor and that his father is his worst enemy. The asylum authorities humor him in his whim and he is given wigs and material for beards and other disguises. One day he breaks out of the asylum, goes to his father's home, disguises as the father and nearly succeeds in killing the old man. He is pursued by the asylum guards and running across the fields comes upon a military balloon camp. Just as the balloon is cut loose the madman runs on, seizes a rope and goes up in the balloon.

The fight in the clouds is a thriller, but the balloonist, after a fearful encounter succeeds in overcoming the man and throws him loose from the balloon.

"The Madman" is to be released Tuesday, December 5th.

Pictures in Kansas City

Some two months ago, on a Sunday evening, I casually dropped to five or six motion picture theaters located in the bubbling metropolis on the Kaw, Kansas City by name. In a subsequent article I gave a few brief descriptions of the way in which pictures are exhibited in these houses. Some of my remarks must have been a little caustic, for I afterwards heard all about how the managers of the aforementioned houses pawed the air and called me a knocker, a dub, etc. However, with as much equanimity as I could muster, I passed over these retorts and decided to give the gentlemen another chance for praise. Last Sunday evening, in company with an old-time picture man, I made visits to four of the self-same houses in search of amusement and incidentally, house head management, if I may use the phrase.

To shorten a long story, I, in short (as Mr. Micawber would say), almost failed to find the first of the things I sought. At half past six o'clock I entered the Lyric on 7th and Main. The house was well filled with plain folk bent on diversion. They were certainly getting diversion enough. Five or six unshaded white lights were scattered over the auditorium lending a yellow-blue-green effect to the picture (on a cloth curtain). The operator was engaged in the process of burning up Champion's recent subject, "Shenandoah." Perhaps with sensible projection and a correctly lighted house, "Shenandoah" might be rendered passable.

Having projected Champion's first release and subsequent ones for almost a year after, I feel qualified or rather permitted to tell the Champion people the truth. They have put out some excellent productions, but this one is a letdown in every department. A Great Northern was thrown on the screen in this theater in the same slip-shod manner. Before, I had a word of praise for this house, but there's none coming to it this time.

Though the Lyric was giving four reels for five cents, I did not care to stomach but two. I met my exhibitor friend and we sauntered up to the Twelfth Street Theater. Three reels of new licensed pictures and a variety act composed the program. This is a very handsome house fitted up with the most modern equipment. The seating capacity is about five hundred, and ten cents admission is charged. A mirror screen and a new Simplex machine in the house indicate that the management is out for good projection. However, on this evening the operator had failed to take the lost motion out of the star and cam. In addition, the pictures were rushed through at the rate of twelve minutes per reel. If the Selig people could only have seen their "Lost in the Jungle" skurried over the screen, they'd have given up the ghost right then and there. By the way, for why did the Selig director allow such a flat ending to slip into this masterpiece? Nothing but a man standing in the foreground apparently raving over something. And at the end of such a series of thrilling incidents! A strong finish will, nine times out of ten, get a picture "over" even if the rest of the production is not so thrilling as the one mentioned.

However, to go back to the theater itself, there is too much light in the house despite the mirror screen. When the picture is off great shadows of varied intensities can be seen on the mirror. The handsome side lights have failed to cut off the direct rays, and as a result the picture is almost spoiled for a lover of good, white light.

The vaudeville launched after the pictures was of the usual ten cent class—full of fossilized "puns," besides being altogether too suggestive for a self-respecting person to sit through. We left in the middle of the act, disgusted. The Kansas City public has shown time and time again that when it wants vaudeville, it wants the best. When it wants pictures, it wants the best, and it does not want a combination of impossible variety stunts and poorly projected pictures. Twelfth Street Theater, you're new, so take notice.

We next hied ourselves over to the Palace Theater on Main Street. The management of this house, which also has control of the handsome Tenth Street Theater, was one that was especially aggravated about my former criticisms of the houses. The Palace was crowded to capacity when we entered. A new Biograph and Pathe made up the program for five cents. This house, like the Tenth Street, is lighted by the indirect system. While this is all very good, it is a hard proposition to get the best kind of a picture on a white wall, especially when the indirect lighting is a little overworked and not sufficient (seemingly) current is turned into the carbons. However, I have seen worse projected pictures than the Palace is putting on now. Whether their machine has been overhauled since my last visit or not, I can not say, but it is certain that the jumpiness was not so evident, nor were the pictures rushed through as if every minute were their last. The music, piano, was tiddlety-ding all the way through, displaying a lack of either "pep" or intelligence. After each picture is over in this theater, a nice, well arranged row of incandescents all 'round the curtain is flashed on. I presume this novelty is put on for the benefit of the various oculists in the city. Anyway, it's a cruelty.

At the Tenth Street Theater to which we went next, a remarkably fine program was offered, including Vitagraph's "Regeneration." The photography and acting of this picture admit of little criticism. No better mechanical work was ever put into a Life Portrayal. We were delighted for we expected to see more of the flashy photography of which my friend has complained so much of late. Whether due to hasty work and over-production or not, is hard to tell. But it is an indisputable fact the Vitagraph has, for the past few months, been releasing reels throughout the length of which flashes of white constantly appear. This fault was absent in "Regeneration," and it is to be hoped will remain so in the future.

Mr. Peetfish, the operator at the Tenth Street, must have taken a word to the wise, for he projected excellent pictures Sunday evening. His light and timing were both good, so here's to him. It would be well for a handsome house like this one is to secure a lens which will make the picture fit the frame, or else change the frame to suit. This defect and some more chewing gum music are at present Tenth Street's only drawbacks. The nice little lady at the "pianer" had picked up somewhere a triad of pretty little tunes and hummed away on them regardless of whether a scenic or an emotional scene was flitting past on the screen.

We slipped over to the Subway, on Walnut Street, and discovered a candidate—not for the M. P. Hall of Fame—but for the M. P. Dippy House. He's the trap drummer. And he can't blame the pianist, either. What did he do? Well, maybe his crime is excusable in the Subway, but Mr. Martin, to my mind, has here good material to work on. He, in addition to dropping about a dozen different objects (so it sounded), all the way from glass up to a brick, blew a combination engine-whistle-baby cry when the beautiful lady and handsome artist in Selig's "An Artist's Idyl" fell into the water. Now maybe he didn't pull off all those effects mentioned, but anyway, it SOUNDED like it—and the audience laughed at this artistic stunt.

The Subway's operator must not have read the Moving Picture World lately—nor the manager. If they had they would probably have taken my suggestion to heart. As it is, the whole left half of their picture is still out of focus—has been all fall, I presume. In addition to this, the flicker in the picture is very bad, so between the two our eyes were "on the blink" when we made our exit. Let me add that the trap drummer's use of the base drum and ratchet to represent the falling chair in Pathe's "Raffle's Caught" was very bad taste, but only in keeping with his interpretation of Selig's effort, "The Artist's Idyl."

I wish the Kalem people could have seen their "Colleen Bawn" exhibited as I saw it in the Aurora Theater in Lawrence. The fine points about this little house have been mentioned before. Mr. Dan Childs, whose interpretation of pictures is unassailable, did wonders for this production with beautiful old Irish music. The projection, as usual in this house, was excellent. The only fault to be found with these pictures is some dark photography and uneven tinting. However, these defects can be overlooked in view of their other perfect qualities.

The naval demonstration was the star attraction while it lasted. It was certainly some pumpkins and those who witnessed it will have something to tell their grandchildren and other people's grandchildren about. The newspapers gave it lots of space and told how this and that dignitary worked himself to a state of exhaustion to make it success, but not a word was mentioned about the men who dodged about the waters where the gigantic fleet was anchored to secure pictures that would make the affair a matter of picture history. They were there by scores. On shore, on water and war vessels. They certainly worked like beavers and, although their efforts failed to receive recognition from the press, the public will have an opportunity to appreciate their work. The newspaper men are supposed to have every resource at their command. In the naval demonstration the moving picture men had them distanced.

In closing I want to ask a question: Are the manufacturers to continue the use of the breathing-through-the reed-under water stunt as long as they have the loss-of-memory-and-recover suddenly gag? Three times within the past month has this novelty been used—twice in Kalem productions and once in Pathe. However, the use of this situation is only one example of many other situations and novelties which are worn to the bone every week in the year by the producers.

The New England Invasion.

By Henry.
Sketches by Hugh F. Hoffman.

WHAT promises to become a regular thing in moving picturedom was done by the Vitagraph Company during the week of November 13th. The plan of having a large body of moving picture exhibitors visit the studio is a good one from many points of view. It was first done by the Selig Company a number of weeks ago when two hundred visitors from Chicago and surrounding towns were entertained. But this undertaking by the Vitagraph concern is especially noteworthy for the reason that the guests came from a comparatively distant city and were transported in private cars. There were fifty-eight in the party, including special correspondents and photographers from some of the Boston papers. The list of names was published in The World last week. A grand good time had been arranged for the New England exhibitors by Mr. Charles L. Fuller, traveling representative of the Vitagraph Company, and none of the arrangements went amiss. From the time the train left Boston, the trip was a continuous joy-ride for all concerned. Out of charity we refrain from recording the details of the run from Boston to New York. Far be it from us to tip off any friends of ours for indulging their idiosyncrasies when the ship gets out of sight of land.

Frank Howard, the Bell-Cow.

After a safe but stormy journey the party arrived in New York and took forcible possession of the Hotel Imperial, headed by the only Italian band in America that did not embark for Tripoli. The grill-room was appropriated and regular guests who did not appreciate good music were forced to retire to their rooms by the intermittent blasts of the tuba player. By 1 A. M. there were a few cases of non-compos-mentis under observation in the psychopathic ward.

At 9 o'clock on the morning of Wednesday, November 15th, three large able-bodied sight-seeing cars were waiting at the Imperial Hotel, at which time quite a few of the visiting brothers were still in the feathers, dreaming sweet dreams regardless of their obligations to the Vitagraph Company. Upon these the hose was turned, but that is another story.

Ernest Horstmann, Olympia, Lynn, Mass.

The fresh air on the way to Brooklyn had a wonderful effect that was remarked by many. What meaning this had was not divulged within our hearing. At any rate, the invading forces arrived at the Brooklyn plant of the Vitagraph Company at hign noon. As they stepped from the touring cars into the mud, a moving picture battery was placed at an advantageous point and the pictures show the New England boys stepping very high with all the grace of trained kangaroos. As the party entered the studio grounds by the big gate, another moving picture camera caught the steady and dignified advance of the "amusement trust" of New England. The procession was headed by Frank Howard, holding the string of one of the Vitagraph's large dogs. The picture was extremely dignified until the dog spied a feline sitting in the right of way and promptly forgot his good manners when he dived for the black cat. Frank Howard, at the other end of the dog's rope, was looking in another direction and nearly had his neck broken by the sudden jerk.

The visiting members were royally entertained. They inspected every part of the Vitagraph plant and, many of them for the first time, had an opportunity to see just how moving pictures are made. During the tour of inspection the party was given an excellent luncheon by the Vitagraph Company who, in this, as in every other particular, spread themselves and spared no expense in giving the visitors a royal good time. "Pop" Rock, Stuart Blackton and Albert Smith personally conducted the visit and certainly made the boys feel at home. As evening shadows fell, the automobile party started back for the Imperial Hotel, where once again the Italian band made the welkin ring. At 10 P. M., with the band at their head, the boys marched down Broadway to Gane's Theater, at 31st Street and Broadway, and there saw themselves in the moving picture that had been taken of them earlier in the day. They perched themselves in the balcony and as the pictures were thrown upon the screen there were many ribald remarks and critical aspersions by the several exhibitors on their various peculiarities of steppage.

Joe Mack, Hub Theater, Boston.

There can be no doubt that visits of this kind are beneficial both to the manufacturer and to the exhibitor. Every exhibitor should know exactly how moving pictures are made. On the journey and during the visit the exhibitors had every opportunity to mingle and become better acquainted. Good feeling prevailed and organization was on the tip of the tongue a good part of the time. There is nothing better than a junket of this kind for exhibitors to get their minds off the details of business and discuss matters concerning their general welfare, and there is no doubt but that this trip of the New England exhibitors will weld them together in friendship and be productive of stronger organization.

W. H. Foster, Keith's, Boston.

The Vitagraph Company deserve a word of congratulation for their unselfish enterprise. Also a considerable amount of praise should go to Mr. Fuller, who organized the party and carried it through to such a notable success. Let us hope that more manufacturers will show the same enterprise as has the Vitagraph Company.

MOVING PICTURES AND THE CHURCH.

In telling his congregation of the good effects that might be realized from a moving picture show of a proper kind, the Rev. J. Whitcomb Brougher, at the Temple Baptist Church, Los Angeles, Cal., announced that as soon as possible a moving picture feature will be added to his church.

The moving picture machine is establishing itself as a part of religious services, but promises to receive a setback at the First Baptist Church, Topeka, Kan., on account of a failure of the collections to be large enough to meet the expenses of showing the pictures. This new departure in religious services has caught the popular fancy and is drawing large crowds, but the new members of the congregation evidently live on Tightwad Street.

Moving pictures of a character more generally elevating than those offered by the nickel and dime theaters of the city, courses of lectures along the line of Christian ministration to boys and men, may be given in Detroit churches and Sunday school rooms this winter if the suggestions of the local social service committee of the Men and Religion Forward Movement are carried out.

At a special meeting of the directors of the Young Men's Temperance Society, Allentown, Pa., it was decided to run moving pictures at their hall during the winter months.

London Letter.

By E. J. M.

"ARE films shown at English theaters to be subject to censorship?" is the question of the hour. Already one town (Blackburn) has decreed that all films must be submitted to the chief constable previous to exhibition and others are sure to follow. Special legislation is unnecessary because of the wide powers conferred upon local authorities by the Cinematograph Act (1909), which permits them to endorse the license with any restrictions they may think fit. At the same time it is hardly likely that the government will permit local licensing bodies to be at variation one with the other. It would therefore not be surprising if an act of Parliament were introduced to make censorship compulsory.

Most of the American films are of course produced in such a manner that they will satisfy the censor, but with continental subjects that is unfortunately not the case; and it is those films which are the cause of all the trouble. The daily newspapers are not helping matters either, for some of the correspondence from "A Father of Six" is obviously manufactured in the office. Nevertheless I am not going to pretend to defend those manufacturers who are short-sighted enough to produce films depicting murder, rape, theft and suicide. Such firms are reaping their just reward because all the better class of renters refuse to buy subjects that are not absolutely O. K.; but the trouble begins when certain of the smaller fry buy up anything that is extra vile and circulate it throughout the country, to the detriment of respectable theaters who would not dream of showing such subjects.

I am rather surprised that the two principal trade journals in London are scouting the idea of the establishing of a Board of Censorship. Surely they must realize that anything which will tend to uplift the picture theater in the eyes of the public is a desirable thing to have, and it would be a valuable asset to any exhibitor to be able to truthfully say "All films shown at this theater have been passed by the censor." Cinematograph theaters have been so persistently damned in the daily and weekly press during the last few years that one would have thought that any proposition which would confound the critics would be received with open arms.

After all is said and done the legitimate manufacturer, who takes a pride in his work and turns out clean, wholesome films, should have no cause to feel faint-hearted. It is the man with nothing to lose and everything to gain who releases the questionable stuff. And the sooner he is put out of business the better it will be for everybody.

The first Majestic release is distinctly good and the producers are to be congratulated upon the degree of photographic quality they have attained. But, please keep comedies a bit shorter. 1,000 is too much by 200 feet for this market. I am sure that sales would have doubled if the subject had been below the 800 mark. Surely it is more profitable to sell fifty copies each 750 or 800 than 25 at 1,000 feet. Most of the English, French and Italian comedies are less than 600 feet in length, at which they sell more than freely. Mind you, I am not taking it upon myself to lay down a doctrine, because you might not follow it if I did, but I give the hint for what it is worth.

Had a chat to-day with H. E. Aitken, president of the Majestic Film Company, who is here on a flying visit. He only arrived on Monday and is off again on Saturday, so that he will be back in New York almost before these lines are in print. Mr. Aitken gave me a lot of interesting news that is not for publication for the present, but he will have some interesting copy for the editor when he returns.

One and all, we in Europe offer our deepest sympathy with W. N. Selig in the trouble he has gone through, but we heartily congratulate him on escaping with his life. I saw E. H. Montagu, Selig's London representative, this morning and was glad to hear that he has just received a cablegram announcing that W. N. is progressing favorably, which is good news. To the wife and children of the unfortunate producer, Boggs, we also tender our sympathies. He died in the execution of his duty. One cannot say more.

H. A. Spoor has just returned from Berlin and is very enthusiastic concerning the prospects of the office which he has opened there. He says that some people tried to warn him off Germany, but he is evidently confounding the critics, for he assures me that he is already making a profit of the office, and it has only been opened a matter of two months. Mr. Spoor tells me, however, that the class of subject that is in demand varies considerably from the generally accepted code of English or American morals that are usually incorporated in a film. For instance, the German will not pass any film that in any way strikes at the fundamental Teuton rule—AUTHORITY with a very capital A—consequently no film which in any way suggests a rising of the down-trodden is permitted. You may burlesque a working man, but you must not do the same thing of a policeman or soldier! On the other hand, there is more liberty in the moral code as between man and woman! Well, well! However, from what I know of Essanay subjects, I think they can fill the market pretty well without having recourse to either of the type of films mentioned.

Group of New England Exhibitors Entertained by the Vitagraph Company at Its Plant in Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 15.

The Cinematograph Defense League is dead. Formed some twenty-two months ago for the purpose of assisting exhibitors to fight the Cinematograph Act, it gradually dwindled away until at the last the meetings were hardly better than a farce. It would be uncharitable to discuss the reasons for its failure, though they were common property, but in view of the fact that a new association will probably arise in the near future it is perhaps advisable to let sleeping dogs lie.

Under title of "The Pictures," Markt & Co. are publishing weekly a smart little magazine containing Biograph, Kalem and Lubin film plots written up in the form of short stories. Priced at one penny (two cents), it is selling in large quantities. There is apparently a profit made on the magazine, so that the advertising value is obtained for nothing. Again, well, well!! Friend Nichols does not miss much.

A NEW STAR IN THE PICTURE FIRMAMENT.

Though not altogether unknown in pictures, Dorothy Gibson really owes her first and proper introduction to the picture-loving public to the Eclair Company, whose leading player she now is. We say "not altogether unknown," because Miss Gibson played in pictures before she joined the Eclair stock company; but the others failed to recognize her charming personality to its full worth and, consequently, missed a "one best bet." As has been mentioned frequently, Miss Gibson's first claim to public notice was gained as the favorite model of Mr. Harrison Fisher, the popular artist. She is now destined to gain a much wider and more lasting reputation through pictures.

It is in comedy—high-class comedy—that Miss Dorothy is destined to shine; that she can shine with all her charming, winsome manner is sufficiently proved by her appearance in the coming Eclair comedy, "Miss Masquerader," to establish the truth of these prefatory remarks. "Miss Masquerader," let it be known, is the first comedy release by the American Eclair company of players and will follow immediately the more pretentious subject, "Hands Across the Sea in '76," reviewed at length last week. The story is very slight, though logical and consistently told, yet it serves its purpose in affording Miss Gibson an excellent opportunity to show us what she can do. In this she plays the part of a young girl who has become tired of being loved for her money and who wants to find someone who will love just her. She coaxes her uncle to take her to his country club in the disguise of a man, and in this way she mixes with the rest of the men until she finds one that suits her fancy. Her efforts in following up the advantage gained develop some very good comedy situations and give both photographer and players an opportunity to produce a succession of clever effects.

Especially noticeable is the reposeful work of Miss Dorothy. She has acquired the knack of expressing herself without excessive gesture or facial contortion, a failing so common among photoplayers and so distressing to those who view them. Miss Gibson is to be congratulated upon her singular ability and the Eclair Company upon having secured her services, for, if the pace set by "Miss Masquerader" is kept up, Eclair comedies and Miss Gibson will be prime favorites with the photoplay enthusiasts.

FRANK CRANE A COMET DIRECTOR.

familiar to theatergoers during his long term with the Thanhouser Company than any other Independent actor, as he appeared in the New Rochelle pictures from their very first issue, and was the first Independent leading man to lecture on the pictures he appeared in. Directing is not a new business to Mr. Crane, who has prepared many vaudeville and stage productions and acted as a temporary director for Thanhouser last summer. But he becomes a permanent director with the Comet, and most of this brand of film will be from his hands. The first is "The Late Mrs. Early," released December 1st, and the second, "Just In Time for Dinner." Mr. Crane has conceived some new ideas relative to producing of The-Picture-As-It-Ought-To-Be, and his Comet work is being watched with interest by his many admirers among the Independent theaters men. Crane distinguished himself in the leading roles of such of the Thanhouser "classics" as "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Ten Nights in a Bar-room," "Rip Van Winkle," "John Halifax, Gentleman," "Old Curiosity Shop," and "Silas Marner."

IMP INDUSTRIAL PICTURES.

Mr. Carl Laemmle, the president of the Imp Company, is an advocate of better film stories and believes the moving picture can be utilized to instruct the young. To that end he is making a commendable effort to obtain subjects along industrial and educational lines. Two very praiseworthy films are awaiting release at the Imp factory which will not fail to interest. One of of them consists of scenes on an American tea farm. The growing of tea is illustrated from the time of the sprouts to the packing in the boxes ready for market. Every stage in the growth and cultivation is shown, making a remarkable film. Tea is quite a national beverage and those who use it daily will be interested. Another film that is replete with information illustrates the growing, cultivating and marketing of cotton. The scenes shown take one through the processes, the cotton gin, the baling, hauling, weighing and shipping being done in excellent photography and fidelity to facts. The Southern darkies and their crude way of conveying the cotton to the gin and to the steamer furnishes types many have read about but have never seen. It is a film that will not only entertain but will educate. This subject will be released Saturday, Dec. 9.

CONDENSER BREAKAGE.—So very many inquiries come in concerning the prevention of condenser breakage that it may be well to sum up, in one article, what is known on the subject. Let it be clearly understood, however, that there is no universal panacea for this evil. As a rule every individual case must be treated according to its individual circumstances.

Generally speaking condenser breakage is due to uneven expansion and contraction of the glass, though it may be chargeable to other causes, such as the lens fitting too tightly in a metal mount. This uneven expansion is greater when there is sudden change of temperature, but sudden change of temperature does not explain the matter altogether since the front lens, which gets pretty hot, is exposed to every vagrant breeze that blows. In general I am of the opinion, based on the last part of the foregoing sentence, that up to a certain degree of temperature there is slight danger of a lens breaking; beyond that heat it breaks readily. Just what that degree is I do not know.

Granting this to be true then one of the prime requisites to the reduction of breakage is that of keeping the temperature inside the lamphouse as low as possible. Where local law allows one to do so I would recommend that the entire back of the lamphouse be left open. There is absolutely no danger from fire by so doing. I would recommend that where this cannot be done a metal pipe be connected to top of lamphouse and run to a chimney flue, if convenient, or to the vent flue or to the open air. It would necessarily have to be equipped with a swing joint to allow of shoving the lamphouse over to the stereopticon. If this pipe is not installed then at any rate take great care to keep the screen in top of lamphouse hood perfectly clean so that heated air may readily escape. Avoid opening the lamphouse door immediately after cutting off the arc, particularly if heavy amperage be used. Never allow the breeze from the operating room fan to play directly on the lamphouse, or in such manner that a strong draft is created on the door side of the lamphouse. If there is ample ventilation in lamphouse have ventholes in condenser casing wide open. If lamphouse is closed tightly don't have too much ventilation in condenser casing. If lenses of same focal length are used front and back put front lens in back and new one in front in replacing broken lens. If a round metal mount is used, never put in a lens which fits tightly. Grind edge of lens off if necessary until there is 1/16 inch play, using a coarse grindstone for the purpose. Never allow a lens to fit very tight in any kind of mount. Some have had success or at least thought they had, by allowing new lenses to remain in the oven of the home cook stove for a week or two. Others place them in cold water and bring to a boil, allowing to cool off slowly. These schemes, while of doubtful value, may do some good and are not likely to do any harm, though one man did report that the cook stove plan broke half a dozen lenses for him. One correspondent reported stopping breakage by laying extra lenses on top of his lamphouse until needed. Many inquire if high priced lenses break less readily than cheap ones. There probably is a difference in favor of the higher grade article. They have. Beyond this I believe there is little can be said of value on the subject of Beyond this I believe there is little that can be said of value on the subject of condenser breakage.

MOTOR GENERATORS.—Mr. J. H. Hallberg, New York City, writes: "On page 546, Nov. 18, 1911, issue of the Moving Picture World, appears reference to a letter from the Western Electric Company, of Denver, Colo., under the heading, 'Field Regulation,' concerning the operation of projector arc lamps on motor generator sets, the generator end of which produces the current by which the projector arc is operated.

"I do not want to get into an argument with any one in connection with this matter, but through your courteous invitation in the last paragraph of the article, I feel at liberty to say something on the subject, particularly in view of my considerable experience as manufacturer and inventor of machines for this purpose; also there is another matter which leads me to say something at this time, viz.: the fact that you question the satisfactory operation of the projector arc on such a machine as described by the Western Electric Company. In this I sustain you for reasons set forth below.

"The projector arc, on direct current, burning without any enclosing globe, with proper quality and style of carbons, requires not less than 42 volts nor more than 60 volts potential drop across the arc proper. If the arc be maintained below 42 volts, the carbon points will not be properly consumed and especially on the negative carbon point there will be formed a cap of considerably harder substance than the carbon, and of much higher resistance, which will absolutely make it impossible to maintain a steady arc. While automatic lamps can be made to maintain the arc at between 40 and 45 volts, with an average of 42½ volts at the arc, it is practically impossible for an operator to manipulate a hand-fed projector arc lamp and maintain the arc within these limits. In view of the greater leeway necessary with hand-fed arc lamps, a voltage of 50 to 55 has been established as the standard for the potential drop across the arc on a projector lamp operating with D. C. When I say that 50 volts is required at the arc this does not mean that 50 volts from a constant potential electric circuit is sufficient for the maintenance of such an arc, because an electric arc is of such nature that for a given separation of the carbon points the resistance of the arc decreases as the amperes are increased. Now you understand that if there is a constant voltage on the system of about 50 or 55 and an arc is struck across this potential, it will represent almost a dead short circuit and the greater the amount of amperes the lower will be the resistance of the arc, hence if the voltage does not drop on the line the arc will increase to the limit of the capacity of the wires, which will ultimately melt.

Having stated that we are dealing in connection with an increase of current, it is evident that some means must be provided between the constant potential current supply and the arc which will act just opposite to the arc, in other words a resistance or an element of negative force must be introduced in series with the arc. This cannot be done without an increase of line voltage, and good practice is to provide at least 25 per cent additional voltage for the standing resistance or ballast, and as a general rule a 50 volt projector arc cannot be maintained on a constant potential supply delivering below 65 or 70 volts, but with 75 volts the results will be better.

"The foregoing refers to the operation on a constant potential dynamo driven by a motor forming a motor generator set, having an ordinary field rheostat in series with the shunt field winding for the control of "Either 'Western Electric' is not familiar with the type of machine discussed in your column or else he has not clearly stated his case, because as described in the article in your department, your criticism holds good and his system will not work.

"If, however, a special generator is provided in place of the ordinary constant potential 55 volt generator, it is not only possible but very desirable to maintain the projector arc at 50 to 55 volts without any resistance in series with the arc. In this case the dynamo is not of the constant potential type, but rather of a constant current type; in other words it is a dynamo which will deliver a steady amperage at a varying voltage, somewhat similar in type to the old arc dynamo used years ago, some of which are still in service, for the control of 6.8 and 9.6 ampere open arc lamps operating in series. With such a dynamo it is possible to freeze the carbons and it is an actual fact that the load on the motor will drop to almost nothing when the carbons are frozen, but the moment you separate the carbons the load on the motor will be in direct proportion to the distance between the carbon points, making the ideal current controlling device, and at the same time current saver for projector arc lamps. The control is accomplished by making the dynamo with a shunt winding and a very large series or compound winding on the pole pieces, so connected, however, that the compound winding will oppose the shunt winding, thereby establishing a magnetic balance, the tendency of which is to keep the amperes quite steady at the arc irrespective of a normal increase or decrease of distance between the carbon points. If I may be pardoned for making the statement I want to say that the Hallberg Direct Current Economizer is of this kind, and has given excellent satisfaction during the past four years."

Mr. Hallberg, who certainly is entitled to respectful hearing on such questions as this, has set forth precisely the general view I have held. One statement made by San Diego, Cal., two weeks ago would seem, if correct, to clear up one point which had seemed to me to be an insurmountable objection to the use of a dynamo of any ordinary type without resistance. It appeared to me that the instant the arc resistance be removed by freezing the carbons, something was bound to happen unless some other form of resistance, such as field resistance, be instantly inserted. Surely, it seemed to me, at the very least there must be a terrific overload on the generator. San Diego, however, claims that under these conditions the shunt wound generator drops its voltage entirely. This would mean that at least the dynamo would not be injured, but it would involve constant liability to lose the arc entirely. I can readily see where and why a dynamo of the type suggested by Mr. Hallberg would, by the compounding counteracting the shunt, automatically take care of such a condition. I do know that competent operators who understand the machine and its care have reported excellent results from Mr. Hallberg's D. C. economizer.

Presumably Mr. Hallberg's letter will elicit reply. I would ask that those taking part in this discussion try to give exact reasons for their claims. It is not sufficient to say that thus and so produces this and that result. We want to know exactly, in detail, why those results are produced and we want it in plain language which the average man can grasp and understand, to the end that the greatest amount of good be done to the greatest possible number. Our thanks are due Mr. Hallberg for his excellent letter.

FILM SPEED.—Ottawa, Kan., writes: "How many minutes should it take to run a standard reel of 1,000 feet? In other words, to obtain the best results how many revolutions of the machine crank should there be per minute? Why do some pictures flicker more than others when all are run under the same conditions? Ought some pictures be run faster than others, or should the speed be uniform?"

Any flicker there may be is always more pronounced on light scenes than on dark ones. While I have called attention time and again to the matter of speed, and its vital importance, I will, for the benefit of our newer readers take it up again. Speed is of very, very great importance and a comprehension of this fact is absolutely necessary to do really fine projection. The operator "renders" a film, if he is a real operator, exactly as does the musician render a piece of music, in that, within limits, the action of the scene being portrayed depends entirely on his judgment. In the "Passion Play" he can make Peter act the part of a jumping jack and he can turn a horse race into a howling farce, by overspeeding and underspeeding. Generally speaking 17 minutes is the average time for 1,000 feet of film. This by reason of the fact that normal speed is 60 turns of the crank per minute, that being the speed the camera is supposed to be run in taking the picture. However, the camera operator guesses at speed and doesn't always hit it very closely. I have timed a camera operator, without his knowledge, running nearly 70, and again as low as 50. Probably the speed will, taking one scene with another, average about 60. There is one rule, and one rule only, the operator must be guided by if he wishes to produce artistic projection, viz.: the action of the scene being portrayed. The one and only exception to this is scenic films, in which there are no moving figures. Take the "Passion Play" (Pathe), for example. It should be run right down to the limit of slowness. It is much more impressive thus. The scenes are religious and solemn and the figures should move slowly. To run at normal speed (60) would not bring out the full beauty and impressiveness of the scenes. To run at 65 or 70 would make of it a howling farce. Imagine the figure of the Saviour carrying the cross at a gallop. I have seen very near that same thing. I would cheerfully have paid five dollars for the privilege of heaving a brick into that operating room. It was a shameful debauchery of projection. On the other hand I have seen an automobile race appear utterly ridiculous by being run too slowly. I have seen a man falling who appeared to float down—underspeed. I have seen persons walking, having a floating motion, utterly absurd (too slow), and again with their legs twinkling along as though they were automatons. Watch the scene closely and by variation of speed bring out everything there is in it. No set rule applies. Only the application of brains to the matter of speed can properly render a film. That is one reason why the real operator never takes his eye from the screen. I have often changed speed half a dozen times on one film of 1,000 feet. Operators will do well to put in a film before or after the show, when no one is present, and note the difference in running a scene at various speeds. It requires rare good judgment to be able to correctly judge the speed which will produce the best curtain result on any average scene.

MACHINE TROUBLE.—Sioux City, Ia., writes: "I overhauled my Edison, Model B, and had some trouble. Put in all new parts, including bushings and new left hand side. The left side has no groove for the shutter to travel through. Had to cut off part of the shutter and now unless I thread just right there is travel ghost. The machine runs very smoothly since overhauling. California asks for spotlight. I use tin slides in my stereo slide carrier. Have several of different sizes."

That isn't what California is after. He wants a regular spotlight. As to the machine, you did wrong in cutting off the shutter. You will have to get a new shutter, price $1, and then file a slot, or groove, in the casting. This you can readily do and it will take care of the whole matter.

SEVERAL THINGS.—Anadarko, Okla., writes: "Place our show among the names of those 'just opened'—The Nusho Theater. We are the second show in this little city, which boasts about 3,500 population. Have a Powers 6, driven by a Kimble motor; A. C. 110 volts transformed to D. C. through a mercury arc rectifier. Seating capacity 300; throw 75 feet; picture 12 feet; aluminum screen. I want to speak a good word for both the Powers 6 and the rectifier. The other house is using practically the same amperage for lighting and for their projection arc, but they use a rheostat. Their bill for current average $35 per month. We have been open two weeks and the bill was $8.20, or at the rate of $16.40 per month. Some difference? That should speak well for the rectifier, I think. Also the other show has a patent screen costing $250, while mine is aluminum and yet my picture illumination is much the best. Still I am not entirely satisfied, as the screen seems to give a glaring effect—too bright. Wish you could give me a good formula for aluminum coating for screen. Noticed what you said about the set of books put out by the American Correspondence School, of Chicago. You were perfectly right in criticising them as you did. I just had them on trial and sent them back. In theory they are all right as far as they go, but as for learning real operating from them—nothing doing. I put in the best part of eleven years at the crank and if I could not use less words and tell more than do those books I would undertake to eat what I did write, paper and all."

I did give space to quite a few aluminum coating formulas, but what worked well in the hands of one man was a failure in the hands of another, so I discontinued it. Also there are now several good patent curtains on the market. Unquestionably the rectifier effects a large saving as against a rheostat. The books were as I described them. I was quite lenient in dealing with them, I believe. Ordinary aluminum coatings usually give the harsh, glaring effect of which you complain. They are brighter—yes, but the harsh effect is usually present.

INFORMATION WANTED.—Tyndall, S. D., writes: "Enclosed find check for copy of handbook. Am constant reader of the World, especially of the Department. Am using an Edison machine and it is beginning to buck. What causes the film to run loose and tangle up in the take-up magazine towards end of reel? It has only done so lately and the machine makes more noise than formerly. Can we use A. C. on the arc? Have D. C. plant of our own. Have tried A. C. and find the light is very dim. Would we have to have different lamphouse for A. C.? Voltage of both currents is same, viz.: 110. Do the Edison people make an outside shutter for their old machines?"

Plainly you are in need of the handbook, Tyndall. In all probability the film "runs loose" at end of reel, for the reason that you haven't enough tension on take-up. It is also possible the take-up belt is too loose. If belt is loose stretch tightly around pulleys and cut about ¼ to ⅜ inch shorter than when stretched by hand. The take-up belt pulley is split. A coil spring holds the two halves together under pressure. It is this that provides the friction to revolve the reel. Spring is held by a collar. Loosen screw and move this collar in a little, but only enough to take up all the film. Too much tension on the take-up is very bad. Just barely enough to take up all the reel is right. It will be well to take off the belt, remove collar and spring and pull off the loose half of the grooved pulley and examine the fiber surface. It may be the fiber is worn out or else soaked with oil. In either case get new fiber. You did not say how old machine is or what model. Probably the gears and cam and star are becoming worn and need renewing. You can use A. C. for projection, with same lamp, lamphouse and connections, but it is not nearly equal to D. C. You must use much higher amperage for given curtain illumination. See the handbook. Not knowing model of machine, cannot answer your last query regarding shutter. If it is an Exhibition Model I don't think they do.

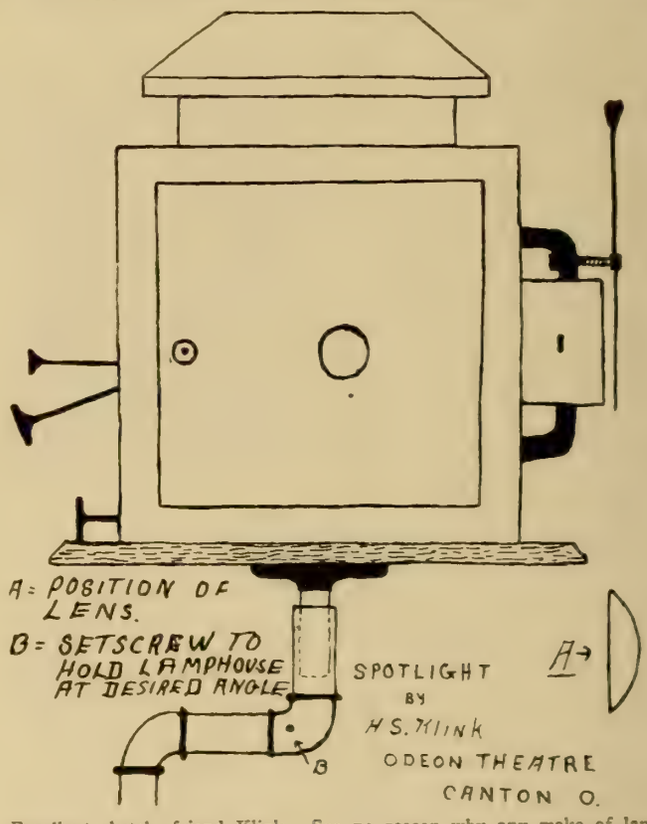
EMBRYO OPERATOR.—Philadelphia, Pa., is learning the profession of operating. Has position with an operator, but says his teacher's knowledge seems somewhat crude. Has handbook and says it is valuable and a great aid to him. Desires, when he qualifies, to apply for license and wants to know if I can suggest a list of questions that will be put to him; also suggest name of an elemental work on electricity.

My sympathy is with the man who is honestly seeking to learn, but I could not suggest a list of questions, nor would I do so for various reasons. Elemental works on electricity are legion, but I know of absolutely none of very much value to the learning operator. Perhaps you will get as much from "Modern Electrical Construction," Frederick J. Drake & Company, publishers, Chicago, as any one electrical book I know of. In examination you will be tested as to your practical knowledge of electricity as applied to projection, wiring, wires, etc., and probably also on motion picture mechanisms. You must know the size of wires and their capacity, the effect of resistance and how to hitch it up in various ways. In fact you must demonstrate to the examiners the fact that you are possessed of enough bona fide knowledge to successfully handle a projection plant.

SPOTLIGHT.—St. Louis, Mo., writes: "Replying to California: I have an old Powers lamphouse and lamp which I use for spotlight, at 1310 Franklin Avenue, this city. Throw is 90 feet. I get a round spot with a lens of 10 in focal length, 4½ inch diameter. My employer says it is the best spot ever used in his house. The arc is only about 6 inches from the lens. Same may be inspected at any time at above address."

Many thanks for the contribution, St. Louis. Comment is unnecessary.

ANOTHER SPOTLIGHT.—Mr. H. S. Klink, Canton, Ohio, writes: "Find enclosed sketch of Powers lamphouse I converted into a spotlight. Made mine several years ago and in remodeling the house some time ago it got smashed. Only wish I had another Powers lamphouse to make a duplicate. You only use one condensing lens, convex side toward screen. Doubtless something could be done with the Edison lamphouse by removing the cone. Use common condenser lens. No fear of breaking them. I used about 15 amperes on 105 feet throw. I used a Powers lamp. Stand is of water pipe and can be made any desired height."



Excellent sketch, friend Klink. See no reason why any make of lamphouse and lamp could not be used for this purpose, providing lamphouse be long enough or an extension be put on front to carry lens.

SOUTHLAND.—Montgomery, Ala., writes: "Have just moved from Abbeville, S. C., to this city. Change address of paper at once, as I feel lost without the World and the projection department. Can't get along without them. I have the best picture in the city—so they say, though we have a mirror screen to compete with. Use a No. 6, Edison lamp, 50 amperes of 110 volt D. C. Have seen a lot of poor projection in this section of the country, especially in the small towns. This is probably due to poor equipment and the fact that salaries are altogether too low to attract good operators. But it is not all bad. We have, here in the South, some excellent men who know their business from the ground up."

Address has been changed, but you gave no street address, therefore paper goes to Montgomery, Gen. Del. The South probably has its share of the very limited supply of really competent operators. Those of poor, or mediocre ability, are to be found everywhere.

MICA SLIDES.—Will department readers who have had experience with mica stereo slides kindly inform the editor, immediately, as to their opinion of mica as compared to glass for this purpose, setting forth reasons for their conclusions in detail, based on experience?

TROUBLES OF HIS OWN.—New York City writes: "(1) Can you tell me why condensers break continually in the Standard lamphouse? Broke two lenses in two years when using Powers 5. With Standard they break as fast as I can put them in. (2) Used to have best light in Harlem or the Bronx, but lost my crown about two months ago. Have large, blue spot in center of screen. Can remove same by placing lamphouse back, but then sides get very dark. Current is 110 volt D. C. Throw = 70 feet, 14½ feet picture. Use 1¼ inch M. P. lens and one 6½ and one 7½ condensing lenses, the 7½ next the arc. Have tried lenses of various focal length, but without beneficial result. (3) Operating room is grounded on negative wire and machine is grounded to operating room. Get full light with best lamp by touching one wire to positive carbon and other to lamphouse. By touching negative carbon and lamphouse I get half light. Don't believe this ought to be. (4) About once every show an explosion occurs in lamphouse, not like so much powder. There is a slight report and sometimes it lifts top of lamphouse. (5) Have Standard rheostat, tested at Standard factory on 117 V., pulling 26 amperes under test, on striking arc with new carbons. After crater was burned it delivered about 22 amperes. Here it blows a 30 ampere fuse about every ten minutes. On test another rheostat, of different make, supposed to deliver 25 amperes, did not blow the fuse with four carbons cut out. Standard people furnished another rheostat, which delivered 22 amperes with new carbons, these lowered to 17, under factory test. Same result followed when installed here, viz.: it blew 30 ampere fuse. (6) How long, in your judgment, will a new Standard machine last, running 9 hours a day, 7 of them at a 14 minute clip and two at a 6 minute speed per reel? Sundays and rush days at 7 minutes per reel? (7) Does a larger pulley on upper pulley of motor effect the motor by driving the machine faster? (8) Do you think three reels and a song per hour, stopping to thread up, is good policy to hold the crowd? (9) Why is it that with a Standard machine, with a side throw, one cannot get clear white light on stereo and at same time get stereo picture in center of screen? My operating room is just 48 square feet in area and for its size I believe has no equal in New York City. Have all necessary tools and do all my own work. One doesn't have to have a ten acre lot to be neat and clean."

Well, New York, you have certainly sprung a bundle of them. (1) The condenser breakage is not the fault of the Standard. Have had same complaint on all makes of machine. See "Condenser Breakage" elsewhere in the department this week. (2) You ought to use two 6½ inch condensing lenses with a 3½ inch projection lens, I think. Use ⅝ cored above and ½ inch solid carbon, not too hard, below. Using ⅝ cored below, with lower tip too far advanced, will frequently cause ghost, same being shadow of large lower tip. Think, however, trouble lies in wrong combination of lenses. (3) Suppose room is grounded to the neutral wire of a three-wire system. Under these conditions, the lamphouse being also grounded, you would get full light off the positive carbon. The "half light" on negative is a queer thing, but I think would be accounted for by the rheostat being on the negative wire, the ground thus forming a shunt past it to the neutral ground. The condition, while not the best, is permissible. I do not believe in grounded lamphouses.
(4) While I have never personally encountered such a proposition I am aware that, under certain conditions, and where lamphouse is poorly ventilated, gases generated within the lamp house have been known to explode, as you have described. Remedy is to keep vent screen at top and bottom, particularly at top, perfectly clean and free, so that heated air and gases may readily escape. (5) Something wrong with your dope, New York. You say a rheostat of different make did not blow the fuses. Presumably you mean one of same capacity. This proves trouble is not on the line. Unless the rheostat itself carries a heavy ground what you have said simply cannot be. If it only delivered 22 amperes on 117 volts, it certainly could not and would not deliver exceeding 30 amperes, as it would have to, to blow 30 ampere fuses, on 110 volts. (6) Depends on care and grade of oil used. Excessive speed will shorten the life of any machine. (7) Question is not clear. (8) You have already said you run a "seven minute clip." Seven minutes to a reel, allowing two minutes for change and six for the song, would result in six reels and song in an hour. Either you exaggerate or else the reels are very short ones. Seven minutes for a reel of 1,000 feet of film is at the rate of 143 feet per minute—not exactly impossible, but certainly not practical. In general, I have always held the speeding up proposition to be a foolish, penny-wise, pound-foolish policy. It is losing a dollar tomorrow to get a dime today. (9) I know of no good reason for such a condition with the Standard, or any other machine. Set your lamphouse on the stereo side and adjust the stereo lens. Possibly you have not got your lamphouse stop adjusted tight. The lamphouse may slide over too far, or not far enough. The side throw would have nothing whatever to do with getting clear light. It would distort the picture, the amount of distortion depending on size of picture and how much the machine sets to one side.

SMOKE.—Several letters have been received by the editor asking whether or not the smoke from the locomotive smokestack, in certain scenes, is apparently coming from or going into the stack of the engine.

I have looked this matter up and find that in certain scenes where the scene is taken with the locomotive running backward and then the film reversed, making the engine run forward, the effect of the smoke entering the stack is produced. This by reason of the fact that when the film is reversed the whole action is reversed, hence the smoke enters the stack, instead of leaving it.

FINED.—John Kamuda, an operator at the Star Theatre, Warren, Mass., either quit or got fired recently. He proceeded, according to newspaper report of trial, to disable the projection machine before leaving. He was detected, arrested, tried and fined. We are heartily glad to know of his punishment. There are no possible circumstances justifying an operator in doing anything of this kind. It is a mean, contemptible, cowardly method of "getting even" for a grievance, real or fancied. The man who cannot find some more manly method of playing even with one whom he believes has wronged him is too small a pimple to ever amount to much in the projection field or anywhere else.

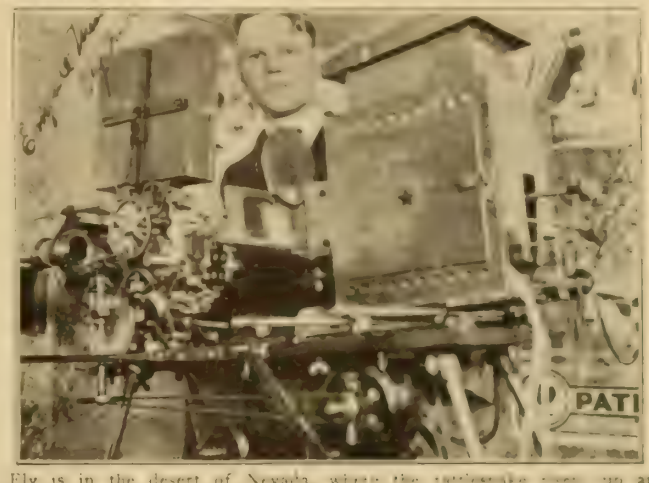
CORRECTION.—Both in the New York Operator's wage scale published October 14, and in the letter of notification sent out to managers by the Union, appears a slight error, viz.: One shift, two men, 12 noon to 11 P. M., should read 12 noon to 12 midnight. The scale which goes into effect next Monday, is as follows:

Matinee and Evenings	$22 per week
And One Hour for Supper
Evenings Only	$18 per week
Evenings and Saturday and Sunday Matinee	$19 per week
Double Shift, 12 Noon to 12 P. M.	$18 per week each man
Double Shift, 1 Noon to 11 P. M.	$18 per week each man
Double Shift, 9 A. M. to 12 P. M.	$22 per week each man
One Shift, two men, 12 Noon to 12 P. M.	$22 per week each

And One Hour for Supper for Each Man.

Relief work at rate of one day's pay. (No Sunday rate to be cut) $3 per day. Relief for supper, 75 cents per hour. No changing of reels by operators, unless they have commutation tickets. This schedule to go into effect on November 27, 1911. William F. McVey, Recording Secretary.

FROM THE DESERT.—Ely, Nev., writes: "Have enclosed pictures of operating rooms and enclose small picture of mine, though could not get much of it in with the small camera. The machine is a Powers 6. Also have a Pathe Professional."



Ely is in the desert of Nevada, where the rattlesnake grows up and smiteth his enemy, the Indian Terror helps make things interesting, the tarantula skippeth about by the light of the moon and all things, including man, are dry. The photo is particularly interesting in that it shows what appears to be a unique form of motor drive and speed regulator combined. Detailed description of that device, accompanied by sketch, or close-view photo, is in order, Ely.

WAGE SCALE.—Springfield, Mass. Moving Picture Machine Operators' L. U. 186, I. A. T. S. E., are working under the following schedule of wages and condition: There is one thing I don't like about the schedule, however, viz.: the reference to a "booth." As long as we talk about "booths" we will have them. We want an OPERATING ROOM, not a "booth" or a "coop" or a "cage." Those terms suggest smallness. They are out of date. Operating room is the word, gentlemen. It is well to publish such scales, as it gives operators in other parts of the country an idea of what is being done in other sections. It also serves as a guide to other organizations in arranging their schedules. The schedule is as follows:

Section 1. All houses with seating capacity of 300 or less, said house running ten hours and using two operators, first operator to receive $20, second operator to receive $15; the working time of two operators to be six and five hours, an extra hour to be used in getting show ready and attend to cleaning of machines and booth. This work to alternate between the two men. All houses running ten hours using two operators, with a seating capacity of over 300, said operators, first operator to receive $20, second operator to receive $18.

Section 2. All houses playing two a day, with seating capacity of 300 or less, working time in said house not to be over eight hours; all houses with over 300 seating capacity, working time of said house not to be over seven hours; operator to receive $20 a week.

Section 3. All houses outside of Springfield, in smaller towns playing two a day, using one operator, operator to receive $18 a week.

Section 4. All houses in small towns playing only evenings and Saturday and holiday matinees, operator shall receive $16 a week.

Section 5. All special and Sunday performances to be $5; six hours to constitute working time. All over six hours, 75 cents an hour. All Sunday night performances of three hours or less, $3.

Section 6. All extra weekly hour work, 50 cents an hour. Six days to constitute a week's work.

Section 7. It is mutually agreed between the managers of all theaters and members of Local 186, M. P. M. O., that in case of a desired change by either party one week's notice is to be given, unless for incompetency, which would mean immediate discharge.

WHY PAY from 25c. to $2.00 per sq. ft. for patent theatre screens when you can make one yourself equal to the best for 7c. per sq. ft.? Write

"PRESIDENT TAFT AT SAN FRANCISCO" (Essanay), November 16.—A topical film containing a very interesting panorama of San Francisco seen from the top of Lone Hill. It also has other views of the city—Market Street, the Cliff House, the Beach and it also shows the President turning the first spadeful of earth for the coming Panama Exposition. It is a good film and should please the average audience.

"THROUGH DARKENED VALES" (Biograph), November 16.—Eyesight, once burned out of human eyes, is probably gone forever and beyond help of any operation. The heroine of this picture was blinded by a flash and later cured by the operation. As in other pictures, her family couldn't afford to pay for it and it was performed at the expense of her lover. We have remarked more than once before while reviewing pictures like this, that the best optical operations can be had in America for nothing. In this case the girl's lover who paid for the operation had also gone blind from eye-strain, due to working over-time to forget his sorrow, because the girl had refused his love. The man whom the girl preferred refused to aid her in her trouble and the true lover, hearing of her need, devoted the money needed for his own operation to relieving the girl. Later, after very unconvincing delays, the girl finds this true lover and determines to be his eyes for thence. In all sincerity, after pointing out that the players are themselves pleasing and the settings pretty, one would have difficulty in finding anything to praise in this poor picture.

"THE NEW SUPERINTENDENT" (Selig), November 16.—There is exciting action enough in this picture to make the audience watch the developments with interest. It includes the discharge of one superintendent and the employment of another, who makes it extremely interesting for the bully. The works are set on fire and the new superintendent manages to capture the ringleader of the lawless element. Meanwhile he is placed in danger himself, but is saved in a sensational scene, in which his sweetheart shoots one of those who are besetting him. The ringleader is sent to prison, the superintendent marries his sweetheart and the business of the works proceeds smoothly after enough turbulence to stir the blood of every one who sees the film.

"A WESTERN POSTMISTRESS" (Pathe), November 16.—The principal figure in this narrative is a girl postmistress, who, beset by bandits attempting to secure a sum of money shipped her by the express company, throws her horse into a narrow pass and holds off her pursuers until help arrives. The story is stirring and sufficiently unusual to add to its interest.

"A NEWSBOY'S LUCK" (Lubin), November 16.—This kind of picture in which a deserving human heart is brought out of sorrow and difficulty into gladness, and it is shown convincingly, makes a strong appeal to spectators; they like it. They liked this picture of a newsboy's good luck. A few days after his drunken, brutal father had fired him out of the house, he happened to be passing a corner where a Lubin producer with a company was taking a picture. The boy had a perfect make-up and the producer's quick eye saw a valuable adjunct to his scene. The boy did so well that the producer gave him a card and invited him to call at the studio; but next day the boy was run over and taken to the hospital. This accounts for a month, and the boy coming back to the old home finds it deserted. His father had died and his mother had taken service as a nurse. The boy goes to the studio, meets the players and gets a job. One bright morning while with the company he meets his mother. It is a bright, pleasant picture, well photographed.

"THE MISER MINER" (Melies), November 16.—A situation that seems to be fresh keeps alive interest in this picture; but it can hardly be described as true to life as pictured, and some of it is not clear. The story is of the miser's gold rather than of the miser himself, who dies in the first act. He had hidden his gold and just before he died had written directions for finding it. He wrote for his nephew to come so that he could give the paper to him. A neighbor, who coveted this treasure, attempted to destroy this letter, but was prevented by a girl. Her relationship to him wasn't clear and this is the picture's great weakness. She was his sister, as appeared later. After the nephew had come and had received the paper, the neighbor, looking over his shoulder, understood the directions and attempted to forestall him by removing the hoard. His sister, disguised as a highwayman, compels him to carry it to its rightful owner. This is a hard thing to believe and is not very effective. The picture is not a vital one.

"A STONE QUARRY IN SAXONY" (Gaumont), November 21.—An industrial, very short, showing a few well-chosen pictures of a quarry.

"THE SEALED CONFESSION" (Gaumont), November 21.—A number of very pretty exteriors make one suspect that this story is set on the southern coast of France. The situation is a strange one, in fact it seems a bit forced, and freaky. A young man in need of money is taken by a friend to the country house of a rich family. He falls in love with his host's daughter, but is tempted and tries to steal a purse left carelessly on a table. He is discovered and is forced to write a sealed confession in the presence of three men, one of whom also loves the girl. The next day he learns that he is heir to two millions. The girl accepts him as her lover. One of the men, although all had sworn not to make known the confession as long as they lived, sent it to the girl's father and was about to commit suicide to get around the oath yet save the girl. They keep him from killing himself and the girl accepts him as her fiance.

"THE MISER'S HEART" (Biograph), November 20.—This miser is a bit more loveable and human than is usual with misers in pictures; he is a bit truer to life. This gives the picture an interest, not always found in so exciting a melodrama—due to a vivid and virile character portrayal. The miser, in his own way, truly loved the poor little girl who lived on the floor below, loved her more than his money, although he wouldn't have believed it himself. The way she dodged back into his room and hid so as to get a peep into his safe when he opened it was very child-like and natural. Afterward, she curled up on his mattress and went to sleep. We had seen the burglars preparing to enter the room and watched with keen interest the producer's skillful handling of his pieces to show the miser in an agony between avarice and love, brought to the point where he tells these yeggmen the combination of his safe to keep them from killing the child and then to make a thrilling, melodramatic rescue scene. The way he handles the situation is both sensational and novel. The acting is good and the picture very commendable, indeed.

"THE FISHERMAID OF BALLYDAVID" (Kalem), November 17.—This picture is very commendable on nearly every count except photography. The situation is natural and human and is developed without too much delay. The backgrounds are pleasing, fresh, and interesting in themselves; yet they are not obtrusive and add local color to the story without burdening it. It was to be expected that any situation in which Gene Gautier led would be well acted; this picture of a rather passionate, but clean-hearted Irish girl is extremely well acted. It is not a tragic picture and it has a pleasant ending. The girl makes a pathetic figure on board ship, especially on her way back from America and in the sunset scene which is especially commendable; but she was too human to be broken-hearted by her disillusioning. She had fallen in love with an American tourist (he had kissed her) and had followed him across the sea only to find that he didn't love her. She marries her Irish lover. It is all convincingly and clearly set forth. We understand and sympathize with it all.

"THE REPORTER" (Pathe), November 18.—A melodrama in which a reporter finds out dramatically that the father of the girl whom he loves, who has refused him and engaged himself to another, is a thief, yet is willing to stand trial for murder rather than clear himself at the expense of this thief's reputation, even though he had committed suicide. The girl's father knew that the reporter had found him out, and expecting arrest had committed suicide, leaving a full confession. The reporter had this letter, but he wouldn't show it, for love of the girl who was engaged to another. However, he left it in his desk at the office. Another reporter, going through his desk, found it, so he was cleared. The girl's fiance wouldn't marry the daughter of a thief, so the reporter takes her. The picture doesn't drag; it is interesting and fairly well acted. The photographs are good.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 47," November 20.—This topical picture this week has some very instructive features. It shows, however, a picture of a burned-out government printing plant in Rio Janeiro, Brazil. The reviewer heard a party of young men making fun of this particular item. It wasn't very interesting. Few of us cared whether the printing plant was burned or not. In fact, no picture of a gutted building is really interesting unless it happens to be a cathedral, a capital, a famous city hall or something of the kind.

"THEIR CHARMING MAMMA" (Vitagraph), November 15.—One of the first things to be said about this society comedy is that it is charming itself. It has much of the best Vitagraph atmosphere and photoplay frequenters know what that means. The situation develops at a reception in a pretty country house—its music room and library and moon-lit garden outside. The scenes are filled with attractive, well-dressed girls and as many men, but seldom seem crowded. Mamma is so charming that, if she sits down at the piano, the men leave the girls and crowd about to listen and admire. If she goes into the other room they follow. The girls are in despair and so is one of the men, a middle-aged suitor of charming mamma's. He and they think up a scheme to get mamma away from the boys. One of her two daughters pretends a fainting spell. Mamma comes into the library. She is left there with the middle-aged man while the girls go back to the music room, and then, with the men, out to the garden. While they are out there mamma and her suitor slip away and are married by a minister. The best fun of the picture, and there are many laughs in it, is when mamma returns with a new name to "spring" on the boys.

"A STORY OF THE INDIAN LEDGE" (Edison), November 18.—There is a kind of novel (the same is true of pictures) that might be called a pipe-dream novel. It merely furnishes us with a dream of fame and fortune better than we could spin for ourselves. Then there's the dream-fancy picture or novel. It is much harder to think up, but it is much more satisfying and delightful. The dream-fancy is never more fascinating than when it takes us back of the time curtain, as that popular drama, "On the Road to Yesterday," did. It is certainly a treat to be carried backward or forward or any way at all out of time convincingly. That is what this picture does. It is a dream-fancy told to a party in a motor boat passing Indian Ledge. We see the ledge approaching and then the story is told of the Indian who, centuries before, was put to sleep by a [illegible] dog and left in a [illegible], to be pulled out and revived by some [illegible]. He has a very exciting time till he is seated to a stone [illegible] by a big steamboat that comes on him unexpectedly. Then, the story being ended, the ledge is shown again nearby, and we see the stone Indian marked on the cliff. Mark McDermott plays the Indian very well indeed. It is dramatic and fresh, a very good picture indeed.

"A ROMANCE OF THE SIXTIES" (Lubin), November 18.—Abraham Lincoln is not a hard part to play acceptably, if the actor is of the right build and well made up in [illegible] melodramas, at least. The part he plays is nearly always the same, to hear the romantic story from the lips of the heroine and to sign the pardon which will save the life of the suitor, be he Southern spy or Union officer under sentence of death at sunrise. In this case it is the latter. He had been condemned by a court martial for striking his colonel, a goaty, villainous character, who was insulting a Southern girl who, just before the war, had been the young man's sweetheart. The settings of this picture are more dignified and better in every way than the average picture of this same story, which, by the way, is usually liked. The only height reached by the acting is in the character of an old darkey servant. Lincoln is also done very well. The scenes are very pretty.

"MY BROTHER AGNOSTINO" (Lubin), November 20.—A melodramatic picture; it is artistically designed and has a comedy ending. Its background is what might be called the lesser bohemia of New York City, an Italian danseuse and her husband and an Italian waiter and his wife being the principal parts. The dancing girl had suddenly become famous and in disgust had left her lazy husband. He suspected that she had a lover, and determined to kill him with a knife that he showed. The girl then did fall wildly in love with "Agnostino," who was dressed as a man in order to take her husband's place at a restaurant as "his brother," he being sick. She follows "Agnostino" to her home and her husband tracks them. The ending, as I have noted, is comic. The picture is amusing and "gets over" fairly well.

"DAN, THE LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER" (Kalem), November 20.—Dan happens to be a keeper, but his lighthouse has nothing to do with this story, which uses a miser and his hoard as a fulcrum to show something of Dan's character and also that of another young man, Dan's unsuccessful rival for the love of the pretty daughter of a retired sea captain. By her care for the poor old miser, the girl is shown to be lovable. Dan, however, drinks and the captain has promised a consent to the young people's marriage only after Dan has proved that he can stop using liquor. The other man knows this and he, as a friend, gets Dan away and makes him drunk. He then gets him, in his foolish, fuddled state, to go to the miser's hut with the purpose of knocking the old man on the head and stealing the money. This, against the girl's accepted lover, weakens the melodrama not a little. He doesn't commit murder; the miser had just died; he doesn't even strike. The doctor was present and kept him from it; but what is the difference? This climax is not very human, although the picture has a good deal of humanity, nevertheless. It is an interesting, fairly commendable picture.

"A SPANISH WOOING" (Selig), November 17.—A Spanish costume picture, graceful and very prettily set, but not at all dramatic and a bit too slow. The players are personable and have natural grace, but act the situation in a very artificial, stilted way. The story shows Spanish love scenes, an objecting parent, an elopement followed by a leisurely chase, a marriage and forgiveness.

"TOO MUCH TURKEY" (Essanay), November 21.—A farce-satire, in which a young girl, whom a clairvoyant's cards had foretold would wed a pasha, breaks her engagement and forces her fiance to dress up as Abdul, a Turk, in order to win her back. Four of "Abdul's" friends whom he chances to find at the club dress up in women's clothes and follow him to the girl's home as "his harem." Amy handled the situation with a revolver, locked the Pasha in one room and his harem in another. This gave him a chance to change his make-up and, as jack again, to effect a rescue. The "harem" was disposed of by two Italians, who were admitted to the house. The Turks are at war with the Italians, you remember. It is amusing, and there are a few good laughs in it.

"VITAGRAPH MONTHLY" (November 18).—The views of Admiral Schley's funeral in this picture are very acceptable, although other views of this event have already appeared. The reel has, as usual, some lively pictures of sports. Its picture of the fleet recently in New York harbor is the best I have seen. It is worth while to see the Bird Brothers' flock of big turkeys that is shown.

"THE RECKONING" (Gaumont), November 18.—Losing heavily at cards, the father, a fisherman, pledges his daughter in marriage to the winner, even though she has already declared her preference for another. However, understanding the situation, she resigns herself to her fate. Meeting her lover, he seizes the opportunity to declare his love again. They are watched by the gambler, who is a ship master. Hoping to be revenged, this man hires the former suitor, who doesn't know him, to take a long voyage. When out at sea they have a final reckoning. They fight and both are drowned. There is nothing especially convincing about this picture. Indeed, to this reviewer it offered but few points of interest, aside from its excellent photography. A short scenic with a few views of Saxony is also on this film.

"THE CATTLE RUSTLER'S FATHER" (Essanay), November 18.—A Western picture based upon the familiar story of cattle rustling. The son dips into various crimes, ending with cattle stealing, and his own father, despairing of his reform, turns him over to the sheriff. Realizing the suffering he has caused his father, he begs his pardon and goes with the officer to expiate his crime. These pictures are snapshots of possible events in the Western country.

"THE POINT OF VIEW" (Essanay), November 17.—This film has considerable psychology in it. It shows first how contagious good nature is, extending from the head of the big firm down through all the employees, even to the home of the least consequential clerk. To emphasize this side the other side is given. Because of these strong contrasts the picture possesses more than ordinary interest. While it has a somewhat humorous cast it still has an undercurrent, which is not so funny. It has humanity in it of the kind that pleases.

"EXCESS BAGGAGE" (Essanay), [illegible]. He loaned his motor [illegible] out and in the second [illegible] burned. He gave [illegible] have something [illegible] and suggests the usual [illegible] of former [illegible]. The [illegible] [illegible] does [illegible] and an open trunk is [illegible] a [illegible] [illegible] and goes to sleep. The [illegible] abused mother-in-law purchases the trunk and it is sent to her house. When she discovers the contents things begin to happen and the gentleman in the case is rather sorry he treated her so severely before she is done repaying his attention. It is not very well acted.

"THE GHOST'S WARNING" (Edison), November 17.—The warning is conveyed to the girl in this story by a ghost. There have been many warnings, but to bring the girl safely to happiness between two lovers, one of position and the other of the man himself, to her right self needed one more hint. The ghost of a girl who had died because of love appears to warn her. Impressed by the girl it is successful and she follows the dictates of her heart rather than those of her ambition or desire for position and name. There are picturesque settings and some of the outdoor scenes about the old castle where the artist is sketching are well worth seeing. Indeed, the entire picture is pleasing and tells a good story.

"THE DAUGHTER OF THE CLOWN" (C. G. P. C.), November 17.—A very dramatic situation is developed in this film. The daughter of the clown is killed. The tragedy so works upon him that he retires. Later he sees a girl who bears a remarkable resemblance to his dead daughter. He invites her to his home and induces her to dress in his daughter's theatrical costume. The rush of memories caused by the resemblance influence him to such an extent that once more he performs his pantomime as he has done it many times before, but his heart cannot stand the strain and he dies in the strange girl's arms, half believing she was his daughter returned to life. The situation is extremely dramatic and makes a deep impression upon the audience.

"THE LITTLE SPY" (Vitagraph), November 17.—A Civil War story which is interesting because it tells the story of a little boy who undertook to reach his father's camp with information of a coming attack by the Federals. He is pursued by the Union soldiers, but manages to reach the camp just a little ahead and give the Confederate sufficient time to prepare for the coming attack. His way was through rough and devious paths and the race in some parts is very exciting, largely because a mere child is the pursued party. The audience applauded when he reached his father's camp in safety and imparted his information.

"LIFE IN THE UNITED STATES ARMY" (Edison), November 21.—This is a very interesting film, not unlike, in general ways, others that we have seen on kindred subjects. It has some comedy while it shows the awkward squad at work. In the picture an actor had a part whether paid by the cameraman or not. He made the scene very amusing. It is a thoroughly commendable, instructive film.

"WISTARIA MEMORIES" (Vitagraph), November 21.—Because it is very well acted, this rather old-fashioned picture of sentiment has now and then deeply emotional incidents. The use that the producer has made of wistaria and of the memories that cling around it in the hearts of two people, a mother and her only son who is in prison, is very commendable. He was innocent, yet couldn't bear to write to let his mother know where he was, until wistaria time; then he couldn't help doing it. We also see her at the old home sadly wondering where he is, in wistaria time. When she gets the letter she goes to him. The governor is on the train and hears her sad story, investigates and declares the boy innocent. It is well designed except that the "boy" was a little bald on top and the first going away from home was almost funny. Again, perhaps, the last two pictures of happiness at home were kept on a bit too long.

"THE NIGHT HERDER" (Selig), November 21.—It cannot be denied that this Western romance and ranch-life picture is interesting, although there is no incident in it that we haven't seen time and time again. The backgrounds, too, are less interesting for themselves there in many Westerns. Yet it is interesting, because it is fairly well put together, fairly well acted and the scenes are well selected and photographed.

"CAIN AND ABEL" (C. G. P. C.), November 21.—When our eyes see even a representation of Adam and Eve we get a peculiar sensation that nothing else under Heaven's sunlight can give to us. This Biblical picture dealing with life's first tragedy features the horror and the fear of the guilty heart who has killed his brother and flees before the face of the Lord. It was a fairly good actor who took the terrible part of Cain and his work was not without effectiveness. It wasn't and hardly could be adequate. The picture of the avenging angel gave no illusion, nor did the trick parts of the film give the illusion that might have been given. But the picture isn't a small one. The coloring seemed not up to Pathe standard.

"THE GROUCH CURE" (C. G. P. C.), November 21.—This farce is on the same reel with the above. It might have been a rich satire if it had dealt in its amusing last scene with something that had a grip on real life. The efforts of his friends to make Brown smile were not amusing. The costume of the woman whom he met on the street made him laugh. That costume was amusing, but it might easily have been funnier, if it had been like some we really see.

"THE BO'SUN'S WATCH" (Edison), November 22.—Here is a comedy out of the ordinary and filled with a delicious humor which is developed by a series of unexpected situations. Pat, the Bo'sun, gets in wrong, and all sorts of troubles follow him. When he does get ashore to marry his sweetheart, Bedelia, his captain appears in search of his eloping daughter, discovers Bedelia an old sweetheart of his own, and marries her, leaving Pat, as before, adrift alone in the cruel world.

"THE HALF-BREED'S DAUGHTER" (Vitagraph), November 22.—A pathetic and dramatic picture, telling the story of Nita, the unfortunate daughter of a half-breed, who is persuaded by a miner to elope. Later, he deserts her and she wanders back to her old home to die in her father's arms. He swears vengeance and follows the man for days. They meet upon the brow of a precipice. As he raises his hand to strike the man he falls over. The half-breed returns thanks to the Great Spirit for avenging his great wrong.

"THE RANCHMAN'S DAUGHTER" (Lubin), November 22.—A Western story, with the perfidy of a married man, jealousy, murder and a few other exciting incidents to arouse interest. The unfortunate lover was accused of murder and it looked like a lynching party, but the man's wife, who really committed the murder, hearing that the accused man was the lover of the girl who had befriended her, confessed her crime and the man was immediately released. There is plenty of action in the picture, but the story is too improbable to be convincing.

"HOW TEXAS GOT LEFT" (Kalem), November 22.—A Western story, the conspicuous feature of which is the way a conceited cowboy lost the girl he expected to marry. The story does not seem to this reviewer very strong. Indeed, it is little more than a series of disconnected incidents, with a Western setting, strung together in such a way as to give them some semblance of continuity, but not well enough to make them convincing.

"GUY FAWKES, OR THE GUNPOWDER PLOT" (Eclipse), November 22.—A film based upon the well-known event in English history by which an attempt to blow up the houses of Parliament was discovered in time to prevent its consummation. The film gives a romantic turn to the story by making Fawkes realize that his sweetheart will be endangered by the explosion, which causes him to stamp out the fuse after it is lighted.

"A PINCH OF SNUFF" (Pathe), November 22.—A comedy, with a pinch of snuff and its results as its principal feature. The young man gets one first. After that he presents his lady's father with a bouquet upon which he has sprinkled pepper. The results in both instances are hilariously amusing.

Independent

"GOLDEN WEDDING" (Ambrosio), November 22.—A beautifully pictured romance of Italy's war for freedom against Austria. It is told by a grandfather to his family on the anniversary of his wedding, fifty years before. On that day fifty years ago he had won his bride, a brave and patriotic girl, who had cleverly saved him from the Austrian lancers, who pursued him into her hut. It is a thrilling battle picture if there ever was one. The Ambrosio people know how to do it. The King of Italy is shown heading a charge. It is a very excellent picture all the way through.

"THE BASEBALL BUG" (Thanhouser), November 24.—A very clever picture indeed and one that stirs up some enthusiasm. It is not only a good, human comedy, well acted and set; but four of the champion Athletics' brightest stars are pictured as taking part in it. The four, who posed for the Thanhouser camera in this picture, are the pitchers Coombs, Morgan, and Bender, and Oldring, the catcher. They seemed to enjoy the fun in the situation too. The heroine of the comedy is supposed to be Coombs' cousin. Her husband was a good clerk and a good fellow, but he thought he was a wonder on the baseball diamond, and it was making him act "nutty." She got Coombs and three of his friends to cure him. Coombs promised to make him sick of the game. The three pitchers pitched and Oldring caught and the "nutty" man fanned the air. It took the conceit out of him and it cured him. The heroine is very pleasing and the whole cast put the situation over in first class shape. It's a very desirable film.

"A MASTER OF MILLIONS" (Thanhouser), November 21.—It is not a new type that is presented in this picture of a strong, domineering man; but it seems in many ways a more competent and suggestive portrait of such a man than we have yet seen. He is common enough in popular novels. If the character has been drawn as truthfully as in the early scenes, all the way through, it would have been a tremendous picture. But as pictured, the man had weaknessess, convincing in themselves, but they were shown in a way hardly convincing. We first see the man as a boss of a track-making gang. A railroad man meets him and recognizes his ability. This man helps him along and, later, when he comes to be a financial power himself, he uses his power to force his former patron's daughter to marry him. This melodramatic twist serves very well to bring out the brutal qualities in the man's nature. He is shown as meeting his master in a back-woodsman, in whose cabin he took refuge; the result was a change in his actions for the better. Yet whether this change was because his spirit was broken or because he was humbled and made wiser isn't clear. In many ways it's a remarkable picture.

"WHEN THE SHERIFF GOT HIS MAN" (Champion), November 22.—A scenario writer's difficulties were in this picture a bit too freely ignored; but, from its love-at-first-sight start, it doesn't lack for nerve and excitement. It is built along very conventional lines, but has some freshness. The new sheriff fell in love with a girl and within two hours had proposed to her. He promised to meet her at an apple tree next morning for her answer. He was called away suddenly to arrest a bandit, and left a note for the girl, which she didn't get. The bad man saw the sheriff first and securely tied him, but did not think to take away his pistol. He shoots himself free and returning finds the man "wanted" at the girl's house. There's the usual chase over a bit of road that we have seen many times and, at the end, the sheriff gets his man and the girl.

"NATIONAL GUARD AND REGULARS AT FORT RILEY" (Champion), November 20.—This is the third in a series of Fort Riley pictures that is being released by the Champion people. It gives a chance to compare the appearance and the work of regulars and militiamen in many exercises and formations. It shows a brigade on parade and review; it also shows the commissary department at work, which gives a good idea of whatt the boys get to eat, in part. It is a good film.

"THE PRICE" (Rex), November 23.—This picture was adapted from the poem "Ostler Joe," author's name not given. It is not a dramatic picture and the action, at least for a large part of it, depends largely on leaders quoting the ballad, and that is neither very poetical nor very human. However, very good work on the part of the players and of the producer give life to the separate scenes of what was not a very strong scenario. The argument is as follows: An ostler was happily married and a son came to the home; as shown a very comfortable home. The lad grew to be about five years old and made friends with a stranger and brought him into the yard. Later, the mother was tempted by this stranger and ran away with him, becoming a famous prostitute. The child died shortly after the mother ran away. The woman at length fell upon hard times and lay dying in poverty, when her hostler husband heard of it. He forgave her and she died in his arms. The scenes are beautiful without exception.

"A PASSING CLOUD" (Lux), November 24.—A well-acted love story, quite French in spirit. The courtship was interrupted by the jealousy of the girl, who saw the man flirting with another girl. The cloud lingered long enough to make a good situation, then it passed away and sunshine returned. It is an acceptable picture, for it is fairly well acted and has some very pretty scenes. The camera work is not as good as it might have been, but the photographs are fairly clear.

"BILL'S AND GERTIE'S WEDDING DAY" (Lux), November 24.—Two wedding parties in the same grove at the same time caused trouble. The encounters are pictured as vigorous, but good natured. It affords light entertainment.

"THE BROKEN TRAP" (Bison), November 21.—The opening scene shows that village of log huts that the Bison producer has used in one or two former pictures. The second scene is a well pictured tepee village; the third, a camp of white trappers. White Lily is then shown, as we have seen her before, in her canoe gathering wild eggs from among the lily pads. Miss Little takes this part very pleasingly. She falls in love with a white trapper, but he doesn't return her affection. Later, trouble arises between the white trappers and the Indians. White Lily brings word that they are dancing the war dance. The white men make a fighting retreat to the settlements, firing back at the Indians. White Lily is wounded; she is carried to the settlements, but dies. It makes a very commendable picture, exciting and human. The natural backgrounds are very pleasing.

"WHITE FAWN'S ESCAPE" (Bison), November 24.—A picture of capture, escape, pursuit and rescue. The background is pretty and the escape reasonably convincing. The Bison Company has produced pictures of this kind that were much better; but it is fairly good for a typical "Western."

"A BAD MAN" (Bison), November 24.—A comedy ranch picture. The situation is amusing. It is created by an obstreperous self-styled bad man, who is cured by a ducking in the horse trough. The picture keeps awake and is interesting; all through it is a "scream."

"A DAUGHTER OF ITALY" (Reliance), November 25.—Miss Ruth Robinson plays a romantic leading role in this artistic melodrama. The story of this little Italian girl's adventures is fairly well designed and effective, although it might have had a bit more punch if it had been made simpler. Perhaps the picture suffers a little from the fact that the position of one of the girl's lovers, the one who was to play the villain, wasn't clearly defined early in the picture. As shown, it was as in real life, but this is a melodrama. Its effect kept us from being sure of him for a while and even from being sure of the girl. Rosa gets a position as a nurse, but is soon discharged through no fault of her's. One of her admirers, who is to be the villain later, gets her another job. The little girl, who had grown to love Rosa while she was her nurse, runs away from home to find her and encounters the villain (Walthall) who at first intends taking her to Rosa, but then conspires with other rough characters to hold her for ransom. Rosa and her true sweetheart (Rosa has overheard the plot) very melodramatically aid the police and the child's father in rescuing her in several thrilling hairbreadth incidents.

"HELPLESS MAN" (Reliance), November 22.—A comedy dealing with the experiences of a very grumpy man who was satisfied with nothing. The players made its humor a little broad by treating it, at times, as a farce; but the laughs, and there are many in it, come from the real comedy in the situation, which is truly amusing. Mr. Grumpy was so cantankerous that Mrs. Grumpy went home on a visit. Grumpy could get along better without her. His troubles and difficulties pleased not only the women, but the men as well.

"THE WILL OF PROVIDENCE" (Solax), November 24.—A comedy-drama dealing with the adventures of a miser's hoard. The old man before he died sewed his money in the lining of an old coat with a note leaving the money to the one who chanced to find it, thus putting it into the hands of Providence. He then willed the coat to his landlady. She sold it to a Jew. It was first sold to an actor, who brought it back. At length a poor little boy got it. The whole atmosphere of the picture is highly pleasing and commendable. The acting and the settings and the conduct of it are good, and the idea is very well worth while. It is a picture that is likely to be popular.

"ONLY A SQUAW" (Solax), November 17.—There was very little that suggested an Indian country or real Indians in this picture. It is also conventional, depending for dramatic interest on flight and pursuit. It tells, though, a good melodramatic human story, tenderly sentimental and pleasing. It could not be called an artistic picture; but to all save those who demand art in pictures, it should be very acceptable.

"DESPERATE DESMOND PURSUED BY CLAUDE ECLAIRE" (Nestor), November 25.—Desperate Desmond holds up Claude Eclaire at one of Robbin's circuses and at pistol point takes Fair Rosamond away from him by force. He gets a good start before Claude can collect Indians and cowboys enough to begin a hot pursuit. The wild men of Borneo help the villain. Rosamond is in a terrible plight, tied to a burning bridge, but is rescued. All the incidents of this truly amusing picture might seem ridiculous if exactly described, but in pictures it is very funny indeed. This film series promises to be a fine success. This picture is speedier than the first and funnier.

"THE COWBOY PUGILIST" (Nestor), November 22.—A prizefight picture, with a pleasing melodramatic love story to give the contest point and reason. The man could fight, but a pretty cowgirl of the neighborhood whom he loved didn't like fighters. However, it chanced that a pugilist challenged all comers, with an offer of $200 to any one who could stand up through four rounds. The boys wanted the boxer to make the try, but at first he refused. Then he found that the girl's grandad had been unable to pay his rent and was on the point of being ejected by the villain landlord, so he met the prizefighter and won the purse. At the club, before the feature bout, an amusing contest called a battle royal, in which four darkey fighters scrap together, is shown. It is likely to be popular. It deserves to be.

"JUG O' RUM" (Powers), November 25.—A comedy in an old barn. The jug was marked "poison" and was hidden by the hired man. The adventures of the farmer's family, including grandpa and grandma and the "help," due to that jug and to what was in it at the time it was hidden, make a very amusing and truly rural comedy. It is a country life portrayal and is very commendable as such.

"RIVALS" (Powers), November 21.—A fresh and very pleasing rural comedy. The rivals were two youths, helpers on the farm, and both loved the farmer's daughter. The man from the city won her. These types are very well put over and the picture is a little gem. Human, amusing and pretty. The background could not be improved upon.

"VIEWS OF MONTSERRAT, ITALY" (Powers), November 21.—A scenic, giving views of a very interesting Italian mountain district. They are what one would see from a train window.

"FROM THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA" (Imp), November 20 and 23.—This remarkable and exciting picture has been reviewed at length on page 454 under "Notable Films." It is a very good picture, but needs no further notice here.

"THE COURTING OF MARY" (Majestic), November 26.—Little Mary on this film gives a very human and delightful picture of a young miss full of mischief and frolicsome, like a June day, now clouds, now sunshine. There are smiles aplenty and tears aplenty and she keeps the audience in sympathy with her all through a romantic comedy with a good deal of quality to it. The Majestic Company shows in this first picture a promise of good, human work. It has a first class company, and its scene making and photography are good.

"THE OFFICE BOY'S DREAM" (Comet), November 20.—The Comet Company makes its bow this week. It makes a very pleasing first impression. The picture is a very delightful comedy, human, acted by pleasing players and photographed very well indeed. We first see the country boy leaving home for what fate shall have in store for him in New York City. He gets a job. His boss decides to go to the ball game, but inadvertently leaves his tickets on the desk. The boy puts his feet up on the desk and smoking one of the boss's cigars, has a "pipe dream," in which fate is as kind as the most romantic youngster could desire. The boss comes back. He is not in good humor, and the boy has a rude awakening.

"THE MASTER OF THE VINEYARD" (American), November 23.—It cannot be said that the "Flying A" always chooses pleasant themes for its pictures, but it seldom fails to get humanity into them. Some of them are, like this one, bitter life portrayals. They end pleasantly; this one is no exception, and even the hard first part of it has a touch of grandeur. The master of the vineyard, a neighbor, gave work and shelter to the wife and grown daughters of a shiftless drunkard. They had fled to save the girl from the attentions of unwelcome suitors, friends of the father. The raisin ranch, owned by the master, was in a tough neighborhood and these rough suitors caused trouble for the master, but the only one who really suffered was the father, who had awakened and was taking the part of master and the girls. It makes a strong impression and is very commendable.

"THE PORTUGUESE CENTAURS" (Eclair), November 23.—A picture of rough and dangerous riding by Portuguese cavalry men. It makes a thrilling picture; for the troop of officers rides high-bred horses across a very rough country and does some very remarkable feats. Horses in a picture always are popular and when you combine such fine steeds as these and such horsemanship with extremely pretty natural scenes, the result is likely to awaken enthusiasm.

"AN AUTOMATIC LIGHTER" (Eclair), November 23.—Charlie's lighter hadn't been stamped by the police as the law required. He attempts to escape and the police chase him up Eiffel Tower. This gives a chance for some very interesting views of Paris. There is light comedy in it and it is a welcome film.

"HANDS ACROSS THE SEA" (Eclair), November 21.—This very artistic and remarkable picture has already been reviewed at length in our issue of November 25. It needs no further notice here.

"EXECUTIVE CLEMENCY" (Imp).—No crime has been committed. The man was unjustly accused by a despicable rent collector, of an attempt to rob him. His object was to save himself. The man accused had caught the collector insulting his wife in her own kitchen. The scuffle that ensued brought a policeman and the collector accused the man of trying to steal the money that the wife had just paid for rent. The man went to jail. His wife became dangerously sick after giving birth to a child. The husband and father, hearing of it, escaped, came to his wife's bedside, kissed her and then surrendered himself. It was Thanksgiving and the Governor's daughter read the account in the papers and brought her father's attention to it. As a result, the man was pardoned. It is extremely well acted and the scenes are also very commendable. There is, in fact, a humanity in all of it that is unusually pleasing.

"THE DIAMOND LOCKET" (Comet).—The bare spots in this scenario become very appearant as soon as the situation is once stated and the melodramatic plot begins to move in its weaving of difficulties for the heroine. It was also very slow in getting started, although the prettiness of the scenes, their lighting and their settings, kept the interest awake. Also the characters are very interestingly contrasted. The trouble arose from a policeman's giving to his sweetheart, a nurse, a locket which he found in the street and should have "turned in." It had been lost by the nurse's mistress. The scenario writer made the nurse's charge, a little girl, see the policeman give the present, although to do so he showed this child as taking a meal at the nurse's home, a not very often heard of situation. This was more extraordinary as the child was not utilized to clear the nurse, but a plain-clothes man who saw the policeman pick the locket up. After the mistress, seeing the locket on the nurse, had her taken to the station house, and all had been explained, it seems to have been the mistress, who was reprimanded, which was hardly just. The photographs are good.

COLONIAL THEATER, KALAMAZOO, MICH.

These interesting photos of the Colonial Theater, of Kalamazoo, Mich., were sent us by Col. W. H. Johnson, who manages the house. The one of the orchestra is pleasing, showing as it does a half dozen apparently wide awake young Americans. We do not always go very strong on looks, but something impels us to feel that these six clean-cut young men are able to deliver the goods in their particular line. We would take a gambler's chance on them any time. In the photo of the entrance it will be noticed that the Colonial enjoys a "carriage trade," and it is apparent that the owners of the carriages are enjoying themselves inside, serene in the knowledge that their valuable Buffalo robes and parcels outside are in safe keeping. This will be appreciated more by old showmen who know that in the old days there was nothing more fatal (to the robe) than for a patron to go into a show, particularly a circus, and leave a fur robe in a carriage. The handsome and distinguished looking gentleman standing in the theater entrance at the right is Col. Johnson. Kalamazoo is a live town and, according to the evidence at hand, the Colonial is a live showhouse in a live town.

Colonial Theater, Kalamazoo, Mich.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE THEFT OF MONA LISA" (Great Northern).

Another of the Great Northern's comedy pictures with Carl Alstrup in the leading role is announced for early release under the title "The Theft of Mona Lisa." The following brief synopsis will give the reader some idea of the subject:

Fred, in his private office, is disturbed in his work by the entry of the proprietor's daughter, with whom he has a certain understanding. They bill and coo together without noticing the entrance of the proprietor, who, with difficulty keeping a straight face, orders his daughter out of the room. Fred resolves to test his fortune at once, and asks papa's consent to his marriage. The proprietor then says, "As soon as you have done a good piece of work as a journalist, I will consent to the marriage." Fred immediately sets out, and becoming thirsty, drops into a cafe. Here he overhears a number of artists discussing the bad supervision prevailing at the Louvre, and this instantly suggests a plan to him. Proceeding to the gallery, he inspects the world-famous work of art, and then going to an open window nearby, is gratified to find that some workmen have erected a cradle to travel from the ground to the window. That evening he returns, and reaching the window by the cradle, enters the room and steals the picture. The next morning the loss is discovered and the police soon have the matter in hand. The director of the gallery is rung up and is told that the picture has disappeared. Glancing at his paper he sees a report of the theft written by Fred, and backed up by a number of police, he makes his way to the office of the paper, and there is introduced to Fred. The picture is taken down from the wall, where it has been temporarily hung, and wrapped up in a piece of paper. The director turns for a moment to chat with the head, when Fred exchanges the picture for another canvas of the same size and shape. This is taken in solemn procession to the gallery, but there a shock awaits the gathered crowd, for the canvas is not "Mona Lisa," but a painting of the Nordisk trade mark. At this juncture, Fred pushes his way in with the real painting, which he delivers up in the sight of all. He has accomplished what he set out to do, and we last see him with his prize folded in his arms.

Scene from "The Theft of Mona Lisa" (Great Northern).

The Western Kentucky Insane Asylum, at Owensboro, Ky., will again begin showing moving pictures, abandoned during the heated term, and will arrange to show a high grade of films.

"THE FIRST MAN" (Essanay).

An excellent love story, with a truly unique plot, and a delicious vein of fine humor, is the Essanay Company's coming comedy release entitled "The First Man."

With the background of a Quaker home in Pennsylvania, two severe and stately old maid aunts, a newspaper reporter and a girl, "who has never spoken to a man," the little romance develops into an exquisite, clean-cut comedy.

Young Earl Whitney is a cub reporter on the staff of the Morning Herald, a metropolitan daily. He is a clean-cut, earnest young man who takes his calling very seriously and when one day his city editor hands him an assignment, which looks like a hard one, he reads with interest the following:

Scene from "The First Man" (Essanay).

"HAS NEVER TALKED TO A MAN."

Miss Miriam Chetwood, a young heiress of Oaklawn, is forced by the conditions of her father's will to be secluded from all male society until she becomes of age in order to inherit vast estates. She is guarded by two maiden aunts, and it is known that no man has ever been able to speak to her.

Scene from "The First Man" (Essanay).

Whitney packs a small grip and boards a train for Oaklawn, and arriving in the village inquires the direction to Chetwood Cedars to get an interview with the girl and from the general report he has had, this will be no easy thing to accomplish. He arrives at the entrance to Chetwood Cedars. Entering, he bumps into a butcher boy, who warns him to stay clear of the place. Not daunted by this very good advice, Whitney approaches the house. Suddenly he pauses as he sees, seated at the window of the manse, a very comely young lady, dressed in the rather eccentric fashions of the Quaker cult. This must be Miriam, and starting forward he lifts his hat and calls to the girl at the window. The next instant, however, the girl disappears from the window and one of the maiden aunts draws the curtain on the object of his visit.

True to their trust the maiden aunts drive the young man from their door and he is about to return to the town disheartened, when the butcher boy drives by and offers to take him back in the cart. Whitney accepts and is about to step into the cart when the horse starts and throws him to the ground with a badly wrenched ankle. Seeing that the young man is suffering the old ladies take him into their home, but put him under lock and key. But love laughs at locks and keys and Whitney manages to have a talk with the girl, in which pleasant pastime the guardian aunts discover them. The girl is ordered out and Whitney is told of the clause in the eccentric father's will. Then Whitney writes this note to his city editor:

"Dear Bob," it reads. "I hereby resign from the staff. I can't turn in my story because I am in love with the girl and I can't marry her until she becomes of legal age. I've got to wait about two years until she is 21. Darn the luck. Yours regretfully, Whitney."

It is a very caustic note which Whitney receives the day following:

"Earl Whitney," it says, "resignation declined. Girl of legal age at 18, not 21. Marry her, you boob, and return to new job as sporting editor. Congratulations from the staff. Bob."

It is not with great difficulty that Bob learns from the aunts that "Miriam was eighteen just yesterday." Whitney shows the city editor's note and Aunt Deborah, and Aunt Betsy, tearfully give their consent to the marriage.

REMARKABLE MARINE PICTURE BY AMERICAN.

It is an odd coincidence that the American Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago, should celebrate its first anniversary in business by throwing on its factory screen the first and only successful attempt to photograph the submarine gardens of the Pacific Ocean.

This remarkable picture will be released December 14, and, it is believed, will create a profound sensation in motion picture circles.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American, devised the ingenious scheme by which the feat was accomplished. With a party of experts he visited the Santa Catalina Island just off the coast at Los Angeles, where the water is considered the clearest in the world and where the famous submarine gardens of the Pacific can best be seen. The party was equipped with every convenience necessary and had chartered a glass bottomed boat for the purpose.

One of the interesting and novel features of the experiment was some rare good luck in catching an octopus reclining in its native environment among the rocks. The octopus is clearly shown in the film.

Altogether it was a day of considerable good fortune as well as good management for the camera party shortly after came upon a school of more than one hundred seal lying on the rocks off the island. The launch was sent to within a few feet of the seal and a picture obtained that will eclipse anything of the kind ever taken before. It is not possible, ordinarily, to get very close to seal and the extraordinary results in this instance can be credited to good fortune only. Some residents of the Santa Catalina who have seen the first print, claim that they never before obtained such an intimate view of the Pacific seal.

Delighted with their success, the party then pushed on into the interior of the magic isle of Santa Catalina, whose magnificent scenic gradeur is far-famed, but seen by comparatively few Americans. The gorgeous valley, mountain splendor unsurpassed anywhere in this world, and water so wonderfully clear that it has often been pronounced the clearest in existence, were all captured by the camera.

Some charming marine views were added, with the entire Pacific fleet riding the waters of San Diego Bay.

The battle-scarred cruiser Raleigh, which fired the first shot at Manilla, is first in the camera's scope, closely followed by the armoured cruiser Colorado, the flagship California, the cruiser South Dakota, the historic gunboat Vicksburg, which did such effective work in the Havana blockade; the Oregon, the ship which first performed the marvelous feat of circling the globe without once stopping for repairs; the transport boat Buffalo; the sea going Iroquois, used for target practice; the cruiser Cincinnati, which lost its mast in the Spanish-American War; the supply boat Glacier, and finally the entire surprise fleet leaving the harbor of San Diego.

This film is quite without equal in the wide diversity of subjects covered, and the universal appeal of its entire one-thousand feet. It should hold an audience breathless with attention and has the added merit of being composed entirely of American views which are always popular with Americans.

Commenting on the pictures taken by Mr. Hutchinson of the famous marine gardens, the Los Angeles Times, under date of October 21, says:

"S. S. Hutchinson, of Chicago, while in a glass-bottomed boat was successful in taking pictures of over fifty feet of film while the boat passed over the marine gardens. Although many attempts have been made by local photographers and others possessing extensive experience no one has ever before taken pictures of the marine growth under the water. The feat had been given up as an impossibility, etc.

"When nearing a suitable portion of the gardens under water fifteen feet, the machine was set to work. The camera resembled an ordinary instrument, but had several attachments on both sides, small magnifying glasses and mirrors set at various angles near the lenses. An octopus was caught and is clearly shown in the film."

Owing to its educational value, a movement was started in California last week, looking to the adoption of the picture for use among public schools in California.

"A GIRLISH IMPULSE" (Lubin).

The gowns worn by Lubin's leading woman, Miss Florence Lawrence, in a film story soon to be released under the title, "A Girlish Impulse," are real triumphs of the dressmaker's art, bearing the unmistakable stamp of the Rue de la Paix. Moreover, Miss Lawrence wears them with as much grace as a born Parisienne. The story, which is told in sumptuous surroundings, is a triangular affair of love.

John Banks and William Elliott were two young lawyers—partners of John Stevens. Both the young men were desperately in love with Gladys, the beautiful daughter of John Stevens. Gladys was rather partial to Banks, but liked to talk to Elliot because of a stuttering in his speech. Her father warned her against Banks because of his drinking habits.

One evening Banks saw Gladys talking earnestly with Elliot, became jealous and left in anger. Gladys still believed that she loved him and wrote a note saying, "You foolish old dear, to think that I could ever love a stuttering, long-eared old fool like Elliot." This note appeased Banks and he called a few evenings later to take Gladys to the theater. While waiting, he called for some brandy, with the result that by the time Gladys appeared he was pretty well "pickled." Gladys was shocked when she saw him and her eyes were opened. Her father appeared and ordered Banks from the house. The next day Banks lost his place in the law firm.

Now, Gladys recognized the good qualities of Elliot; his suit prospered and their engagement was announced. Banks was now determined to get even. He called on Gladys and threatened to show Elliot the note which she had written concerning him. To all her pleas for possession of this note he turned a deaf ear, finally offering to sell it for a kiss, at which point he was thrown out by the butler.

Banks returned home and wrote Gladys a note stating that if she wanted the letter she must call at his apartments for it. At the same time he wrote an anonymous letter to Elliot telling him to watch his fiancée. All went as he intended. Elliot followed her and denounced her. At this dramatic point Gladys told why she had come and then rushed from the apartment. Elliot demanded the letter which was mockingly refused. Then he proceeded to take it away from Banks by force. After reading it he laughed philosophically and quickly hurried to the home of Gladys, where there was a mutual forgiveness.

It is one of the most deliciously acted dramatic love stories that has been seen in a good while.

HALLBERG EQUIPMENTS.

J. H. Hallberg, of 36 East 23d Street, New York, recently equipped for Mr. E. Kinsella his new theater in Port Jervis, N. Y., with every accessory except two projection machines, which are two Gaumont machines purchased in Europe by Mr. Kinsella.

Adolph G. Kramer's new house in Mt. Vernon, N. Y., is among last week's list of equipments, all the movable paraphernalia coming from Hallberg; such as projection apparatus, seats, chandeliers, signs, uniforms, ticket choppers, tickets, etc.

Another new house equipped is that of Mr. John L. Fernandez, in Waterbury, Conn. A complete installment was furnished. During the past month Mr. Hallberg has equipped seven other theaters with the new patent steel frame chair.

It has been the custom of many moving picture houses to run vaudeville acts in addition to the pictures. The general run of the vaudeville acts which can be booked by the manager of a picture house is not often the best, and at the end of a week all the manager frequently has to show for his $30 to $50 is a receipt, showing that he has paid that amount for a vaudeville act. Vaudeville acts are unsatisfactory. When good ones can be secured they are usually musical novelties. Now the managers, who appreciate real values, are purchasing the novelty instruments as part of the permanent equipment of their houses, which can be played by their regular employees. In this way they have at all times a high class musical act which has been found to be quite as effective as the better kind of vaudeville acts at smaller expense and absolute reliability, at a cost no greater than that of a really good act for but a few days. When a particular instrument has been used as long as the ordinary act runs, it may be set aside and a new instrument procured, which may be used until it pays for itself. After a few weeks the house will have a collection of instruments superior to that of the average traveling vaudeville company, and can use them at the discretion of the manager.

Some of the instruments which may be used in this way to good advantage are organ chimes, steel marimbaphones, xylophones, etc. J. C. Deagan, of Chicago, is the world's foremost manufacturer of instruments of this kind. He issues a handsome 100-page catalogue of the various instruments he manufactures, which will be sent for the asking. All his instruments are fully guaranteed, and are the product of fine workmanship and painstaking skill. Of Mr. Deagan's best known novelty, the electrical bells, little need be said. They are in use in many of the most prominent theaters in the country, and have given universal satisfaction. They are made in two styles, the standard, with saucer bells, and the Swiss bells, which have a deeper tone and lower pitch, and are especially suitable for very large theaters.

PERCY, THE MASHER (Imp).

The Imp Company will inaugurate its third-release-a-week regime by releasing "Percy, the Masher," on Saturday, December 2, for the comedy feature. It is a humorous story which concerns the exploits of a young man with a penchant for flirting indiscriminately. He is a foolish chap at that and very gullible. In looking out of his window he sees a handsome young woman across the street waving her handkerchief. In reality she is saluting a woman in a lower window and Percy, the masher, immediately comes to the conclusion that he has made an impression. He waves his kerchief frantically only to be frozen by the woman. Nothing daunted he takes it seriously and writes her a note which she immediately shows her husband. The husband has a plan and he puts it into execution. The wife accepts a date by letter and it is delivered to the expectant young man. He is in the seventh heaven of delight and carefully prepares his toilet for the escapade. He is met by the husband disguised in the clothing of the wife and they immediately set out to have a good time. The husband is heavily veiled and declines to remove the covering. Taken to a swell cafe the husband orders an expensive lunch, much to the consternation of the young man, whose wallet is not very plethoric. Returning home the husband tears off the veil, discloses his identity and then proceeds to completely and artistically wallop the masher, who bellows lustily. A policeman is called, but he arrests the masher and compliments the husband. The hero returns home, is met by his wife and congratulated for the completeness of the job, she having witnessed it through the window.

GOSSIP OF THE IMP COMPANY.

Frank Real, one of the directors, was confined to his room by illness recently and his company was idle.

Architects have been engaged to arrange for another stage at the studio which will admit of two companies working indoors at the same time. If the improvement is made it will greatly facilitate matters in the way of production.

"Bill" Clark, the eccentric comedian, who is doing some great work, appears to great advantage in the comedy "Playing the Game," which is for early release. Mr. Clark took a hazardous risk in having his 200 pounds of avoirdupois catapulted down a steep incline in a wheel chair. He says he couldn't steer the craft, which makes it all the more humorous.

King Baggot is thinking seriously of employing a private secretary to answer his voluminous correspondence, which is growing in weight rapidly. Mr. Baggot has many admirers throughout the country.

Extensive changes have been made at the plant to accommodate the increased amount of work that will be made necessary by the third reel. Eddie Roskam is nicely situated in a large room in which to cut and join the stories.

Buffalo Jones called on Carl Laemmle recently and interested the president in his animal talk. Mr. Laemmle may spend his next vacation in Africa taking pot shots at lions.

The forbidden city of Nang-King is preparing for a seige and bombardment. The forbidden city of Montclair, N. J., has not yet capitulated.

"A REVOLUTIONARY ROMANCE" (Solax).

Although the revolutionary period in American history is abundant interwoven with tense drama and colorful romance, it is not an easy task to reproduce on the screen with a large measure of authenticity or fidelity the atmosphere which surrounded those dramas and those romances. The costuming of the production, the settings, the Colonial atmosphere, the striking bearing of those heroic and self-sacrificing [illegible], by the very nature of things accurate reproduction of the work of this character the producer is often tempted to run the risk of over-coloring the work. A sense of proportion and perspective is lost and the finished product looks like a grotesque assemblage of personages who had never seen the light of day.

Scene from "A Revolutionary Romance" (Solax).

In the Solax production of "A Revolutionary Romance," which is to be released Friday, December 1st, all important factors which tend to produce an atmosphere and a local color peculiar to the times, have been taken into consideration and put into play. The finished work stands out minus all artificialities. A simple story is unreeled. The plot is not overcharged with superfluous complications and a great smudge of over-coloring.

The story hinges about the mental struggles of American girl who has to decide whether she owes her allegiance to her country or to her lover, who is a British spy. She decides in favor of her country. At the point of a pistol she gets from her lover plans of American fortifications and turns them over to the Continental Army. She permits her lover to escape. They are brought together again in a natural way. Throughout the story there is maintained an atmosphere truly Colonial. Dramatic values are made the most of and the interest is sustained from title to trade mark.

CINES ITALIAN WAR PICTURES.

One of the interesting numbers on the program of the Unique Theater, 14th Street, New York, last week was the Cines subject giving scenes of the hostilities between Italy and Turkey at Tripoli. The picture opens with a panoramic view of the harbor at Tripoli, with the Italian warships at anchor. Troops are landed and, with their commanders at their head, take possession of the city. Views of the Turkish forts after the bombardment are shown. The nearest the cameraman got to the actual fighting was to get pictures of dead Arabs and Turkish soldiers as they lay upon the desert sands after a night attack upon the Italian trenches. Soldiers and sailors are shown marching to the trenches and on guard along the line of defense.

An inspiring scene is that of the raising of the Italian flag over the captured city of Tripoli. The audience was delighted with the event and applauded the flag enthusiastically. Throughout the picture each appearance of the Italian general and admiral and their respective staffs was the signal for a fresh burst of applause. The picture really received an ovation and was fully entitled to it.

KINEMACOLOR EXCHANGE IN CANADA.

Henry J. Brock, head of the Kinemacolor Company of Canada, has opened a film service in Montreal and has already secured a number of contracts to supply Kinemacolor pictures to Canadian theaters.

"THE CLUBMAN'S CHRISTMAS" (Edison).

Another of those little human comedies is offered by the Edison Company for its Christmas release, under the title "The Clubman's Christmas." When the question of comedy is mentioned in connection with pictures, no discussion would be complete that did not embrace generous mention of the Edison style of comedy. To begin with, there is always a noticeable absence of anything verging upon vulgarity and horseplay. On the other hand, it seldom happens that the producer fails to put across a touch of human nature that does not dig deep down into your heart and grip you where you really live. There is something of that sort of thing in this picture about the clubman.

Scene from "A Clubman's Christmas" (Edison).

Everybody knows that the "clubman" is a selfish, indifferent fellow. This particular clubman has had a tiff with his sweetheart the night before Christmas, and gets even with his grouch by going to his club and getting tipsy. On his way to his apartments he stumbles into a street car along with two waifs whom he turned over to the policeman some hours before. The car has been laid up in the barn, but he is too drunk to know that and, as for the kids, they were asleep before the car was sidetracked for the night, so they are not to blame. But, during his troubled sleep in the car the clubman sees things about Santa Claus and "cheerful giving," etc., so that when he wakes up in the morning he concludes to take his fellow lodgers home with him and give them a real Christmas, and it's the way he does it that gets you. Of course, his sweetheart forgives him for his rudeness the night before, and there is happiness for everybody at the end of the picture.

THE MAKING OF AN AEROPLANE (LUX).

In this picture the Lux Company has done its duty toward the educational movement by producing an excellent educational and industrial picture combined. Industrial pictures are not necessarily educational in every case, as the mode of manufacture of many well-known articles is generally known in the greater or less degree by the public.

There are few, however, who have any definite idea of the materials used in an airship and the way they are put together. This Lux picture clears up that mystery very thoroughly and after seeing it one has added something more to his store of knowledge.

The picture shows the working of a French aeroplane factory. First a general view and afterwards detail glimpses of much value and interest. There is first shown the sawing out of the "ribs" of an aeroplane. We did not know before that an aeroplane had any ribs and no doubt the same is true of the great majority of people. But we know now that the aeroplane has ribs. These ribs are generally concealed by the canvas covering of the planes, which process is also very clearly shown. Then we get a glimpse of the uprights and how they are put in place, after which comes the process of strengthening the whole frame with cables, which are equipped with turn-buckles by which the craft is later trued and adjusted. These cables must, by all means, be flawless, and the picture shows us a method of testing the cables for flaws, which is done by a machine that pulls in two directions, something like a tug-of-war. If the cable breaks it is defective. There is also a view showing the motor before installation undergoing a test.

It is a highly interesting picture and one that no exhibitor should hesitate to exhibit at any time. It does not show a completed aeroplane in action, which is rather to be regretted, as such a view is needed to carry out the complete idea. But that may be excused on the ground that by this time nearly every one knows how an aeroplane looks in the air. On the same reel with this picture is a comedy entitled, "Bill As a Veterinary Surgeon," which is reviewed elsewhere in this week's issue. This reel will be released December 1.

SOLAX ENGAGES PROMINENT COMEDIAN.

Do you remember that tall, handsome and smiling young man, whose subtle work used to make so many millions of people laugh as he twinkled on the screen in the Edison productions? Do you remember him? He recently played the leading role in the feature Eclair productions. His name is Darwin Karr. There is a great deal of well-ordered bustle at the Solax studio these days. The engagement of Darwin Karr is the consummation of only one of the big plans which Madame Alice Blache, the president of the company, at this time has under advisement.

Speaking of Darwin Karr, she said: "Mr. Karr comes to us with a big reputation. He has been successful. He has had fourteen years' experience as an actor and has been with some of the best Broadway productions, besides having made a name for himself in motion picturedom. I am satisfied that he will assist materially in the plans I am making to have Solax on the lips of every exhibitor and exchange-man. I am confident that Solax is now synonymous with 'profit and pleasure' in the lexicon of the moving picture man. I am not trying to be boastful. You just watch."

Mr. Karr is an intelligent artist. He has a way of "putting over" a comedy situation without resorting to time honored methods. In talking about himself, Mr. Karr, who is as modest as he is handsome, said: "I am particularly glad to come to the Solax Company. They are putting on the kind of comedy that I like and in which the public can see me to advantage."

Asked how he liked being a photoplay actor, he said: "I believe that pantomime acting is much more difficult than acting on the legitimate stage, particularly comedy. A word or two on the legitimate can bring a laugh, but in acting before the camera words are of no avail. Here the comedian is put to the most exacting test."

The Solax Company has made arrangements with a prominent writer of humorous stories to prepare a number of comedies for production in the near future.

A MOTHER GOOSE SUBJ

The accompanying illustration is taker e second edition of Champion's Mother Goose seri l Decem- ber 4th, under the title "Yankee Dood r Navy."

Scene from "Yankee Doodle and Our Navy" (Cha ion).

This is a split reel of an extraordinary character, for while the subjects are unlike in story, they possess in com on a deep patriotic sentiment which pervades the whole.

CHAMPION RELEASE DATE CHANGED.

In the last issue of the Moving Picture World it w; announced that the release date for the Champion's las Fort Riley Military picture was November 27th. We are no v advised by the Champion Company that this date has been changed to November 20th. Exhibitors and exchange will please note.

"CARRIBOU BILL" IN REPUBLIC FILMS.

Capt. Franklin Cooper, and his team of Siberian wolf-hounds, have been engaged by the Republic Film Co pany for a special subject to be included in their regular re eases during the early part of the coming year. That the Re ub- lic Company should engage the services of such a well-known character as Capt. Cooper, is proof that this company's intentions are to secure the best artists to be had regardless of costs.

"Carribou Bill" In Alaska.

Capt. Cooper enjoys international fame as an arctic explorer and Alaskan gold seeker, while the dog team is that which won the famous $10,000 Nome sweepstakes at Nome, Alaska, last year.

Capt. and Mrs. Cooper, with the wolf-hound team, left Saturday, Nov. 25, for Saranac Lake, New York, and made preparations for the filming of these pictures. The accompanying cut was taken while crossing the frozen trails in Alaska.

AGE LIMIT LAW HITS CONNECTICUT PICTURE MEN.

Under the guise of an amendment of the act to protect children from improper amusements, the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut passed the following age limit law affecting picture theaters at its last convention:

> Section 1360 of the general statutes is hereby amended to read as follows: Any person owning, keeping, or managing, wholly or in part, any dance house, concert saloon, roller skating rink, theater, moving picture show or phonograph hall, or any museum having entertainments or variety shows connected therewith, who shall allow, at any time, any child under the age of fourteen years, or after six o'clock p. m. of any day, any boy under the age of fourteen or any girl under the age of sixteen years, to be admitted to or remain in such place, unless such child is accompanied by its parent or guardian or some adult person authorized by such parent or guardian to attend such child, shall be fined not more than fifty dollars.
> Approved July 13, 1911.

The authorities have commenced to enforce its provisions and the picture theater men now realize that someone slipped something over on them. H. H. Jennings, an exhibitor of Hartford, Conn., says that an attempt was made to get the picture men together to oppose the passage of the law, or to have it properly modified, but that it was impossible at that time to get them to act in concert. The present situation is the result.

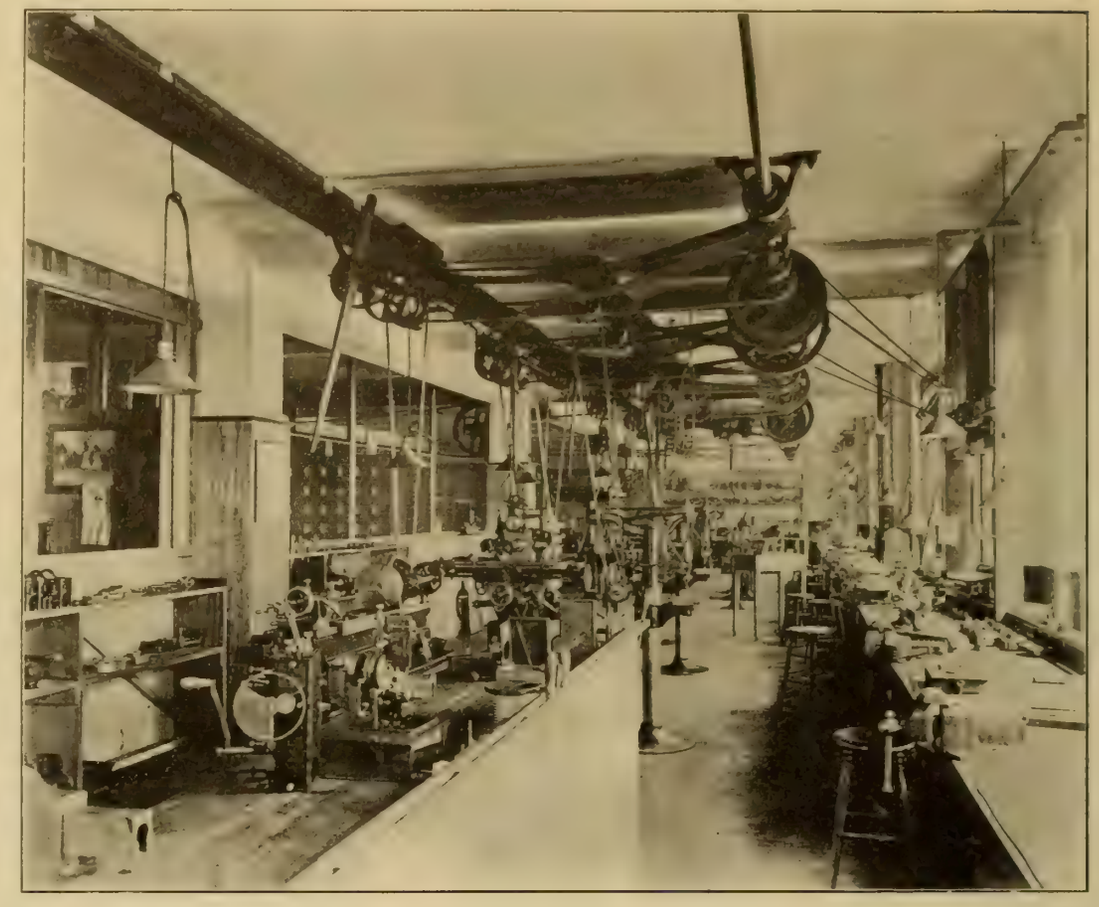
View of New Extension to Simplex Projecting Machine Co.'s Factory



Probably the most accurate barometer of any line of business is the activity of the machine shops. Judging, then, from the volume of business being done by the manufacturers of projecting machines, the motion picture business is largely on the increase. Although the summer was dull, all the machine factories are now working to full capacity and the newest of them all, the Simplex factory, has had to increase its working facilities three times since it began to make deliveries. The accompanying picture shows the latest extension to the Simplex factory and Manager Frank J. Cannock says that if orders continue to come in at the rate they have been doing, a further extension will be necessary by the first of next year.

The recent trip abroad of Mr. Richard Hollaman has been productive of good results and the London agency is taking no small portion of the output. The Simplex machine has found its way into Canada, as far as South America and, even into South Africa and Australia. It certainly speaks well for the stability of the business when a high priced machine can command such a large sale in such a short space of time. While the Simplex was regarded as a perfect piece of mechanism before it was put upon the market, the test of actual usage has developed certain points where it can be improved and the machines as they now leave the factory are guaranteed to give the greatest satisfaction not only as to the quality of the picture produced, but as to the wearing qualities of the machine itself.

The Moving Picture World has in preparation a full descriptive article pertaining to the Simplex which will be published at an early date.

PHOTOPLAYERS MARRY.

"There are just as good fish in the sea as ever were caught" is an old proverb often quoted for the comfort of the lovelorn. It assumes that the male and female of the species, as Kipling would say, inhabit a great sea. It is usually assumed that either the man or the woman catch their mates from this sea, thus bringing them from an unnatural element to a natural element. Few women have the experience of literally drawing a husband from the waters, but this novel experience belongs to Miss Mary Land, leading woman with the premier "Seven Days" company for the last two seasons.

Miss Land is quite an athlete and an expert swimmer. While she was temporarily a member of the Lubin Stock company in Philadelphia she met Mr. Howard M. Mitchell, who is a member of that company. They were both playing in a picture entitled "On the Road to Happiness," in which Mr. Mitchell was supposed to be drowning and was rescued by Miss Land. The friendship thus formed soon ripened into love and on April 22nd of this year they slipped away to Jersey City and were married. They kept the wedding secret for a long while and it has only very recently become known even to their most intimate friends.

H. McGeary, formerly manager of Capt. Ament's three theaters at Meridian, Miss., has bought the Lyric Theater at Knoxville, Tenn., and opened a five-cent photoplay house, using the Independent Film service. The house seats 200, but Hustling Mac has let a contract for an extension and the lowering of the floor, which will give an additional 200 seats.

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS WANT CLEAN PICTURES.

At the regular meeting of the Moving Picture League of America, Cleveland Local, held November 8th, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the Moving Picture League of America, Cleveland Local No. 1, does not approve of any exhibitor showing the picture of the Johnson-Jeffries fight, or any other objectionable pictures.

That it is the object of this League, to keep the standard of the motion picture theaters on a level with the most refined, moral and educating places of amusement.

L. H. WILK, Secretary.

MILES AFTER AUTOMOBILE RACE PICTURES.

Herbert L. Miles, of the Republic Film Company, and a staff of cameramen, left New York Nov. 21, for Savannah, Ga., where motion pictures will be made of the Savannah Automobile Races. Mr. Miles expects to expose about 6,000 feet of negative, which will be boiled down to one reel. His experience in picturing events of this character is sufficient guarantee that the picture will be full of thrills. Special attention will be paid to the thrill features of the event and a real lively automobile picture may be expected. Mrs. Miles accompanied her husband on this trip.

In Newton, N. J., the moving picture machines make such a drain on the local power plant that there is no current left for street illumination. The citizens held a meeting and decided that rather than give up their favorite amusement they would be willing to go home in the dark. The sale of lanterns in Newton is the greatest in the history of the town.
